

---

ANNALS

OF

THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

---

SEVENTEENTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

---

THE
DEBATES AND PROCEEDINGS
IN THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES; WITH AN APPENDIX, CONTAINING IMPORTANT STATE PAPERS AND PUBLIC DOCUMENTS, AND ALL
THE LAWS OF A PUBLIC NATURE; WITH A COPIOUS INDEX.

SEVENTEENTH CONGRESS.—SECOND SESSION:
COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM DECEMBER 2, 1822, TO MARCH 3, 1823, INCLUSIVE.

---

COMPILED FROM AUTHENTIC MATERIALS.

---

WASHINGTON: .

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY GALES AND SEATON.

.....
1855.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF

THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

AT THE SECOND SESSION OF THE SEVENTEENTH CONGRESS, BEGUN AT THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, MONDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1822.

MONDAY, December 2, 1822.

The Second Session of the Seventeenth Congress commenced this day at the City of Washington, conformably to the Constitution of the United States, and the Senate assembled.

PRESENT :

DAVID L. MORRIL, and JOHN F. PARROTT, from New Hampshire.

JAMES LLOYD, from Massachusetts.

NEHEMIAH R. KNIGHT, from Rhode Island.

ELIJAH BOARDMAN, and JAMES LANMAN, from Connecticut.

WILLIAM A. PALMER, and HORATIO SEYMOUR, from Vermont.

RUFUS KING, and MARTIN VAN BUREN, from New York.

MAHLON DICKERSON, from New Jersey.

WILLIAM FINDLAY, and WALTER LOWRIE, from Pennsylvania.

CESAR A. RODNEY, and NICHOLAS VAN DYKE, from Delaware.

JAMES BARBOUR, and JAMES PLEASANTS, jr., from Virginia.

NATHANIEL MACON, from North Carolina.

JOHN GAILLARD, and WILLIAM SMITH, from South Carolina.

RICHARD M. JOHNSON, and ISHAM TALBOT, from Kentucky.

JOHN H. EATON, and JOHN WILLIAMS, from Tennessee.

ETHAN ALLEN BROWN, and BENJAMIN RUGLES, from Ohio.

JAMES BROWN, and HENRY JOHNSON, from Louisiana.

JAMES NOBLE, and WALLER TAYLOR, from Indiana.

DAVID HOLMES, and THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, from Mississippi.

NINIAN EDWARDS, from Illinois.

JOHN CHANDLER, and JOHN HOLMES, from Maine.

DAVID BARTON, from Missouri.

JOHN GAILLARD, President, pro tempore, resumed the Chair.

JAMES LLOYD, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of HARRISON GRAY OTIS, produced his credentials, was qualified, and he took his seat in the Senate.

A quorum of the members being present, a message was, on motion of Mr. BARBOUR, sent to the House of Representatives, announcing the fact, and the readiness of the Senate to proceed to business.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, a committee was appointed to join the Committee of the House of Representatives to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that the two Houses are ready to receive any communication from him; and Mr. KING, of New York, and Mr. MACON, were appointed; and the Senate then adjourned.

TUESDAY, December 3.

DANIEL D. TOMPKINS, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, attended.

Mr. KING, of New York, reported, from the joint committee, that they had waited on the President of the United States, and that the President of the United States informed the committee that he would make a communication to the two Houses this day.

Mr. LANMAN submitted a proposition for the appointment of two Chaplains, to interchange weekly between the two Houses of Congress.

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary of War, made in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, of the 29th of April last, requiring a statement of the number of persons placed upon the pension list, up to the 4th of September, 1822, by virtue of the acts of the 18th March, 1818, and 1st of May, 1820; and the report was read, as follows :

WAR DEPARTMENT, Dec. 2, 1822.

SIR : In obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 29th of April last, requiring from this Department, at the present session of Congress, a report of the number of persons placed upon the pension list up to the 4th of September, 1822, by virtue of the acts of the 18th of March, 1818, and 1st of May, 1820, I have the honor to transmit, herewith, a statement containing the number aforesaid, distinguishing between those who enlisted to serve during the war, and those for different periods, stating the number of each, and the time served, and the number of the officers who receive twenty dollars per month.

SENATE.

President's Annual Message.

DECEMBER, 1822.

I have the honor to be, &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

To the Hon. the PRESIDENT of the Senate.

The following is the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates, petty officers, seamen, and marines, on the United States pension list on the 4th September, 1822, under the laws of the 18th of March, 1818, and 1st of May, 1820, who enlisted to serve to the end of the war, with the length of their service:

Officers who served seven years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	57
Officers who served six years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	66
Officers who served five years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	15
Officers who served four years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	8
Officers who served three years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	5
Officers who served two years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	5
Officers who served one year, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	9
Officers who served nine months, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	1

Total number of officers - - - - - 166

Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served seven years - - - - -	536
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served six years - - - - -	1,302
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served five years - - - - -	380
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served four years - - - - -	145
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served three years - - - - -	584
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served two years - - - - -	291
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served one year - - - - -	102
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served nine months - - - - -	22

Total number of non-commissioned officers, &c. 3,362

The following is the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates, petty officers, seamen, and marines, on the United States pension list on the 4th of September, 1822, under the laws of the 18th of March, 1818, and 1st of May, 1820, who did not enlist to serve to the end of the war, with the length of their service:

Officers who served six years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	3
Officers who served five years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	13

Officers who served four years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	26
Officers who served three years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	79
Officers who served two years, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	88
Officers who served one year, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	168
Officers who served nine months, at twenty dollars per month - - - - -	23

Total number of officers - - - - - 400

Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served six years - - - - -	4
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served five years - - - - -	85
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served four years - - - - -	309
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served three years - - - - -	3,513
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served two years - - - - -	928
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served one year - - - - -	2,750
Non-commissioned officers, &c., who served nine months - - - - -	814

Total number of non-commissioned officers, &c. 8,403

RECAPITULATION.

Number of officers who served to the end of the war - - - - -	166
Number of officers who did not serve to the end of the war - - - - -	400
Number of non-commissioned officers, &c., who served to the end of the war - - - - -	3,362
Number of non-commissioned officers, &c., who did not serve to the end of the war - - - - -	8,403
Total number - - - - -	12,331

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

After adopting several orders connected with the despatch of business—

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Many causes unite to make our present meeting peculiarly interesting to our constituents. The operation of our laws on the various subjects to which they apply, with the amendments which they occasionally require, imposes, annually, an important duty on the representatives of a free people. Our system has happily advanced to such maturity, that I am not aware that your cares, in that respect, will be augmented. Other causes exist which are highly interesting to the whole civilized world, and to no portion of it more so, in certain views, than to the United States. Of these causes, and of their bearing on the interests of our Union, I shall communicate the sentiments which I have formed with that freedom which a sense of duty dictates. It is proper, however, to invite your attention, in the first instance, to those concerns respecting which Legislative provision is thought to be particularly urgent.

DECEMBER, 1822.

President's Annual Message.

SENATE.

On the 24th of June last, a Convention of Navigation and Commerce was concluded, in this city, between the United States and France, by Ministers duly authorized for the purpose. The sanction of the Executive having been given to this convention under a conviction that, taking all its stipulations into view, it rested essentially on a basis of reciprocal and equal advantage, I deemed it my duty, in compliance with the authority vested in the Executive by the second section of the act of the last session, of the 6th May, concerning navigation, to suspend, by proclamation, until the end of the next session of Congress, the operation of the act, entitled "An act to impose a new tonnage duty on French ships and vessels, and for other purposes," and to suspend, likewise, all other duties on French vessels, or the goods imported in them, which exceeded the duties on American vessels, and on similar goods imported in them. I shall submit this convention forthwith to the Senate for its advice and consent as to the ratification.

Since your last session, the prohibition which had been imposed on the commerce between the United States and the British colonies, in the West Indies and on this continent, has likewise been removed. Satisfactory evidence having been adduced that the ports of those colonies had been opened to the vessels of the United States by an act of the British Parliament, bearing date on the 24th of June last, on the conditions specified therein, I deemed it proper, in compliance with the provision of the first section of the act of the last session above recited, to declare, by proclamation, bearing date on the 24th of August last, that the ports of the United States should thenceforward, and until the end of the next session of Congress, be open to the vessels of Great Britain employed in that trade, under the limitation specified in that proclamation.

A doubt was entertained whether the act of Congress applied to the British colonies on this continent, as well as to those in the West Indies; but, as the act of Parliament opened the intercourse equally with both, and it was the manifest intention of Congress, as well as the obvious policy of the United States, that the provisions of the act of Parliament should be met, in equal extent, on the part of the United States, and as also the act of Congress was supposed to vest in the President some discretion in the execution of it, I thought it advisable to give it a corresponding construction.

Should the constitutional sanction of the Senate be given to the ratification of the Convention with France, Legislative provisions will be necessary to carry it fully into effect, as it likewise will be to continue in force, on such conditions as may be deemed just and proper, the intercourse which has been opened between the United States and the British colonies. Every light in the possession of the Executive, will, in due time, be communicated on both subjects.

Resting essentially on a basis of reciprocal and equal advantage, it has been the object of the Executive, in transactions with other Powers, to meet the propositions of each with a liberal spirit, believing that thereby the interest of our country would be most effectually promoted. This course has been systematically pursued in the late occurrences with France and Great Britain, and in strict accord with the views of the Legislature. A confident hope is entertained, that, by the arrangement thus commenced with each, all differences respecting navigation and commerce with the dominions in question, will be adjusted, and a solid foundation be laid for an active and permanent intercourse, which will prove equally advantageous to both parties.

The decision of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, on the question submitted to him by the United States and Great Britain, concerning the construction of the first Article of the Treaty of Ghent, has been received. A Convention has since been concluded, between the parties, under the mediation of His Imperial Majesty, to prescribe the mode by which that article shall be carried into effect, in conformity with that decision. I shall submit this Convention to the Senate for its advice and consent, as to the ratification, and, if obtained, shall immediately bring the subject before Congress, for such provisions as may require the interposition of the Legislature.

In compliance with the act of the last session, a territorial government has been established in Florida, on the principles of our system. By this act, the inhabitants are secured in the full enjoyment of their rights and liberties, and to admission into the Union, with equal participation in the government with the original States, on the conditions heretofore prescribed to other territories. By a clause in the ninth Article of the Treaty with Spain, by which that Territory was ceded to the United States, it is stipulated that satisfaction shall be made for the injuries, if any, which, by process of law, shall be established to have been suffered, by the Spanish officers, and individual Spanish inhabitants, by the late operations of our troops, in Florida. No provision having yet been made, to carry that stipulation into effect, it is submitted to the consideration of Congress, whether it will not be proper to vest the competent power, in the district court at Pensacola, or in some tribunal, to be specially organized for the purpose.

The fiscal operations of the year have been more successful than had been anticipated at the commencement of the last session of Congress.

The receipts into the Treasury during the three first quarters of the year, have exceeded the sum of fourteen millions seven hundred and forty-five thousand dollars. The payments made at the Treasury during the same period have exceeded twelve millions two hundred and seventy-nine thousand dollars; leaving in the Treasury on the 30th day of September last, (including one million one hundred and sixty-eight thousand five hundred and ninety-two dollars and twenty-four cents, which were in the Treasury on the first day of January last) a sum exceeding four millions one hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars.

Besides discharging all demands for the current service of the year, including the interest and reimbursement of the public debt, the six per cent. stock of 1796, amounting to eighty thousand dollars, has been redeemed. It is estimated that, after defraying the current expenses of the present quarter, and redeeming the two millions of six per cent. stock of 1820, there will remain in the Treasury, on the first day of January next, nearly three millions of dollars. It is estimated that the gross amount of duties which have been secured, from the first of January to the 30th of September last, has exceeded nineteen millions five hundred thousand dollars, and the amount for the whole year will probably not fall short of twenty-three millions of dollars.

Of the actual force in service under the present Military Establishment, the posts at which it is stationed, and the condition of each post, a report from the Secretary of War, which is now communicated, will give a distinct idea. By like reports, the state of the Academy at West Point will be seen, as will be the progress which has been made on the fortifications along the coast, and at the National Armories and Arsenal.

SENATE.

President's Annual Message.

DECEMBER, 1822.

The position on the Red River, and that at the Sault of St. Marie, are the only new posts that have been taken. These posts, with those already occupied in the interior, are thought to be well adapted to the protection of our frontiers. All the force, not placed in the garrisons along the coast, and in the ordnance depots, and indispensably necessary there, is placed on the frontiers.

The organization of the several corps composing the army, is such as to admit its expansion to a great extent, in case of emergency, the officers carrying with them all the light which they possess to the new corps, to which they might be appointed.

With the organization of the staff, there is equal cause to be satisfied. By the concentration of every branch, with its chief in this city, in the presence of the Department, and with a grade, in the chief military station, to keep alive and cherish a military spirit, the greatest promptitude in the execution of orders, with the greatest economy and efficiency, are secured. The same view is taken of the Military Academy. Good order is preserved in it, and the youth are well instructed in every science connected with the great objects of the Institution. They are also well trained and disciplined in the practical parts of the profession. It has been always found difficult to control the ardor inseparable from that early age, in such manner as to give it a proper direction. The rights of manhood are too often claimed, prematurely; in pressing which too far, the respect which is due to age, and the obedience necessary to a course of study and instruction, in every such institution, are sometimes lost sight of. The great object to be accomplished is the restraint of that ardor, by such wise regulations and government, as, by directing all the energies of the youthful mind to the attainment of useful knowledge, will keep it within a just subordination, and at the same time elevate it to the highest purposes. This object seems to be essentially obtained in this Institution, and with great advantage to the Union.

The Military Academy forms the basis, in regard to science, on which the Military Establishment rests. It furnishes annually, after due examination, and on the report of the academic staff, many well informed youths to fill the vacancies which occur in the several corps of the army, while others, who retire to private life, carry with them such attainments, as, under the right reserved to the several States to appoint the officers and to train the militia, will enable them, by affording a wider field for selection, to promote the great object of the power vested in Congress, of providing for the organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia. Thus, by the mutual and harmonious co-operation of the two Governments, in the execution of a power divided between them, an object always to be cherished, the attainment of a great result, on which our liberties may depend, cannot fail to be secured. I have to add, that, in proportion as our regular force is small, should the instruction and discipline of the militia, the great resource on which we rely, be pushed to the utmost extent that circumstances will admit.

A report from the Secretary of the Navy will communicate the progress which has been made in the construction of vessels of war, with other interesting details respecting the actual state of the affairs of that department. It has been found necessary for the protection of our commerce, to maintain the usual squadrons on the Mediterranean, the Pacific, and along the Atlantic coast, extending the cruises of the latter into the West Indies, where piracy, organized into a system, has preyed on the commerce of every country trading thither. A cruise has also been maintained on the coast of Africa, when the season would permit, for the suppression of the slave trade; and orders have been given to the commanders of all our public ships to seize our own vessels, should they find any engaged in that trade, and to bring them in for adjudication.

In the West Indies piracy is of recent date, which may explain the cause why other Powers have not combined against it. By the documents communicated, it will be seen that the efforts of the United States to suppress it, have had a very salutary effect. The benevolent provision of the act, under which the protection has been extended alike to the commerce of other nations, cannot fail to be duly appreciated by them.

In compliance with the act of the last session, entitled "An act to abolish the United States' Trading Establishments," agents were immediately appointed, and instructed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to close the business of the trading houses among the Indian tribes, and to settle the accounts of the factors and sub-factors engaged in that trade, and to execute, in all other respects, the injunctions of that act, in the mode prescribed therein. A final report of their proceedings shall be communicated to Congress as soon as it is received.

It is with great regret I have to state that a serious malady has deprived us of many valuable citizens at Pensacola, and checked the progress of some of those arrangements which are important to the territory. This effect has been sensibly felt in respect to the Indians who inhabit that territory, consisting of the remnants of several tribes, who occupy the middle ground between St. Augustine and Pensacola, with extensive claims, but undefined boundaries. Although peace is preserved with those Indians, yet their position and claims tend essentially to interrupt the intercourse between the eastern and western parts of the territory, on which our inhabitants are principally settled. It is essential to the growth and prosperity of the territory, as well as to the interests of the Union, that these Indians should be removed, by special compact with them, to some other position, or concentrated within narrower limits where they are. With the limited means in the power of the Executive, instructions were given to the Governor to accomplish this object, so far as it might be practicable, which was prevented by the distressing malady referred to. To carry it fully into effect, in either mode, additional funds will be necessary, to the provision of which the powers of Congress alone are competent. With a view to such provision as may be deemed proper, the subject is submitted to your consideration, and, in the interim, further proceedings are suspended.

It appearing that so much of the act entitled "An act regulating the staff of the Army," which passed on the 14th April, 1818, as relates to the Commissa-

DECEMBER, 1822.

President's Annual Message.

SENATE.

riat, will expire in April next, and the practical operation of that department having evinced its great utility, the propriety of its renewal is submitted to your consideration.

The view which has been taken of the probable productiveness of the lead mines, connected with the importance of the material to the public defence, makes it expedient that they should be managed with peculiar care. It is therefore suggested whether it will not comport with the public interest to provide by law for the appointment of an agent skilled in mineralogy, to superintend them, under the direction of the proper department.

It is understood that the Cumberland road, which was constructed at a great expense, has already suffered from the want of that regular superintendence, and of those repairs, which are indispensable to the preservation of such a work. This road is of incalculable advantage, in facilitating the intercourse between the Western and the Atlantic States. Through it, the whole country from the northern extremity of Lake Erie to the Mississippi, and from all the waters which empty into each, finds an easy and direct communication to the seat of Government, and thence to the Atlantic. The facility which it affords to all military and commercial operations, and also to those of the Post Office Department, cannot be estimated too highly. This great work is likewise an ornament and an honor to the nation. Believing that a competent power to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement has not been granted to Congress, but that such a power, confined to great national purposes, and with proper limitations, would be productive of eminent advantage to our Union, I have thought it advisable that an amendment of the Constitution, to that effect, should be recommended to the several States. A bill which assumed the right to adopt and execute such a system having been presented for my signature, at the last session, I was compelled, from the view which I had taken of the powers of the General Government, to negative it, on which occasion I thought it proper to communicate the sentiments which I had formed, on mature consideration, on the whole subject. To that communication, in all the views in which the great interest to which it relates, may be supposed to merit your attention, I have now to refer. Should Congress, however, deem it improper to recommend such an amendment, they have, according to my judgment, the right to keep the road in repair, by providing for the superintendence of it, and appropriating the money necessary for repairs. Surely, if they had the right to appropriate money to make the road, they have a right to appropriate it to preserve the road from ruin. From the exercise of this power no danger is to be apprehended. Under our happy system, the people are the sole and exclusive fountain of power. Each government originates from them, and to them alone, each to its proper constituents, are they respectively and solely responsible, for the faithful discharge of their duties, within their constitutional limits. And that the people will confine their public agents, of every station, to the strict line of their constitutional duties, there is no cause to doubt. Having, however, communicated my sentiments to Congress, at the last session, fully, in the document to which I have referred, respecting the right of appropriation, as distinct from the right of jurisdiction and sovereignty over the territory in question, I deem it improper to enlarge on the subject here.

From the best information that I have been able to obtain, it appears that our manufactures, though depressed immediately after the peace, have considerably increased, and are still increasing, under the encouragement given them by the tariff of 1816, and by subsequent laws. Satisfied I am, whatever may be the abstract doctrine in favor of unrestricted commerce, provided all nations would concur in it, and it was not liable to be interrupted by war, which has never occurred, and cannot be expected, that there are other strong reasons applicable to our situation, and relations with other countries, which impose on us the obligation to cherish and sustain our manufactures. Satisfied, however, I likewise am, that the interest of every part of our Union, even of those most benefited by manufactures, requires that this subject should be touched with the greatest caution, and a critical knowledge of the effect to be produced by the slightest change. On full consideration of the subject, in all its relations, I am persuaded that a further augmentation may now be made of the duties on certain foreign articles, in favor of our own, and without affecting, injuriously, any other interest. For more precise details, I refer you to the communications which were made to Congress during the last session.

So great was the amount of accounts for moneys advanced during the late war, in addition to others of a previous date, which, in the regular operations of the Government, necessarily remained unsettled, that it required a considerable length of time for their adjustment. By a report from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, it appears that on the fourth of March, 1817, the accounts then unsettled amounted to one hundred and three millions sixty-eight thousand eight hundred and seventy-six dollars and forty-one cents, of which, on the 30th of September of the present year, ninety-three millions one hundred and seventy-five thousand three hundred and ninety-six dollars and fifty-six cents had been settled; leaving on that day a balance unsettled of nine millions eight hundred and ninety-three thousand four hundred and seventy-nine dollars and eighty-five cents. That there have been drawn from the Treasury, in paying the public debt, and sustaining the Government in all its operations and disbursements since the 4th of March, 1817, one hundred and fifty-seven millions one hundred and ninety-nine thousand three hundred and eighty dollars and ninety-six cents, the accounts for which have been settled to the amount of one hundred and thirty-seven millions five hundred and one thousand four hundred and fifty one dollars and twelve cents; leaving a balance unsettled of nineteen millions six hundred and ninety-seven thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine dollars and eighty-four cents. For precise details respecting each of these balances, I refer to the report of the Comptroller, and the documents which accompany it.

From this view it appears that our commercial differences with France and Great Britain have been placed in a train of amicable arrangement, on conditions fair and honorable in both instances to each party; that our finances are in a very productive state, our revenue being at present fully competent to all the demands upon it; that our military force is well organized in all its branches, and capable of rendering the most important service, in case of emergency, that its number will admit of; that due progress has been made, under existing appropriations, in the construction of fortifications, and in the operations of the Ordinance Department; that due progress has, in like manner, been made in the construction of ships of war; that our Navy is in the best condition, felt and respected in every sea in which it is employed for the protection of our commerce; that our manufactures have augmented in amount and improved in quality; that great progress has been made in the settlement of accounts, and in the recovery of the balances due by individuals; and that the utmost economy is secured and observed in every Department of the Administration.

Other objects will likewise claim your attention; because, from the station which the United States hold as a member of the great community of nations, they have rights to maintain, duties to perform, and dangers to encounter.

A strong hope was entertained that peace would ere this have been concluded between Spain and the independent Governments south of the United States in this hemisphere. Long experience having evinced the competency of those Governments to maintain the independence which they had declared, it was presumed that the considerations which induced their recognition by the United States, would have had equal weight with other Powers, and that Spain herself, yielding to those magnanimous feelings of which her history furnishes so many examples, would have terminated, on that basis, a controversy so unavailing, and at the same time so destructive. We still cherish the hope that this result will not long be postponed.

Sustaining our neutral position, and allowing to each party, while the war continues, equal rights, it is incumbent on the United States to claim of each, with equal rigor, the faithful observance of our rights, according to the well-known law of nations. From each, therefore, a like co-operation is expected in the suppression of the piratical practice which has grown out of this war, and of blockades of extensive coasts on both seas, which, considering the small force employed to sustain them, have not the slightest foundation to rest on.

Europe is still unsettled, and although the war long menaced between Russia and Turkey has not broken out, there is no certainty that the differences between those Powers will be amicably adjusted. It is impossible to look to the oppressions of the country, respecting which those differences arose, without being deeply affected. The mention of Greece fills the mind with the most exalted sentiments, and arouses in our bosoms the best feelings of which our nature is susceptible. Superior skill and refinement in the arts, heroic gallantry in action, disinterested patriotism, enthusiastic zeal and devotion in favor of public liberty, are associated with our recollections of ancient Greece. That such a country should have been overwhelmed, and so long hidden, as it were, from the world, under a gloomy despotism, has been a cause of unceasing and deep regret to generous minds for ages past. It was natural, therefore, that the reappearance of these people in their original character, contending in favor of their liberties, should produce that great excitement and sympathy in their favor, which have been so signally displayed throughout the United States. A strong hope is entertained that these people will recover their independence, and resume their equal station among the nations of the earth.

A great effort has been made in Spain and Portugal to improve the condition of the people, and it must be very consoling, to all benevolent minds, to see the extraordinary moderation with which it has been conducted. That it may promote the happiness of both nations, is the ardent wish of this whole people, to the expression of which we confine ourselves; for, whatever may be the feelings or sentiments which every individual under our Government has a right to indulge and express, it is, nevertheless, a sacred maxim, equally with the Government and people, that the destiny of every independent nation, in what relates to such improvements, of right belongs, and ought to be left, exclusively to themselves.

Whether we reason from the late wars, or from those menacing symptoms which now appear in Europe, it is manifest that, if a convulsion should take place in any of those countries, it will proceed from causes which have no existence, and are utterly unknown in these States, in which there is but one order, that of the people, to whom the sovereignty exclusively belongs. Should war break out in any of those countries, who can foretell the extent to which it may be carried, or the desolation which it may spread? Exempt as we are from these causes, our internal tranquillity is secure; and, distant as we are from the troubled scene, and faithful to first principles, in regard to other Powers, we might reasonably presume that we should not be molested by them. This, however, ought not to be calculated on as certain. Unprovoked injuries are often inflicted, and even the peculiar felicity of our situation might, with some, be a cause for excitement and aggression. The history of the late wars in Europe furnishes a complete demonstration that no system of conduct, however correct in principle, can protect neutral Powers from injury from any party; that a defenceless position, and distinguished love of peace, are the surest invitations to war; and that there is no way to avoid it, other than by being always prepared, and willing, for just cause, to meet it. If there be a people on earth whose more especial duty it is to be at all times prepared to defend the rights with which they are blessed, and to surpass all others in sustaining the necessary burdens, and in submitting to sacrifices to make such preparations, it is undoubtedly the people of these States.

When we see that a civil war, of the most frightful character, rages from the Adriatic to the Black Sea; that strong symptoms of war appear in other parts, proceeding from causes which, should it break out, may become general, and be of long duration; that the war still continues between Spain and the Independent Governments, her late provinces, in this hemisphere; that it is likewise menaced between Portugal and Brazil, in consequence of the attempt of the latter to dismember itself from the former; and that a system of piracy, of great extent, is maintained in the neighboring seas, which will require equal vigilance and decision to suppress it, the reasons for sustaining the attitude which we now hold, and for pushing forward all our measures of defence with the utmost vigor, appear to me to acquire new force.

The United States owe to the world a great example, and, by means thereof, to the cause of liberty and humanity, a generous support. They have so far succeeded, to the satisfaction of the virtuous and enlightened of every country. There is no reason to doubt that their whole movement will be regulated by a sacred regard to principle, all our institutions being founded on that basis. The ability to support our own cause, under any trial to which it may be exposed, is the great point on which the public solicitude rests. It has been often charged against free Governments, that they have neither the foresight nor the virtue to provide, at the proper season, for great emergencies; that their course is improvident and expensive; that war will always find them unprepared, and whatever may be its calamities, that its terrible warnings will be disregarded and forgotten as soon as peace returns. I have full confidence that this charge, so far as relates to the United States, will be shown to be utterly destitute of truth.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Standing Committees.

SENATE.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3, 1822.

The Message and accompanying documents were read, and three thousand copies thereof ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. VAN BUREN presented the memorial of Ebenezer Stevens and others, praying that Congress would afford them relief on account of a demand against the United States, arising out of certain contracts entered into with Robert Morris, Esq., for the supply of provisions to the Army of the United States during the Revolutionary war; the memorial was read, and laid on the table.

WEDNESDAY, December 4.

NICHOLAS WARE, from the State of Georgia, attended.

The several orders respecting Chaplains, messengers, newspapers, &c., proposed yesterday, were concurred in.

Mr. NOBLE proposed a resolution to proceed, on Friday next, to the election of a Chaplain, which proposition lies on the table until to-morrow.

THURSDAY, December 5.

JESSE B. THOMAS, from the State of Illinois, attended.

The Senate adopted a resolution to proceed on Monday next to the appointment of its standing committees.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, gave notice that he should, on Monday next, ask leave to introduce a bill to abolish imprisonment for debt.

Mr. BARTON gave notice, that he should, on Monday next, ask leave to bring in a bill concerning the lands to be granted to the State of Missouri for the purposes of education, and other public uses.

The Senate then adjourned to Monday next.

MONDAY, December 9.

SAMUEL L. SOUTHARD, from the State of New Jersey, arrived on the sixth instant, and attended this day.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of William Thornton, stating that he took out a patent, on the 16th of January, 1809, for certain improvements, including particularly a boiler; praying a renewal thereof, it never having as yet produced him any advantages whatever; the petition was read, and laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. PLEASANTS, the Senate proceeded to the election of a Chaplain, and on counting the ballots, they stood as follows:

For the Rev. CHARLES MCILVAINE - - 23
Rev. JOHN BRICE - - - 9

Mr. MCILVAINE, having received a majority of the whole number of votes, was accordingly elected.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate, of the 8th of May last, requesting "information relative to the Copper Mines on the southern shore of Lake Superior; their number, value, and position; the names of the Indian tribes who claim them; the practicability of extinguishing their titles; and the probable advantages which may result to the Republic from the acquisition, and working these mines;" I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of War, which comprises the information desired in the resolution referred to.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, December 7, 1822.

The Message and accompanying report were read.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of a number of merchants, and others, of the city of Richmond, in Virginia, praying Congress to cause to be erected, within that collection district, a hospital for the relief of sick and disabled seamen; the petition was read; and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. VAN BUREN presented the petition of James Byers, of the city and State of New York, who was a contractor for supplying rations to the troops of the United States, within the States of Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, for one year, from the first of June, 1814, praying relief in the settlement of his accounts, for reasons stated in the petition; which was read; and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DICKERSON submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed, who, with three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by that House, shall have the direction of the money appropriated to the purchase of books and maps for the use of the two Houses of Congress.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

The Senate then, according to the order of the day, proceeded to the appointment (by ballot, agreeably to the practice of the Senate,) of the standing committees; and they were successively appointed, as follows:

On Foreign Relations—Messrs. BARBOUR, BROWN, of Louisiana, MACON, KING, of New York, ELLIOTT.

On Finance—Messrs. LOWRIE, HOLMES, of Maine, VAN BUREN, EATON, MACON.

On Commerce and Manufactures—Messrs. DICKERSON, RUGGLES, D'WOLF, FINDLAY, LANMAN.

On Military Affairs—Messrs. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, CHANDLER, TAYLOR, JOHNSON, of Kentucky, ELLIOTT.

On the Militia—Messrs. NOBLE, SEYMOUR, STOKES, LANMAN, CHANDLER.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1822.

On Naval Affairs—Messrs. PLEASANTS, WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, PARROTT, WARE, LLOYD, of Massachusetts.

On the Public Lands—Messrs. VAN DYKE, THOMAS, LOWRIE, EATON, BENTON.

On Indian Affairs—Messrs. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, JOHNSON, of Kentucky, HOLMES, of Mississippi, KING, of Alabama, BENTON.

On Claims—Messrs. RUGGLES, BOARDMAN, VAN DYKE, BARTON, MORRIL.

On the Judiciary—Messrs. SMITH, SOUTHARD, VAN BUREN, HOLMES, of Maine, BROWN, of Ohio.

On the Post Office and Post Roads—Messrs. PALMER, STOKES, BARTON, CHANDLER, KING, of Alabama.

On Pensions—Messrs. NOBLE, SEYMOUR, EATON, WARE, ELLIOTT.

On the District of Columbia—Messrs. BARBOUR, LLOYD, of Maryland, D'WOLF, SOUTHARD, LANMAN.

On the Contingent Expenses of the Senate—Messrs. MACON, LOWRIE, LANMAN.

TUESDAY, December 10.

ELIJAH H. MILLS, from the State of Massachusetts; and, also, THOMAS H. BENTON, from the State of Missouri, severally attended this day.

Mr. PLEASANTS called up the petition, heretofore presented, of Joseph Janney, praying compensation for buildings, and other property, destroyed by the enemy during the late war with Great Britain, in consequence of the occupancy thereof by the militia; and the petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, gave notice that to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce a bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to lands within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, presented the memorial of Edward De Kraft, praying the aid of Congress to a proposed publication, comprising a selection of public documents. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KNIGHT called up the petition, presented at the last session of Congress, of Jacob Babbitt, merchant, of the port of Bristol, in the State of Rhode Island, praying the remission of duties on a large quantity of sugar, which was totally destroyed by the great storm on the 23d of September, 1815, as stated in the petition; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BARTON presented the petition of a number of the citizens of Lillard and Ray counties, in the State of Missouri, praying the division of the present Howard Land District, and the establishment of an additional land office; the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PARROTT gave notice that to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the purchase of a number of copies of the sixth volume of the Laws of the United States.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, called up the petition, presented at the last session of Congress, of Walley and Foster, praying the benefit of drawback on pepper, exported. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

Recent information of the multiplied outrages and depredations which have been committed on our seamen and commerce, by the pirates, in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico, exemplified by the death of a very meritorious officer, seems to call for some prompt and decisive measures on the part of the Government. All the public vessels adapted to that service, which can be spared from other indispensable duties, are already employed in it; but, from the knowledge which has been acquired of the places from whence these outlaws issue, and to which they escape from danger, it appears that it will require a particular kind of force, capable of pursuing them into the shallow waters to which they retire, effectually to suppress them. I submit to the consideration of the Senate the propriety of organizing such force for that important object.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, December 9, 1822.

The Message was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The following Message was also received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, of the 22d February last, "requesting the President of the United States to cause to be collected and communicated to the Senate, at the commencement of the next session of Congress the best information which he may be able to obtain, relative to certain Christian Indians, and the lands intended for their benefit, on the Muskingum, in the State of Ohio, granted under an act of Congress of June 1st, 1790, to the Society of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen; showing, as correctly as possible, the advance or decline of said Indians in numbers, morals, and intellectual endowments; whether the lands have inured to their sole benefit, and if not, to whom, in whole or in part, have such benefits accrued;" I transmit a report from the Secretary of War, with the accompanying documents.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, December 9, 1822.

The Message and accompanying documents were read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution for the appointment of a joint committee on the arrangements for the Library of Congress; and, having agreed thereto, Messrs. DICKERSON, ELLIOTT, and MILLS, were appointed the committee on the part of the Senate.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

I now transmit to both Houses of Congress, the report of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, made in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, passed the 28th day of January, 1818.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

JAMES MONROE.

DECEMBER 10, 1822.

The Message and accompanying report were read, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARTON submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making further provisions, by law, regulating the leasing and working of the lead mines of the United States.

Agreeably to notice, Mr. BARTON asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill concerning the lands granted to the State of Missouri for the purpose of education and other public uses. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

On motion by Mr. VAN BUREN, the petition of Ebenezer Stevens and others, praying the adjustment of their claim against the United States, presented on the 3d instant, was referred to the Committee of Claims.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Agreeably to notice, Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, having obtained leave, introduced a bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, by the courts of the United States; and the bill was twice read by general consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, said, that, in pursuance of notice given on a former occasion, he would now ask leave to introduce a bill to abolish imprisonment for debt. He was prepared to have presented it yesterday, but he did not wish to interrupt the course of business then before the Senate. He did not intend, now, to make many remarks on this motion, reserving to himself the privilege of investigating the subject more fully, when its merits should be more properly before the Senate. He was happy to learn, he said, that he should have assistance in his exertions from some honorable members, whilst he expected opposition from others. The subject had been before Congress two or three sessions previous, and the uniform result had been favorable reports from select committees, to whom it had been referred, without any final decision, for the want of time. He hoped, at the present session, the measure would be adopted or decisively rejected. Mr. J. said, he was actuated by several considerations in making this motion. The most important was a thorough conviction of the propriety of the measure. Another inducement was, that it accorded with the sentiments of the State which he had the honor in part to represent. The Kentucky Legislature had already adopted the measure; and though her relief measures had produced some discontent with distant journals, still this part of her system had met with something like general approbation, so far as he could ascertain public sentiment. He had no doubt time would prove the justice, and wisdom of her whole system, but in relation to this particular branch of it, (he meant the abolishing of imprisonment for debt,) it gave her claims to as much honor and glory as any one act of her administration since her admission into the Union. Mr. J. said he was anxious to see this system adopted by Congress, and extended to every branch of the Federal Judiciary, that the liberty of the citizen might be secure, and the public confidence increase in that branch of the General Government. He believed that the right of the States to exercise such a power had not been questioned. In fact, it had been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Sturgis vs. Crowninshield, that a State had the right to pass laws releasing the body of the debtor from imprisonment.

Mr. KING, of New York, here suggested whether it was in order to enter into a discussion of the merits of the bill in this stage of its progress.

Mr. JOHNSON replied that he had intended merely to submit a few introductory general views of the subject. If, however, his remarks were unacceptable to the Senate, or uninteresting to the gentleman from New York, he would give way to any other business—he would give way to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KING felt certainly no indisposition to hear the remarks of Mr. J., but he thought them not strictly in order.

Mr. JOHNSON said he would proceed, as nothing else appeared to claim the attention of the Senate. He was about to remark upon the operation of the system in Kentucky; and the difficulties that had arisen there from the emanation of the ca. sa. from the Federal Judiciary, the law of that State to the contrary notwithstanding. Very early after the organization of the Federal Government, Congress had adopted the execution laws of each State, to be the rule of government for its courts, located in the several States. The execution laws of the several States were widely different. During the late troubles in Kentucky it was made a question, what was the intention of Congress in relation to this subject? Whether it was intended to recognise the execution laws then in force, and make them like the laws of the Medes and Persians, irrevocable; or to recognise and conform to the systems of the different States, as they should be modified. Although a diversity of opinion existed among the most eminent counsel of the State, the Federal Court in Kentucky had decided that the execution laws of the State, as modified, were to control the Federal Court process. He believed this a correct decision. Since the passage of the law abolishing imprisonment for debt, application had been made to the Federal Court in Kentucky for the ca. sa. The court refused to grant it, and an appeal had been taken to the Supreme Court. After this decision of the court, that the body of the debtor could not be taken, he was surprised to find that instances had occurred in which the clerk of the court had issued the ca. sa., and it had been executed by the deputy marshal. Mr. J. was convinced, from the information he had received, that this procedure had taken place in consequence of some misunderstanding as to the extent of the opinion of the court; and he hoped the practice would conform to the statutes of the States, until the ultimate decision of the Supreme Court, or until it could be ascertained whether Congress would expressly, by law, abolish imprisonment for debt; or whether they would modify the law and make it more definite and precise. He was happy to believe that public sentiment was in favor of this measure; and he conceived this sentiment to be something like an instruction to Congress. He was happy to find that the Governor of South Carolina, in his excellent message, had recommended this subject to the consideration of the Legislature of that State.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Mr. J. concluded, by expressing a hope that, in offering these brief views, he had not trespassed on the rules of the Senate. The remarks he had offered were not for the pleasure of talking, but were drawn from him by a sense of duty—believing that the importance of the subject demanded the early attention of Congress.

WEDNESDAY, December 11.

JAMES D'WOLF, from the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, attended this day.

Mr. TALBOT submitted the following motions for consideration:

Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the repairs, preservation, and superintendence of the national road from Cumberland to Wheeling, be referred to a select committee, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Resolved, That that part of the President's Message which recommends the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall vest in the Congress thereof, powers adequate to the adoption and carrying into effect a system of internal improvements throughout the Union, be referred to a select committee to consider and report thereon.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the tenth instant, for instructing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the expediency of making further provisions, by law, regulating the leasing and working the lead mines of the United States, and agreed thereto.

On motion, by Mr. LOWRICE, the Message from the President of the United States, together with the accompanying report of the Secretary of War, on the number, value, and position, of the copper mines, on the southern shore of Lake Superior, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, to consider and report thereon.

Agreeably to notice given, Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to lands within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

The bill concerning the lands to be granted to the State of Missouri for the purposes of education, and for other purposes, was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to lay before the Senate a statement, exhibiting the amount, in the aggregate, of the goods, wares, and merchandise, exported from the United States to France, and imported from thence, in each year, from and after the year 1814, to the year 1820; discriminating, in the exports, between articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, and those of foreign countries; and, also, stating the national character of the vessels in which such exports and imports have been made.

THURSDAY, December 12.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of Rebecca Hodgson, widow and representative of Joseph Hodgson, deceased, praying the payment of interest on a sum allowed to her. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion, by Mr. BARBOUR, so much of the Message of the President of the United States as respects our relations with foreign nations, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, called up the petition of John M. Whitney, and John Snodgrass, in behalf of the legal representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased, praying that a law may be passed, directing a warrant to be issued to them for a quantity of land, in the State of Mississippi, as an indemnity for a like quantity of their land improperly disposed of by the register and receiver of the land office west of Pearl river; and the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the petition of Daniel Seward, stating that he purchased a tract of land of the United States, lying in the State of Ohio, and that a part thereof hath been taken from him by judicial process, and praying a reimbursement of the money paid for such part, together with the amount of his costs, and other expenses, in defending the same; the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RODNEY submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into the expediency of continuing in force the act, entitled "An act to protect the commerce of the United States, and to punish the crime of piracy;" and, also, of making such further provisions on the subject as may be deemed proper for the security of our citizens, the safety of our commerce, and the punishment of the offence.

The PRESIDENT communicated the petition of Alexander and Sylvester Humphrey, praying indemnification for damages to a wharf, which they had contracted to build for the United States, on Staten Island, as stated in the petition; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. LLOYD, of the 11th instant, requesting certain information relative to exports and imports, to and from France; and the same having been modified, was agreed to, as follows:

DECEMBER, 1822.

Suppression of Piracy.

SENATE.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate a statement, exhibiting the amount, in the aggregate, of the goods, wares, and merchandise, exported from the United States to France, and imported from thence, in each year, from and after the year 1814 to the year 1820; discriminating, in the exports, between articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, and those of foreign countries; and also stating the national character of the vessels in which such exports and imports have been made.

Mr. EATON called up the petition, presented at the last session of Congress, of the executors of the last will and testament of Thomas Carr, of Georgia, deceased, praying compensation for certain land. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. D'WOLF gave notice that he should, on Monday, ask leave to introduce a bill to allow a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States from foreign hemp.

Mr. PARROTT, agreeably to notice which he had previously given, and having obtained leave, introduced a bill to authorize the purchase of five hundred and fifty copies of the sixth volume of the digested Laws of the United States, published by Davis & Force; and the bill was read.

The resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. TALBOT, to refer to a select committee so much of the President's Message as relates to the repair and preservation of the Cumberland Road, was taken up and agreed to; and Messrs. TALBOT, EDWARDS, MILLS, RODNEY, and KING, of New York, were chosen the committee.

The second resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. TALBOT, was also agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BARTON, that part of the President's Message which relates to the lead mines of the United States, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of modifying the Judiciary system of the United States so as to make it uniform throughout the Union, by establishing circuit courts in the new States.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the better security of the public moneys in the hands of clerks of courts and attorneys, marshals, and their deputies.

SUPPRESSION OF PIRACY.

Mr. PLEASANTS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the following bill, which was twice read by general consent:

Be it enacted, &c., That, for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States to afford more efficient protection to the commerce of the United States, from the depredations of pirates in the Gulf of Mexico and the West India seas, the sum of — dollars is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated; which sum shall be used by the President in providing such an additional force as in his judgment shall be best calculated to answer the end aforesaid.

[Accompanying this bill, Mr. PLEASANTS laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy to the Chairman of the Naval Committee, furnishing estimates of the additional force deemed necessary for the suppression of piracy, and the expense thereof. The Secretary, having the concurring opinion of the Navy Board in its favor, recommends an additional force, of

First, 1 steamboat of 90 to 120 tons; to carry two 18 pounders, and two 12 pounders, upon travelling carriages, so as to fire from any part of the vessel. Second, 10 fast sailing schooners, of 45 to 60 tons burden, to draw not more than 5 to 7 feet water; each to be armed with one long 12 or 18 pounder, mounted on a circle, with two 12 pound carronades; with the necessary number of small arms; to row from 20 to 24 sweeps: and, Third, 5 light double bark cutters, each to row 20 oars, and adapted to carry 40 men, well armed with muskets, pistols, boarding pikes, cutlasses, &c.

The whole cost of procuring these additional vessels and of equipping and fitting them for service, is estimated at $44,000.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, and Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, respectively, gave notice that they should ask leave, on Monday, to introduce bills, the former a bill for the relief of George Shannon, and the latter a bill for the relief of Walley and Foster.

MONDAY, December 16.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from JAMES PLEASANTS, notifying the resignation of his seat in the Senate, which was read.

On motion, by Mr. BARBOUR, the President was requested to notify the Executive of the State of Virginia of this resignation.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel H. Walley and Henry G. Foster; and the bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Jacob Babbitt; and the bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Agreeably to notice given, Mr. D'WOLF asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill allowing a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States from foreign hemp; and the bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Agreeably to notice given, Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the benefit of George Shannon. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. RODNEY presented the memorial of Benjamin I. Shain, master of the schooner Ajax, stating that, whilst at the Havana, an unprovoked and murderous outrage and robbery was committed on the person and property of the memorialist and others, and praying the efficient interposition of Government. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FINDLAY presented the petition of Watson Atkinson, praying that the duty on the importation of square iron wire may be reduced to fifteen per centum ad valorem. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, presented the petition of Alexander A. White, of Louisiana, praying the right of pre-emption to a tract of land on which he has settled, and erected improvements. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON also called up the petition of Marie Louise de la Gautrois, widow of François Gonsonlin, deceased, praying the confirmation of her title to a tract of land in Louisiana. The petition was read, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. RODNEY called up the petition, heretofore presented, of Joseph Forrest, of the City of Washington, praying compensation for the loss of a certain schooner, called the William Yeaton, chartered in the month of May, 1812, to the agent of the United States, to take a cargo of provisions from New York to Laguaira, which was seized and condemned by the Spanish Government. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion, by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, a member was added to the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the place of Mr. PLEASANTS; and Mr. MACON was appointed.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Joseph Janney, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. D'WOLF presented the memorial of Stephen T. Northam, and others, of Newport, Rhode Island, merchants and distillers, praying that the duties which accrued and were paid by them for their distillery, whilst its operations were suspended in consequence of the injury sustained by the inundation of the 23d of September, 1815, may be remitted. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 12th instant, for directing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of making further provisions by law for the suppression of piracy, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 12th instant, for instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of modifying the judicial system of the United States, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 12th instant, for instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the better security of public moneys in the hands of clerks of courts, and attorneys, marshals, and their deputies, and agreed thereto.

The bill to enable the holders of the French, British, and Spanish titles to land within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes, was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Amos Nicholls, of the State of Maine, praying compensation for seven months' services as a clerk in the Navy Department, in the years 1818 and 1819. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, laid on the table resolutions, referring, to the appropriate committees, such parts of the President's Message at the opening of the session, as relate, 1st. To the Commercial Intercourse with the British West Indies, &c.; 2d. The Territorial Government of Florida; 3d. To the Finances; 4th. To the Military Establishment, Fortifications, and the Military Academy; 5th. To Naval Affairs; 6th. To Indians; 7th. To Manufactures; and 8th. To the Independent Governments in America south of the United States.

The PRESIDENT communicated the petition of Joshua Clark, of Missouri, alleging that he has been unjustly deprived of his wages, as a mariner, by William Lee, late Consul of the United States at Bordeaux, and praying indemnification. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill to authorize the purchase of a number of copies of the sixth volume of the Laws of the United States, was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MACON presented the petition of A. F. Maeneill, of the State of North Carolina, praying relief in the settlement of his accounts with the Treasury Department. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, gave notice that to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce a bill for the release of Amos Muzzy and Benjamin White from imprisonment.

SUPPRESSION OF PIRACY.

The Senate, according to the order of the day, took up, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill making an appropriation of — dollars "for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States to afford more efficient protection to the commerce of the United States from the depredations of pirates in the Gulf of Mexico and the West India seas, by providing such additional force as in his judgment shall be best calculated to answer that end."

The Senate had made some progress in the consideration of this bill, and had adopted one or two verbal amendments to it, when

The bill which passed the House of Representatives on Friday last, on the same subject, was brought up by the Clerk of that House for the concurrence of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, (who thought it best, before the Senate proceeded further with their own bill, that they should see what course the other House had adopted on this subject,) the Senate laid their own bill on the table, and took up the bill of the House of Representatives.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Suppression of Piracy.

SENATE.

This bill was then twice read, by general consent, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

[The bill of the House of Representatives provides, "That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to purchase or construct a sufficient number of vessels, in addition to those now employed, of such burden and construction as he may deem necessary, and to fit, equip, and man the same for immediate service, for the purpose of repressing piracy, and of affording effectual protection to the citizens and commerce of the United States in the Gulf of Mexico, and the seas and territories adjacent; and that the sum of — dollars be appropriated to meet the expenditure to be incurred as aforesaid, and paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated."]

The bill having been read through—

Mr. BARBOUR rose to move that the bill of the Senate be substituted for that of the House of Representatives, by adopting it as an amendment thereto. He was of opinion that the bill of the Senate was preferable to the other, in the plan which it proposed for adoption. The bill of the other House, he said, appropriated the fund proposed to be applied to the object to specific purposes, leaving no discretion with the Executive in its application; whereas, the bill of the Senate left, as it ought to leave, the appropriation of the money to the President's discretion, without any control or limitation of that sort. In all warlike objects he thought it was consistent with the theory of our Government, to leave the application of money, except in cases of great urgency, to the discretion and judgment of the Executive. Congress could not anticipate the various phases which might arise, and could not judge what might be the most judicious mode of applying the appropriation to attain the object in view. The theory of the Constitution preferred that the means be placed in the hands of the President, who is responsible to the nation for the application of the money and the mode of conducting the defence of the country, or other warlike measures. He, for this reason, thought it expedient to adopt the bill of the Senate in preference to that of the other House. Mr. B. said he had observed that it had been questioned elsewhere, [alluding obviously to the debate which had taken place in the House of Representatives on Friday,] how far the power of the President reached in the punishment of those bucaniers; and although there was perhaps no necessity for introducing in the bill any instructions to the Executive on this point, he had no hesitation in avowing it as his opinion, that pirates might be pursued and seized in a neutral territory. Mr. B. would not say that our officers might go into a neutral territory in search of those outlaws; but he had no doubt, in the heat of pursuit, they might be followed and punished in the territory of a neutral Power. The principle he took to be the same as that which prevailed in municipal regulations. You may not of right go into the grounds of a neighbor to start the chase; but, having started it elsewhere, you may pursue it into your neighbor's limits. Mr. B. did not believe any nation or any authority would feel itself aggrieved by having those freebooters pursued within its jurisdiction for punishment, or could so far sympathize with such atrocious beings as not to rejoice in their extermination—beings who were hostes humani generis—who bore the mark of Cain upon their foreheads—whose hand was raised against every man—who, therefore, deserved death at every man's hand, and whom it was just and proper to exterminate wherever they could be found. He concluded, by hoping the Senate would agree to his motion to take its own bill in preference to that of the other House.

Mr. CHANDLER thought it of importance to act with the greatest degree of promptitude on this subject; that as he did not see any material difference between the two bills, and the adoption of the Senate's bill in preference to the other would produce a delay of at least one day, (as it would be necessary to send the substitute to the other House for concurrence,) he should vote against the amendment.

Mr. BROWN, of Louisiana, could not perceive between the two bills any essential difference. One contained a simple appropriation authorizing the President to build or purchase additional vessels to put down piracy; the other appropriated the money, leaving the details of its application with the Executive. There was in this, no difference sufficient to justify delay, and he should regret to see any created by an unnecessary amendment.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, recited the provisions of the two bills to show that there was no substantial difference between them; and he thought it was hardly worth while to send the bill back to the House of Representatives for the trifling difference in form which existed. The President would have the same powers substantially, in one case, as the other, and would no doubt, under either, adopt the course he should think best to accomplish the object in view.

Mr. BARBOUR remarked that he had intended to express to the Senate his willingness, if it should be deemed necessary, to insert a clause in the bill authorizing the Executive to pursue the bucaniers whithersoever they might fly; because he believed it would be right and lawful to do so; but he did not know that such an instruction was necessary. He proceeded further to justify his preference of the bill of the Senate to that from the other House; he believed there was a substantial and material difference between them, rendering the one more expedient than the other, and asked if four-and-twenty hours could be so important a delay as to induce the Senate to adopt an exceptionable bill merely to save that much time? In one of those bills the President was peremptorily directed to build or purchase additional vessels, and if it should appear to the President that the object could be arrived at more promptly by any other course, he would not be permitted to depart from the strict regulations of the law. By the bill of the Senate all the power was conferred on the Executive, without limiting him as to the mode by which he might afford additional protection to our commerce against the pirates. This being, in his view, an important difference—the difference between specific and general powers—he hoped the Senate would adopt their own bill, instead of the one under consideration.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, rejoined, that the House bill could mean nothing different from what was intended by the Senate's bill. The former authorized the President to procure additional naval force—the latter could mean only the same thing, unless, indeed, it was thought practicable for the President to send the Army or the militia out against the pirates; but as it was not probable the Executive would think of ordering either the Army or the militia out on this service, the bill of the Senate could authorize nothing else than naval force, though it did not expressly say so. The House bill merely specified what the Senate's bill intended, and could only produce; and as it would save time to pass the former, he hoped the amendment would not be agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. BARBOUR's motion to substitute the Senate's bill for that of the other House, and was decided in the negative—ayes 15, noes 22.

The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading by general consent; and

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, it was read a third time, without objection, passed, nem. con. and returned to the other House.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act relating to the ransom of American captives of the late war,'" a bill, entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands, held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effect of such copies;" a bill, entitled "An act to repeal the third section of the act, entitled 'An act supplementary to an act, entitled 'An act concerning navigation,'" and, also, a bill, entitled "An act authorizing an additional naval force for the suppression of piracy;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said four bills were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

TUESDAY, December 17.

SAMUEL SMITH, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Maryland, in place of WILLIAM PINKNEY, deceased, produced his credentials, and he took his seat in the Senate.

MONTFORT STOKES, from the State of North Carolina; and, also, WILLIAM R. KING, from this State of Alabama, severally attended this day.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, presented the petition of Joseph Emerson, in behalf of himself and others, praying indemnification for the loss of a vessel and cargo, captured and condemned in the year 1796, under a decree of the French Government, in violation of the laws of nations and the terms of the treaty between the United States and France. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of John Byers, accompanied by a report. The bill and report were read, and the bill passed to the second reading.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of John M. Whitney and John Snodgrass, in behalf of the legal representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Nicholas Ware and William A. Carr, executors of Thomas Carr, deceased, made a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others. The report and bill were read, and the bill passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motions of the 16th instant, for referring to various committees the Message of the President of the United States, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Joseph Janney, of Virginia; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The bill entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act relating to the ransom of American captives of the late war,'" was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effect of such copies," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill entitled "An act to repeal the third section of the act entitled 'An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act concerning navigation,'" was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MILLS called up the petition, heretofore presented, of Samuel F. Hooker, of New York, praying compensation for certain naval supplies; and, also, another petition of the said petitioner, praying indemnification for property captured by the British during the late war, which capture was occasioned by his vessel having received supplies intended for the American Army at Fort George. The petitions were severally read, and respectively referred to the Committee of Claims.

Agreeably to notice given, Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the release of Amos Muzzy and Benjamin White, from imprisonment. The bill was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 18.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the State of Tennessee to sell, on such terms as the Legislature of said State may think proper, all the vacant land lying east and north of the line described in the first section of the act of Congress, passed the 18th April, 1806, entitled "An act to authorize the State of Tennessee to issue grants and perfect titles to certain lands therein described, and to settle the claims to the vacant and unappropriated lands within the State of Tennessee."

Mr. WARE submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Military Committee inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the final settlement of the militia claims of the State of Georgia, for services rendered, under orders of the President of the United States, during the years 1792, 1793, and 1794.

Mr. LOWRIE presented the petition of Richard O'Brien, praying that his accounts, as Consul General at Algiers, may be settled upon principles of equity and justice, with a reference to the customs and usages in the Barbary States. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill concerning the lands to be granted to the State of Missouri, for the purposes of education, and for other public uses, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That a standing committee of five members be appointed on the subject of Roads and Canals.

On motion by Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands, held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effect of such copies," were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill allowing a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States, from foreign hemp, was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

The bill for the relief of Samuel H. Walley and Henry G. Foster was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of Jacob Babbitt was read the second time.

The bill for the benefit of George Shannon was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of George Shannon, of Lexington, Kentucky, praying an increase of pension. The petition was read, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. BARBOUR gave notice that to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce a bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia.

The bill for the relief of John Byers was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others, was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased, was read the second time.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, presented the memorial of William Pearce, and others, inhabitants of the town of Gloucester, in the State of Massachusetts, praying the aid of the General Government in the removal of the obstruction to the navigation between Ipswich Bay and Boston Bay. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the State of Alabama three representatives, in conformity with the second section of the act entitled "An act for the apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the fourth census."

THURSDAY, December 19.

Mr. D'WOLF, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to which was referred the bill allowing a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States, from foreign hemp, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, presented the petition of Samuel Hodgson, of the city of Philadelphia, who became, in the year 1804, one of the sureties of John Smith, of the State of Ohio, as contractor for supplying with provisions the United States troops, on or about the Mississippi, praying the interposition of Congress for relief, in the settlement of said Smith's accounts. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. KING, of Alabama, was taken up:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the State of Alabama three Representatives, in conformity with the second section of the act, entitled "An act for the apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the fourth census."

Mr. K. read to the Senate the section referred to, and adverted to the additional return that had been made from Alabama, to show the propriety of the proposed inquiry.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, called up the petition of George Ulmer, presented at the last session of Congress, who had the command of the United States' troops and volunteers at Eastport, in the year 1813, praying compensation for certain ordnance taken from the enemy, as stated in the petition; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to provide for clothing the militia, when called into the service of the United States;" and also a bill, entitled "An act concerning the disbursement of public money;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 18th instant, for instructing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the State of Tennessee to sell certain vacant land, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 18th instant, for instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the final settlement of the militia claims of the State of Georgia, for services rendered under orders of the President of the United States, during the years 1792, 1793, and 1794, and agreed thereto.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Rebecca Hodgson, (who prays that interest may be granted to her, on the long-standing claim which was allowed to her by an act of last session;) and the report was read, and agreed to.

In courtesy to Mr. BARBOUR, (who being in the minority yesterday on the question, of course could not make the motion,) Mr. RUGGLES moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the report of the Committee of Claims, unfavorable to the petition of Joseph Janney was agreed to; and the reconsideration was agreed to, leaving the question open to future decision. [Mr. Janney prays compensation for buildings and other property destroyed by the enemy, during the late war, in consequence of its occupancy by militia.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a national armory on the Western waters.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, called up the petition, heretofore presented, of Robert Purdy, late colonel in the military service of the United States, praying remuneration for certain expenditures incurred by him in performance of his duties in endeavoring to enforce his order prohibiting the introduction of spirituous liquors within the limits of his encampment, as stated in the petition; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill concerning the lands to be granted to the State of Missouri, for the purposes of education and other public uses, was considered in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill for the relief of Jacob Babbitt, of Rhode Island, [to release him four years' interest on two custom-house bonds given for duties on certain sugars destroyed by a storm and inundation in September, 1815, provided he pay the principal of said bonds,] was examined in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Senate took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the relief of Walley and Foster, [authorizing the issue to them of certain certificates of debenture, which are withheld by reason of an accidental legal informality.]

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, explained the circumstances of the case, and the grounds on which the petitioners were entitled to relief; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill for the relief of John Byers was next taken up. [The bill proposes to allow to the petitioner the difference between the par value of monies advanced by the Government, and such as were expended by him in the supply of rations in Connecticut, &c., from June, 1814, to May, 1815, and confining the allowance to the actual loss in exchange.]

On this bill a pretty wide debate took place, embracing the general question of the equity of indemnity for losses incurred in time of war; the circumstances of this particular case to justify its being made an exception to the customary rules, &c. Messrs. RUGGLES, HOLMES of Maine, MORRIS, LANMAN, BROWN of Ohio, BROWN of Louisiana, VAN BUREN, and CHANDLER, took part in the debate. But, before any question was taken on it, the bill was laid over to Monday, for the purpose of having the report of the committee printed.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of James Lloyd, of Virginia, praying compensation for certain services rendered, and expenses incurred, in testing the utility of an inflammable liquid, of which he was the inventor, and the knowledge of which he had been induced to surrender to Government. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be directed to lay before the Senate the reports of the commissioners appointed under the different acts of Congress providing for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Orleans and State of Louisiana.

MECHANICS' BANK OF ALEXANDRIA.

Mr. BARBOUR, agreeably to the notice he had given, asked leave to introduce a bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria.

In answer to a remark which had dropped from some gentleman, Mr. BARBOUR stated succinctly the reasons which had induced him to support this bill at the last session, and which he thought would justify its passage, unless some objections which had been made, in reference to its administration, should be substantiated, in the examination which the committee would doubtless make into the matter. The other banks of the District

DECEMBER, 1822.

Roads and Canals.

SENATE.

had been continued, by renewals, to the period when the existing charter of the United States Bank should terminate. Mr. B. himself had proposed that particular period for them, because the whole subject would then come up together, and those who followed, in the guidance of public affairs, would be able to determine, by the lights which experience should then have shed on the subject, whether those institutions had been conducive to the public weal or not, and decide on all that Congress have authorized at the same time. Amongst the rest of them, he thought the Mechanics' Bank ought to be extended to the common term, if no facts should be disclosed to forbid it.

The leave being granted, the bill was read the first time, and the second time pro forma; and, on motion of Mr. BARBOUR, was then referred to the District Committee.

ROADS AND CANALS.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. BROWN, of Ohio:

Resolved, That a standing committee of five members be appointed on the subject of Roads and Canals.

Mr. BROWN proposed to modify his resolution, so as to make it one of the standing rules of the Senate, to appoint at the commencement of every session a standing committee on the subject of Roads and Canals. He adverted to the increasing interest, as well as the importance of internal improvements, particularly to the interior of the Republic, which was rapidly settling and filling up, to justify that subject being now considered one of the great interests of the nation, and, as such, entitled to a regular standing committee for it.

Mr. KING, of New York, questioned the expediency of ingrafting this unsettled subject on the standing rules of the Senate, although it might be very proper to create, from time to time, a committee on it. He was therefore averse to the modification.

Mr. BROWN would not press the change which he had proposed, as it seemed to be not entirely acceptable to the Senate, and would content himself with the resolution, as originally proposed, except so far as to insert the word select for "standing" committee; which alteration was agreed to; and in that shape the resolution was adopted.

FRIDAY, December 20.

The following engrossed bills, ordered yesterday to be read a third time, were severally read a third time, passed, and sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence, viz: A bill concerning the lands to be granted to the State of Missouri for the purposes of education, and other public uses; a bill for the relief of Walley and Foster; and a bill for the relief of Jacob Babbitt.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 19th instant, requiring the Commissioner of the General Land Office to lay before the Senate the reports of the commissioners appointed under the acts of Congress providing for the adjustment of land claims in the late Territory of Orleans and State of Louisiana, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of Joseph Janney; and it was ordered to lie on the table.

The two bills brought up yesterday for concurrence were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 19th instant, for instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of erecting a national armory on the Western waters, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others; and, on motion, by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill allowing a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States from foreign hemp; and the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Ebenezer Stevens, and others, which was read.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased, passed through a Committee of the Whole, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Senate then proceeded to the appointment of a committee on the subject of roads and canals, in pursuance of the resolution adopted yesterday, and Messrs. BROWN of Ohio, KING of New York, SMITH of Maryland, JOHNSON of Kentucky, and ROONEY, were appointed.

Mr. TALBOT, from the select committee appointed on that subject, reported a bill making an appropriation (in blank) for repairing the national road from Cumberland to Wheeling; the bill was read.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, in submitting the following resolution, observed that the information it proposed to call for was necessary to enable the Committee on Military Affairs to proceed understandingly in the inquiry which they were instructed to make into the expediency of establishing an armory on the Western waters; and, as it was desirable to enable the committee to commence that inquiry as early as practicable, he deemed it proper to submit the resolution, which he now laid on the table:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate the number of arms required annually to supply the militia of the West, according to the acts of Congress, the probable number necessary to be placed in the military depositories located or to be located on the Western waters; the cost of transportation of arms to the Western States and depositories; the probable cost of manufacturing arms in the West; the probable cost of erecting, at this time on the Western waters, such an armory as that at Harper's Ferry or at Springfield; and such other information as he may deem important to establish the expediency or in expediency of erecting a National Armory.

SENATE.

John Byers.

DECEMBER 1822.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of William Sayles;" and, also, a bill, entitled "An act to repeal part of an act passed by the State of Maryland in the year 1784, and now in force in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, entitled 'An act for an addition to Georgetown, in Montgomery county;'" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said two bills were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

Adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 23.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Robert Purdy, made a report, accompanied with a bill for the relief of Robert Purdy; and the report and bill were read, and the bill passed to the second reading.

Mr. LANMAN presented the petition of Frederick Pearl, praying a pension, agreeably to the provisions of the act of 1818. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOWRIE presented the petition of John Welsh, a Revolutionary soldier, praying that his name may be restored to the pension roll; and, also, the petition of George Byers, a soldier of the Revolution, praying a pension, agreeably to the act of 1818. The petitions were read, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the petition of Thomas Haley, a soldier of the Revolution, praying a pension. The petition was read, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, presented the petition of Richard S. Chappell, praying compensation for certain supplies furnished the Army of the United States. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, presented the petition of James Shackelford, and others, praying the pre-emption to a quarter section of land, for public uses, in the county of Perry, in the State of Alabama; and, also, the petition of Jacob Lindsay, and others, citizens of Marengo county, in the State of Alabama, praying the right of pre-emption to a quarter section of land, for the purpose of erecting thereon a courthouse and prison. The petitions were read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office.

Mr. NOBLE submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the select committee on roads and canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of modifying the act of Congress, entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioners to lay out the road therein mentioned," in such manner that the road named in the said act shall be laid out through Columbus, Indianapolis, and Vandalia, the seats of government of the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; and to inquire, also, into the expediency of making a further appropriation for the purpose of completing the location of said road.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Alexander and Sylvester Humphrey. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

On motion of Mr. BARTON, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Richard O'Brien, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, the 20th instant, for information relative to the expediency or in expediency of erecting, on the Western waters, a National Armory, and agreed thereto.

The bill entitled "An act to provide for clothing the militia when called into the service of the United States," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Militia.

The bill entitled "An act concerning the disbursement of public money," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill entitled "An act for the relief of William Sayles," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill entitled "An act to repeal part of an act passed by the State of Maryland, in the year 1784, and now in force in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, entitled 'An act for an addition to Georgetown, in Montgomery county,'" was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill for the relief of Ebenezer Stevens, and others, was read the second time.

The bill appropriating moneys for the purpose of repairing the national road from Cumberland to Wheeling was read the second time.

The Senate resumed as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill allowing a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States from foreign hemp; and, on motion by Mr. BARBOUR, it was laid on the table.

JOHN BYERS.

The Senate then again proceeded to the consideration of the bill for the relief of John Byers, on which a debate arose, that continued nearly two hours, and in which a large number of gentlemen joined. The debate turned on the principles heretofore stated, and on the particular facts of this case, to justify or to controvert the propriety of granting the petitioner indemnity for the

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

depreciation of the funds furnished him by the Government during the late war, for the purchase of provisions, which indemnity he claims under an alleged promise of the then Secretary of War.

After several unsuccessful motions to amend the bill and to recommit it, the bill was ordered to lie on the table; and

Mr. CHANDLER submitted a motion (in pursuance of the suggestions he had made as to the proper mode to be adopted in the case, and intended as a substitute for the bill) "directing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of John Byers, forrations furnished the troops of the United States in Connecticut and Rhode Island, from the first day of June, 1814, to the 31st of May, 1815, inclusive, according to such contract or agreement as did exist between the Secretary of War and said John Byers, prior to furnishing such rations."

The resolution lies on the table with the bill.

TUESDAY, December 24.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the petition of Joshua Russell, of Tyler county, Virginia, praying to be confirmed in his title to a half section of land, in Ohio. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, presented the memorial of William Patterson, and others, merchants of the city of Baltimore, praying indemnification for certain vessels sunk in the harbor of that place during the late war with Great Britain. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. MILLS presented the petition of Ebenezer Oliver, and others, of the State of Massachusetts, praying indemnity for a quantity of land, their claim to which they released to the United States on the conditions contained in the act "providing for the indemnification of certain claimants," and the acts supplementary thereto, being deprived of the benefits thereof in consequence of the misconstruction of the commissioners respecting their claims. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Amos Nichols. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate such information as he may possess, of the commercial relations which now exist between the United States and the present Government of St. Domingo; what is the political condition of the island; whether any European nation pretends to claim the government of the island; and whether any further commercial relations with the existing Government would be consistent with the interest and safety of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, gave notice that, at the next sitting of the Senate, he should ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of John Buhler.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill for the benefit of George Shannon, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to repeal part of an act passed by the State of Maryland, in the year 1784, and now in force in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, entitled "An act for an addition to Georgetown, in Montgomery county," reported the same without amendment.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, transmitting, in obedience to the resolution of the Senate, the reports of the commissioners appointed under the different acts of Congress providing for the adjustment of land claims in the late Territory of Orleans, and State of Louisiana. The letter and report were read.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of yesterday, for instructing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the expediency of extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of yesterday, for instructing the Committee on the subject of Roads and Canals to inquire into the expediency of modifying the act to authorize the appointment of commissioners to lay out a certain road, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of yesterday, relative to the settlement of the accounts of John Byers; and it was laid on the table.

The bill for the relief of Robert Purdy was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of Alexander Humphrey and Sylvester Humphrey was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased, which had previously been reported correctly engrossed, was read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of John Byers. The bill was amended, on motion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, so as to confine the indemnity to the depreciation of Treasury notes advanced by the Government to the petitioner; and the question was then, without further debate, taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and was decided in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Boardman, D'Wolf, Eaton, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, King of New York, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Mills, Morril, Noble, Parrott, Ruggles, Smith of Maryland, Talbot, Van Buren—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Chandler, Dickerson, Findlay, Holmes of Mississippi, King of Alabama, Macon, Palmer, Southard, Stokes, Taylor, Ware, Williams of Missouri, Williams of Tennessee—17.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate communicated a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting his annual report of the state of the public finances, which was read.

Also, from the same Department, the annual report of the operations of the Mint, which was read.

DRAWBACK ON CORDAGE.

The Senate took up, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to allow a drawback on home-manufactured cordage from foreign hemp.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, observed that as the gentleman who introduced this bill (Mr. D'WOLF) had intimated that it was the commencement of a system of measures, which Mr. L. conceived was of great importance to the commerce and revenue of the nation, he hoped the gentleman would favor the Senate with the views he entertained and the reasons which demanded the adoption of the measure. Mr. L. suggested, however, the propriety of postponing the further consideration of the subject until Friday, when the Senate would be more full than at present.

Mr. D'WOLF made a few general remarks on the subject of the bill, (reserving himself for a future occasion) and then moved the postponement of the bill to Friday; which was agreed to.

Adjourned to Friday.

FRIDAY, December 27.

Mr. LANMAN presented the petition of Samuel Peters, stating that he has become the purchaser of the claim of the late Captain Carver, to a large body of land at the Falls of St. Anthony, and praying that his title may be confirmed. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of Samuel N. Smallwood, and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying an amendment to the laws of the District, so far as to give effect to the judgments rendered therein, in any State or Territory. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARBOUR also presented the memorial of the President and Directors of the Fire Insurance Company of Alexandria, praying that the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria may not be extended, or renewed, except on the conditions therein stated. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SEYMOUR presented the petition of Samuel Buel, of Burlington, praying relief in the settlement of his accounts, as collector of the customs for the district of Vermont. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, fifteen hundred copies of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the state of the finances, communicated on the 24th instant, were ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. RODNEY submitted the following resolution for consideration, which was read:

Resolved, That there be added to the rules for conducting business in the Senate the following rule:

"No private bill shall originate in the Senate, after the close of the present session, from the person or persons interested therein, without the unanimous consent of the members present.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Daniel Seward. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effect of such copies," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of William Sayles," also reported it without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of John Buhler; and it passed to the second reading.

The bill for the relief of John Byers was read a third time; and, on motion by Mr. VAN DYKE, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 24th instant, requesting information relative to the present Government of St. Domingo, and agreed thereto.

The bill for the relief of Amos Nichols was read the second time.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to make perpetual an act, passed the 3d day of March, 1817, entitled 'An act to continue in force an act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, passed the 3d day of March, 1815, and for other purposes,'" and, also a bill, entitled "An act concerning the apportionment of Representatives in the State of Alabama;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said two bills were read, and passed to the second reading.

On motion, the bill, entitled "An act concerning the apportionment of Representatives in the State of Alabama," was read the second time by unanimous consent.

DRAWBACK ON CORDAGE.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill allowing a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States from foreign hemp.

Mr. D'WOLF rose, and offered the following remarks:

I have made some calculations, Mr. President, as to the good effects of this bill; but, before I go into the consideration of its merits, I am desirous to understand more about the objections to it. I am desirous first, if I can, to obviate those objections; for, although the measure is full of merits, yet, unless the objections be removed, I despair of success. I recollect when the subject was before the Senate at the last session, the principal objections to it were, "that it would endanger the revenue, by domestic hemp being used, and the drawback obtained from it; and that the money taken from the Treasury for the payment of the drawback, would so far impoverish it." Although the bill strongly guarded the objection, yet gentlemen seemed to be apprehensive that there would be great inducements to obtain the drawback on cordage made of hemp of domestic growth. I assume the ground that it makes no difference to the revenue, whether the cordage which obtains the drawback be made of domestic or foreign hemp, provided the quantity of domestic hemp be not equal to the consumption of the country; for, admitting there should be men so vile as wantonly to be guilty of perjury, when they have no possible interest to advance by it, (for the hemp of domestic growth will cost as much as foreign, if it be as good,) still the one may as well be made use of to obtain the drawback as the other; for if the domestic is used, and obtains the drawback, the foreign will take its place for consumption, and consequently nothing is lost to the revenue. The consumption is not lessened, and all must agree that the consumption of imports is the measure of the revenue. I allow all that is consumed by the warring elements; by fire, by the seas, and by tempest; but I ask that you will not allow your Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate his revenue, by counting on that which is not consumed, by reckoning on bonds taken on the surplus imports; for that which does not go away, and takes the drawback, remains over, and is in the way of his next year's importation; it may as well have gone out of the country, and have taken the drawback, as to have remained in the warehouses of the merchants. Had this surplus been exported, it would have been far better for you; for the vessel which took it away would have returned with another cargo, better suited to your consumption, have given you as much revenue as you paid out in drawback, and the surplus exported would have been out of the way, and left the market to your fresh imports of the same article the next season. For the merchant does not import, nor does the consumer make use of an article merely for the sake of filling your Treasury. When the home production of hemp shall exceed the consumption, and you find your exporters of cordage obtaining more for drawback than you receive for duties on imported hemp, then, indeed, it may be time to repeal your drawback law. If this was a bill to grant drawback on goods manufactured of foreign cotton, to the amount of the duties received on the raw material, then the objection would be a serious one. Such a law would require all the vigilance of your custom-house officers. But this is not the case I have to meet. It is well known that the domestic growth of the article of hemp does not near equal the consumption. I am quite sure it would not be extravagant to say, that we import forty-nine fiftieths of the hemp we consume. The small quantity of growth in this country can offer no inducement to evade the law; and if any should be found so base, still we should be safe, for it would cause no diminution of the quantity consumed; that imported would take the place of the domestic thus exported, and the duties on the imported would make good to the revenue what the domestic took away in drawback. If the distillers and sugar refiners were to manufacture all the sugar and molasses produced in Louisiana, export it, and receive the drawback, still the Treasury would not suffer, if the consumption was not lessened; the tempest would sweep away as much, and people would consume as much as if there were no allowance of drawback on exportation. This is a position founded in common sense, and one from which I think I cannot be driven.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Drawback on Cordage.

SENATE.

I recollect that the gentleman from Kentucky expressed a wish, at the last session, that the word "foreign" were stricken out of the bill. Gentlemen had seemed to think, if the bounty were allowed at all, it should least of all be withheld from the article of our own growth. I believe such an alteration in the terms of the bill would be of no advantage to our growers of hemp, and would embarrass the form of the law. It might become important when the growth exceeded the consumption, because it would then be necessary to see that the amount of drawback paid did not exceed the duties on the imports. I think the growers of hemp cannot complain of the want of encouragement, as the present protection furnished them amounts to about seventy per cent. The duties on foreign hemp being thirty dollars per ton, the freight thirty dollars, and other expenses ten dollars, with this advantage, they could surely compete with the foreign article. I think it has been proved that there could be no loss to the Treasury. If you import one thousand boxes of sugar, and enter it for exportation immediately, still you have got the bond for the duties—and the drawback only cancels those bonds—there is no loss to the Government, in the transaction; there could be no inducement to take the false oath before the collector, because the domestic article, if of good quality, would cost as much as the foreign; no man would perjure himself without some hope of gain by it. I consider this bill as very important; the policy and principles contained in it are not new. It is more than twenty years, I believe, that the drawback has been allowed on rum distilled from foreign molasses. The objects of the system are to encourage labor, increase the exports of the country, and thereby to extend our commerce—all which objects must be advantageous to the revenue. The committee that reported the bill thought it prudent to proceed by inches, and include in it but one article of raw material. If the principle shall be found correct, I can see no good reason for stopping here; this is all I meant in alluding the other day to a system I wished to pursue. I take it for granted that the labor and skill of the people are the means for common wealth, and, of course, for revenue, and that it is proper for Congress to legislate for the promotion of both. It has been my lot to be always with laboring people of many descriptions, and the great object with us has been to keep all hands at work at the most profitable business. To say that we legislate too much, or that too much regulation is improper, is a mere truism; there is no argument in it. I am sensible that when the Legislature do wrong, they had better do nothing—but it does not follow that nothing ought to be attempted, lest we should do wrong. Remember the unprofitable servant who made no improvement of the talent. I contend that this measure will increase the consumption of imports, and consequently will benefit the revenue. The means for revenue are imports; the means for imports are exports; and the means for exports are money. And what are the means for money? If I answer as a speculator, I say my wits; but if as a man of business, I answer hard work; productive labor—and having been always on the Committee of means, (I say nothing about the ways,) my plan is, to adopt measures which will add one cent per day to the productiveness of the labor of all the people of this Republic; which will increase the common wealth $100,000 per day, and give great means for revenue.

SENATE.

Drawback on Cordage.

DECEMBER, 1822.

If we can discover the mode of doing this, the means of revenue will be ample; you may take it from the people in any way you please; you can leave to their own use all you now draw from them, in such a pleasant way. The $100,000 per day would be ample for all the purposes of Government; all your contracts, Cumberland road, and all. But I would, by no means, be understood as wishing to abandon the present mode of collecting revenue; nor would I be so tenacious of it as to lose sight of every thing else. Members of Congress have lately told me, that any measures to give direction to the industry of the people would be putting them under guardianship—that the people wish to pursue their own business in their own way—that they know how to set themselves to work better than Congress can direct them—that they choose to be left free to change their business and pursuits in life as they think proper. I thought this very pretty, superficial talk, and all very good, so far as it goes. I have no disposition, if I could do it, to abridge the liberties of the people; but still I would regulate trade, and leave the people perfectly free to act for themselves under the laws. Nothing, Mr. President, but the restrictive laws would have made me a cotton spinner and weaver. I should as soon have thought of going back to spinning tops again as to spinning cotton, but for the restrictive laws; and it has appeared to me, for several years, that there was about as much necessity for our statesmen to look about them as in those restrictive times. It cannot be said that the people have not given power. Congress has gone all lengths in the exercise of this power—even to stop the whole commerce of the nation, and, with it, the revenue. This was surely giving some direction to that great branch of business which gives direction to all others—at a time, too, when by great and mighty changes from war to peace, we had lost our markets by the restrictions of other nations; though they did not lose their markets with us; we have not met restriction by restriction, but in a very trifling degree. But to return to the subject. I think if I can show practically that the policy, of which this bill is but an item, will add one cent per day to the productiveness of the labor of all the people of this nation, I may render some service. If I succeed in showing it, in relation to fifty thousand people, it may be the beginning of a rule to do so for the whole people. Unproductive labor, or unemployed laborers, are a great loss to the country. If fifty thousand people produce five thousand barrels of flour, or any thing else, for a foreign market, and, when sent there, it produces no more than four thousand would have done, then the one thousand extra might as well not have been produced, as respects the interest of the growers; the labor is completely wasted; one-fifth of the whole fifty thousand people might as well have been idle for all the good they have done. Now I propose, in another way, to create productive labor for five hundred of those ten thousand persons whose labor has been useless. I will call them from their unproductive employment, and set them to work at making ropes; ropes to carry to the Spanish American markets, to furnish means for further imports, which are the sources of revenue. And, by productive labor, these consumers will have increased means to purchase imports. Five hundred persons thus called off from the unproductive business will leave all the profits which formerly accrued to fifty thousand to be divided among the remaining forty-nine thousand five hundred; this will, of course, increase the dividend—that is one item of the gain. Another item is, that the sum of net profits gained by the forty-nine thousand five hundred will be somewhat greater than that produced by the whole fifty thousand; for the five hundred thus taken off will become purchasers of provisions, and make the home market a little better; it may be said that they will not consume more provisions than before, which is very true, but by no means destroys the argument, because their new employment gives them new means, and they become purchasers, which they were not before.

With these two items, I think my one cent nearly gained; the foreign and domestic markets both made better—less to go to the foreign, and more means for the domestic. But if I am charged with extravagance in these two items, I have two answers to the charge. I will show you enough without them, to make good my purpose—to make out my case: and those who deny the strength of the grounds I have taken, may set the other 49,500 idle, or worse than idle, persons at work in some other way. Now, sir, I will show you how to save the one cent per day, by another mode of calculation—I mean the produce of the 500 people, who earned nothing before; I take only the moderate quantity of 1,000 tons of Russian hemp—I must have 200 of the people, all the year round, to manufacture this hemp into cordage, and the remaining 300 to navigate the ships engaged in the trade. The young men of the Eastern States make the best of seamen—the ocean is their mistress—when the other lasses prove unkind, they take to the ocean. I must also have, to carry my plan into execution, 2,000 tons of shipping to bring the hemp, 1,000 to take the cordage to market, making 3,000 tons; and about 4,000 barrels of tar, from the pine woods of my worthy friends from North Carolina; although they say the tar would find a market elsewhere—so it may be said of cotton, and all other articles; but there is something in having a home market; it is always most safe and permanent; the cultivators of the sugar cane, of butter, cheese, and many other things, acknowledge the superiority of the home market. The coasting trade, in carrying the tar, and the people employed in making it, will be benefited a little. But I have support enough, without bringing those trifles into the computation.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Drawback on Cordage.

SENATE.

The manufacturing of 100 tons of hemp, at 30 dollars the ton, is	$30,000
250 tons of cordage, gained in weight by the addition of the tar, at $210 per ton. is	52,500
	<hr/> $82,500

Deduct for 4,000 bbls. tar, at 1½ dollars per barrel	7,500
	<hr/>

Amount from which the manufacturer may pay his 200 people	$75,000
Freight of 1,000 tons of hemp from Russia	30,000
Do. of cordage to Spanish America	20,000
	<hr/> $125,500

These additional means will richly make up any deficiency of the one cent per day for the 49,500, people and more than pay for the labor of the 500.

But, as I am not disposed to give too much to those unprofitable servants, who are for doing nothing these hard times, I take the one cent per day which my measure saves to the 49,500 people, which amounts, per annum to	$154,935
	<hr/>

And charge to the Senate, for not passing the bill at the last session, the whole amount	$280,435
	<hr/>

And this constitutes but one small item of the load of sin of omission which Congress will have to answer for.

Now, gentlemen may say, this is only a visionary scheme, very easy to be shown on paper. But they may rest assured that I am no dealer in visions; they will find something solid in it; and if the bill is not passed, I hope the people will hold up the black catalogue on election day, and call the attention of gentlemen to it, if I cannot. In this calculation, I have said nothing of the profits to be derived by the merchant; I leave them with the lawyers, to take care of themselves.

When Mr. D'WOLF concluded—

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, then rose, and said he would ask the indulgence of the Senate only for a few minutes; he was not entitled, at any time, to claim it for a long period, but still less than common, at present, as he had not intended entering into the discussion of the bill, and was not prepared to do it; but, being absent on public business, he had understood that the honorable gentleman from Rhode Island had expressed a regret at his absence, and, as his friends told him, had thrown a glove upon the floor, which he must take up. This he would therefore do, from an impulse of his nature, which he feared, on many occasions, would manifest that his rashness was only exceeded by his feebleness. He took it up, too, with the more readiness, as it could alone be presented or received in amity. The gentleman from Rhode Island did very little justice to the confidence he reposed in his project, if he supposed he was averse to it. So far from it, he went with him the whole length of what he considered the extent of his views, when he understood him to state, that this was the precursor of a system of measures to encourage the commerce of the country; and, if the bill passed, he meant to extend it to other articles.

Mr. L. said it had been a general, and, in some degree, a popular belief, that the allowance of a drawback on foreign articles exported, was, in fact, an extraction of so much money from the public Treasury; a diminution of the revenue. No idea could possibly be more unfounded and fallacious; so far from it, the most salutary and beneficent feature of the whole commercial and fiscal system of the country was the introduction of the allowance of drawback on exportations of foreign commodities, which had been previously imported. He meant to take up but little of the time of the Senate, but he would briefly state some of its effects.

From the only record to which he could have access,* it would appear that, in a period of ten years, from 1802 to 1812, the whole amount of exports from the United States, was from seven to eight hundred millions of dollars, of which, upwards of three hundred millions of dollars consisted of articles of foreign produce, previously imported into the United States; during which time our tonnage amounted to from eight hundred to a million of tons of shipping, nearly one half of which, or from four to five hundred thousand tons of shipping, were employed in this commerce, resulting exclusively from the allowance of drawbacks; thus giving to our navigation two freights, and the ultimate profit on the adventures; all which was deposited in Europe, and went to the extinction of that portentous balance, which, in the eyes of some political economists, had menaced us with destruction and bankruptcy for the last thirty years; and, without the allowance of which, with our very onerous rate of duties, not one dollar could have been exported; for, although in some years the importation might be less, in some more, yet, on an average of ten years, the importation must, of necessity, without the allowance of drawback, be limited to the actual domestic consumption, and, in consequence, our commerce would have been crippled, our seamen reduced one half, and our revenue been diminished; as, with its allowance, the drawback never being equal to the duty, a residuum is always left in the public treasury.

This prosperous state of things had, indeed, in * Seybert's Statistics.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1822.

considerable degree, ceased; circumstances might, however, bring it back again; and if it returned, or existed at all, it could only exist beneficially.

The allowance of drawback had indeed been the great and fruitful source of our prosperity; from the encouragement it gave to commerce, it built up our cities, gave wealth to our merchants, and embellishment to the interior. He, therefore, warmly advocated the allowance of an extended system of drawback. There was but one difficulty to be guarded against, and he was willing to state that, and to meet it. This was the difficulty in preventing frauds in identifying the articles imported when in a raw state, and when exported in a state of manufacture. It was true, perhaps, that, in some cases, in proportion to the skill and adroitness of the manufacturer of the article, might be the deterioration of the article; that the more glue or starch there was in cotton, the thinner the window glass, or the more tar in the cordage, the worse the fabric, but the greater the profit to the maker. All this might be guarded against in the details of the bill; the objections did not affect the principle; and, if gentlemen thought differently, as the bill had heretofore been unsuccessfully before the Senate, there was one way in which the difficulty could, at any rate, be cured, and he, for one, would readily resort to it; it would be interesting to a very fertile and important part of the country, entitled, for its fertility and its population, to an equal degree of patronage and protection with any other part of the United States. He alluded to the western part of the country; and he would, for his own part, also be willing to allow a bounty on Kentucky hemp, when made into cordage, and exported, to keep pace with the drawback on manufactured foreign hemp. The present state of the agriculture of that country required protection as well as our commerce; nor was he afraid of the effect on the Treasury; the receipts would be abundant; we had now a surplus; our revenue was ample; we were curtailing our establishments, and annually diminishing our public debt; and, although our importations might fall off the next year, they would not materially lessen. There was one cause, not generally taken into view, to prevent it, the operation of which we neither would nor could retard; that was, the annual addition, from the increase of our population, alone, of five hundred thousand human beings to the class of consumers. He said he hoped the bill would pass.

Mr. TALBOT, of Kentucky, then moved to amend the bill, so as to allow a bounty on cordage manufactured from domestic hemp as well as a drawback on that manufactured from foreign hemp.

And, without taking a question on this proposed amendment, the bill was then again ordered to lie on the table.

MONDAY, December 30.

EDWARD LLOYD, from the State of Maryland, attended this day.

JOHN TAYLOR, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Virginia, in place of James Pleasants, resigned, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. RODNEY presented the petition of the President and Directors of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company, praying the aid of the General Government. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. TALBOT submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing a subscription, on behalf of the Government of the United States, of a certain portion of the stock of the Ohio, as well as of the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal Companies, or of any other company which has been incorporated within the United States for the improvement of internal commerce and navigation.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which the subject was referred, made a report, accompanied with a bill for the relief of Joseph Forrest. The report and bill were read, and the bill passed to the second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of James Morrison, of Kentucky, praying relief in the settlement of his accounts. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred, on the 19th instant, the petition of James Lloyd, of Virginia, praying compensation for certain services rendered, and expenses incurred, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred, on the 27th instant, the petition of Samuel N. Smallwood, and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying certain amendments to the laws of the District, reported that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, reported the same, without amendment; and, on motion, by Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, it was taken up, as in Committee of the Whole; and, on his motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next.

The resolution for a new rule for conducting business in the Senate, as it respects private bills, was read the second time; and, on motion by Mr. RODNEY, laid on the table.

Mr. SOUTHARD submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing in force the act, entitled "An act to provide for reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court," passed the third day of March, 1817.

The bill, entitled "An act to make perpetual an act, passed the third day of March, 1817, entitled 'An act to continue in force an act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed third day of March, 1815, and for other purposes," was read the second time; and, on motion by Mr. LOWRIE, referred to the Committee on Finance.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Drawback on Cordage.

SENATE.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House; and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Ebenezer Stevens, and others; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill appropriating moneys for the purpose of repairing the national road from Cumberland to Wheeling; and the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, to-morrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Robert Purdy; and the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Alexander Humphrey and Sylvester Humphrey; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House; and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

DRAWBACK ON CORDAGE.

The Senate then resumed, in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to allow a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured from imported hemp—the amendment proposed on Friday by Mr. TALBOT, to extend the bounty to cordage manufactured from domestic as well as foreign hemp, being the question first in order.

On this proposition to amend the bill, as well as on the bill itself, a debate followed, which occupied about three hours—embracing, besides arguments and views of general policy, numerous commercial details, of which even a condensed sketch would occupy much space. The following was the course of the debate:

Mr. TALBOT submitted the reasons which induced him to offer the amendment; which, however, he was not very anxious for, not being fully aware of all its effects; but with which the bill would be more acceptable to him, and without which he could not vote for it.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, spoke at considerable length against the amendment, as containing a principle new in our system of domestic policy, hazardous and inexpedient, and argued in favor of the bill, as proposing a measure consistent with the course of the Government from its origin, and one which had greatly benefited the enterprise, the private wealth, and public prosperity of the nation.

Mr. DICKERSON, of New Jersey, said, if this bill is to pass, it must be upon general principles, as it is avowed to be but the beginning of a system which shall embrace all articles manufactured of foreign materials. It therefore assumes a degree of importance which otherwise would not belong to it.

My objections to this bill, said he, are not all obviated by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. TALBOT,) to strike out the word "foreign," so as to extend the drawback to cordage manufactured from domestic hemp. The amendment would destroy the principle of the bill, while it would do nothing to promote the growing of hemp in this country. Arguments against the bill will show the inexpediency of the amendment.

This bill has been introduced with the avowed object of promoting the manufactures of this country; and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. LLOYD) is willing also to promote the agriculture of the Western States, by adopting the proposed amendment. So far as this bill, with its amendment, would protect the manufacturing and agricultural interests of the country, it must be by a system of bounties; a system which, as yet, has only been extended to those engaged in the fisheries in the Eastern States. The friends of manufactures in the United States have asked for protection, not bounties. They have asked that the home market should be sacred to them; not that they should be enabled to compete with the foreign manufacturers in foreign markets. They have no great desire to manufacture cordage for our neighbors, of foreign materials, by which a very slight increase of value is given to the raw material—five per cent. perhaps; while we send our cotton across the Atlantic to be manufactured, and bring it back for our own consumption, after it is increased in value five hundred per cent.

The friends of manufactures wish, in the first place, to be so far protected by Congress, as to be enabled to manufacture such articles as we want for our own consumption, and out of materials the produce of our country. How sparingly this protection has been afforded, will appear by an examination of our products. We import, of woolen and cotton goods alone, at the rate of about sixteen millions of dollars a year, and of other articles nine or ten millions; seven-eighths of which we ought to manufacture for ourselves, of domestic materials. And to this circumstance is entirely owing the pecuniary distress of the country. And while we were despairing of being able to afford a remedy for this evil, we are all at once surprised with an offer of protection, by a system of bounties; and this offer, too, from the East. The industry of the Eastern States has long been fostered by a system of bounties extended to their fisheries. To this the middle and manufacturing States have cheerfully contributed. The favor, heretofore, has not been reciprocated, though often asked; but now, it seems, the debt is to be discharged. The gentleman from Massachusetts thinks the prosperous state of our finances will warrant Congress in adopting the system of bounties proposed by the amendment to this bill.

SENATE.

Drawback on Cordage.

DECEMBER, 1822.

But, unfortunately for us, the proposed amendment, however well intended, will not, in the slightest degree, promote the interest of agriculture or manufactures. The gentleman (Mr. D'WOLF) who introduced this bill, informs us that forty-nine fiftieths of all the hemp manufactured or consumed in the United States is imported from Europe; and, for this plain reason, that notwithstanding the duty on foreign hemp, the expense of importation, and other charges, it can still be purchased in our market on better terms, or at a lower price than the domestic hemp. This has long been the case, and will continue to be so, unless we increase the duty on hemp, which does not appear to be any part of the plan of gentlemen who introduced this bill. The gentleman from Kentucky thinks that, by extending the drawback to the cordage made by domestic as well as foreign hemp, it will add to the price of the domestic hemp, and thus promote the agriculture of the Western States. But nothing can be more fallacious. No part of this bounty would ever reach a pound of domestic hemp in consequence of this amendment. The person about to purchase hemp, to be manufactured into cordage, for exportation, would buy that which he could procure on the best terms; that, at present, would be the foreign hemp, by half a cent per pound. No domestic hemp, of course, would be purchased for this purpose. This bill, with its amendment, gives a bounty of a cent per pound to the domestic as well as the foreign hemp. The difference in favor of the foreign hemp would still be the same it was before, that is, half a cent per pound; and of course none of the domestic hemp would be purchased for this manufacture. The bounty, therefore, would not reach the domestic, but would produce an excessive importation of Russia hemp. And, as the conditions required for exportation of cordage for the benefit of drawback, as the quantity to be exported must be at least ten tons, (about the value of fifteen hundred dollars,) and in vessels of not less than sixty tons burden, would frequently not be complied with, large quantities of hemp, imported for exportation, would remain on hand, and glut the domestic market, and thus put an end to produce of domestic hemp; while the whole of the manufacture and exportation of cordage would be confined to a few large capitalists in our seaport towns.

This cannot be considered as a bill for the encouragement of domestic manufactures, because the slight additional value given to the raw material, by the manufacture of cordage, is of no importance when compared with other objects that demand our attention. And it is calculated materially to injure agriculture.

It may, however, be considered as a bill in favor of the shipping interest, and, as such, demands our serious attention. And if it can be made to serve that interest, without prejudice to other important interests, it will be our duty to vote for it.

I must be permitted to believe that the gentleman from Rhode Island greatly overrates the importance of his bill. He charges Congress with $280,000 for having neglected to pass his bill last session. We might, he says, have made and exported a thousand tons of cordage during the last year, for which we should have received one hundred and fifty dollars per ton. This, however, would amount to no more than $150,000. Therefore, our loss could be no more than this sum, if our good friends, the Russians, had given us the hemp, and it had cost nothing to import, manufacture, and export it; but a thousand tons of cordage is about twice the quantity we shall be able to sell in the West Indies and South America.

As the American tonnage is exceeded by that of no nation except Great Britain, it may be assumed as a safe position, that the cordage wanted for our own shipping would be five times as much as we could sell in the West Indies and South America, even if we had the whole market to ourselves, which we never shall have.

I will endeavor to make an estimate of the amount of cordage required for our own shipping, by taking an average of the four years, 1817, 1818, 1819, and 1820. The portion of domestic hemp made use of, being very small, is not taken into the calculation. In those four years we imported, of cables and tarred cordage, 684 tons; and, during the same time, exported 400 tons, upon which a drawback was allowed; leaving 284 tons for our own ships. It appears from this that nearly five-eighths of the whole imported, was afterwards exported for the benefit of drawback. It is believed, however, by those who are acquainted with our commerce and shipping, that a large portion of this cordage, 200 tons at least, thus exported, has been transferred again to our own ships, and appropriated to the rigging of those ships, by which the revenue has been defrauded to the amount of thirteen or fourteen thousand dollars. In the year 1817, the quantity exported exceeded the quantity imported by nearly ten tons. This might have arisen from a surplus of imports the preceding year; affording a just ground to suspect fraud. If we add these 200 tons to the 284 tons, it will make 484 tons of cordage for our own shipping. Deduct 20 per cent. for the tar, and it will leave 366 tons of hemp contained in this cordage.

During the same years, we imported 14,151 tons of hemp; of this, we will suppose one-third part was made use of for other purposes of manufacture than cables and cordage. This will leave 9,434 tons, to which add the 366 tons contained in the imported cordage, and it amounts to 9,797 tons of hemp, for our whole shipping for four years, or 2,449 tons per year. The fifth part of which quantity, 489 tons, or, at most, 500 tons, is as much as we can hope to sell to the people of South America and the West Indies. This, however, is exclusive of about 100 tons a year, which would be fraudulently exported and made use of for rigging our own vessels.

As the hemp of which this cordage is made, is to be paid for, together with charges for importation, manufacture, and exportation; and, as it must be sold at the lowest profit, as otherwise the

DECEMBER, 1822.

Drawback on Cordage.

SENATE.

English will undersell us, the clear profits will be so small, that I shall feel no uneasiness as to my part of the responsibility of having neglected to pass this bill last session.

If it is the true policy of our Government to encourage the manufacture of articles from foreign materials, by an allowance of drawbacks, we are about to begin with the most unfortunate article that could be selected.

Because the manufacture of cordage adds less, than almost any others, to the value of the raw material; because it will discourage agriculture by putting an end to the growth of hemp in the Western country; because it will lead to more abuse and fraud upon the revenue than any other article; and because it will increase our commerce with Russia, which always has been, and always will be, an unfavorable one to this country.

If great frauds now take place in the exportation of cordage under our drawback law, which are strict, what are we to expect under the present bill, which provides no adequate protection for our revenue?

The cordage now imported, must be exported within a year of its importation, to entitle the exporter to the benefit of drawback; and to countries not immediately adjoining the United States; but under this bill no time is prescribed—and the cordage may be landed in the English or Spanish territories, within sight of the United States. The oaths to be taken for the safety of the revenue are of so loose a texture that they may be completely evaded without exposing the exporters to a prosecution for perjury.

In the making of cordage twenty per cent. of tar is made use of, says the gentleman from Rhode Island. I believe more frequently twenty-five per cent., and I think I have seen ropes composed of one-third part tar. The manufacturer will find it his interest to use as much tar as possible in his cordage, because, by this, he will obtain a drawback upon an article which pays no duty.

In the year 1794, a duty of eight cents per pound was laid upon snuff, manufactured for sale, and a drawback equal to the duty granted on such as should be exported to a foreign country; with abundance of oaths, to protect the revenue from fraud.

In 1795, it was discovered, that the apparent gross amount of the duties on this article, amounted to twenty thousand dollars, and that the drawbacks upon the same amounted to twenty-five thousand dollars. Congress then changed their plan, and laid a tax upon snuff mills, and allowed a drawback of six cents per pound upon snuff exported. But the makers of snuff were an overmatch for Congress. They ground up large quantities of the stocks and stems of tobacco, which, under the name of snuff, they exported; and, thus received from the treasury six cents per pound upon an article which cost them about two cents per pound, and which was worth nothing; and, finally, Congress abandoned this snuff business, as a losing concern. If our rope-makers should prove to be as adroit in their business as these ingenious snuff-grinders, we may possibly see ropes made entirely of tar, for the benefit of drawback.

This bill will have a tendency to increase our trade with Russia, which has always been unfavorable to the United States. We import from that country chiefly hemp and iron; articles which we can produce at home, to an unlimited extent; articles, too, for which we should never depend on foreign nations, in peace or war. The importation of these articles for home consumption, would, under any circumstances, be highly prejudicial to this country; but the more so, while the balance of trade with that nation is against us, to an amount of more than twenty millions of dollars, in the last twenty years.

In the year ending the 30th September, 1821,
Our imports from Russia amounted to	$1,852,199
Our exports to Russia of domestic produce and manufacture, to	$127,939
Of foreign produce and manufacture	500,955
	628,844
Leaving against us a balance of	$1,223,305

In fact, Russia wants but little of our produce, and we want none of hers.

The gentleman from Rhode Island professes great anxiety to be doing something for the benefit of the manufactures of this country. I will take the liberty of pointing his attention to subjects of the highest importance, which will afford him an ample field for the exercise of his talents and his practical knowledge.

During the last year, we imported, for domestic consumption, articles to an amount of more than twenty-five millions of dollars, seven-eighths of which we ought to manufacture for ourselves, and from the produce of our country.

Of woollen and cotton goods (value)	$16,000,000
Ardent spirits	3,000,000
Sugars	2,000,000
Russia, Ravens, and Holland duck and sheeting	500,000
White and red lead, ochres and other paints	300,000
Lead in sheets, bars, pigs, and shot	300,000
Cables, cordage, tarred and untarred, and twine	130,000
Hammered bar iron	1,000,000
Other kinds of iron and steel	500,000
Articles of iron and steel, paying ad valorem duties	1,500,000
	$25,230,000

This list might be extended to a variety of other important articles.

When we shall have taken care to manufacture these articles for ourselves, it will be time to provide for our neighbors.

Mr. D'WOLF replied to Mr. DICKERSON and others. He spoke at considerable length, further in support of the bill, and to show that there was no connexion between the objects and effects of this bill, and the amendment offered with the view of encouraging the growth of domestic hemp. If introduced separately, he was ready to give his support to any just measure for the encouragement of hemp and other staples of the Western country; and argued to show that the amendment would not produce the result, &c.

SENATE.

Cumberland Road.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Mr. MORRIL was decidedly opposed to the amendment; but was not averse to the bill itself, particularly if certain restrictions should be adopted; and submitted at some length his views of the effect which each would produce on the revenue, which he apprehended would be seriously impaired if the bill passed with the amendment.

Mr. TALBOT again rose and addressed the Senate in support and explanation of the opinions he had before advanced, and in reply to the opponents of the amendment.

Mr. DICKERSON and Mr. D'WOLF also further explained their views; when

The question was taken on Mr. TALBOT'S amendment, and was lost—ayes 15, noes 28.

Mr. MACON then submitted, much at large, his views in opposition to the bill, and the policy—so injurious to the private happiness of those nations which had most pursued it—that of allowing bounties to particular classes of the community. He adverted to various particulars connected with the agriculture, commerce, and other interests of the nation, to point out where the policy of the Government had been beneficial and where detrimental to the public interest.

Mr. LOWRIE briefly stated why he conceived that the bill without the amendment would discourage the growth of hemp in this country, which was an important staple, and the domestic production of which, under circumstances that might arise, would be ruined by the operation of the bill.

The bill was then reported to the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER, wishing to offer some amendments to the bill, moved to postpone its further consideration to Monday next. This motion was lost—ayes 18, noes 19.

Mr. CHANDLER then, after a few explanatory remarks, proposed an amendment, to require the person about to export cordage for the benefit of the drawback, "to furnish the collector of the customs, at the port from which the exportation is to take place, with satisfactory evidence to show what ship or vessel the raw material was imported in, of which the article to be exported was made, and that it was imported within one year then last past."

This amendment was opposed by Mr. SMITH, of Maryland; but, before the question was taken, the bill and amendment were, on motion of Mr. PARROTT, postponed to Thursday.

TUESDAY, December 31.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 30th instant, for instructing the Committee on Roads and Canals to inquire into the expediency of authorizing a subscription, on behalf of the Government of the United States, of a certain portion of the stock of the different companies which have been incorporated within the United States, for the improvement of internal commerce and navigation, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of yesterday, for instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of continuing in force the act to provide for reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, on the petition of Samuel N. Smallwood, and others, citizens of the District of Columbia; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

The bill for the relief of Daniel Seward was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of John Buhler was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill for the relief of Joseph Forrest was read the second time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, presented the petition of Ann Dubord, wife of Joseph Antonio De Reano, of the city of New Orleans, praying permission to remove her slaves from Cuba. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Alexander A. White, made a report, accompanied with a resolution, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Joshua Russell, of Tyler county, Virginia, made a report, accompanied with a bill for the relief of Joshua Russell. The report and bill were read, and passed to the second reading.

The bill for the relief of Alexander Humphrey and Sylvester Humphrey was read a third time, and passed.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others, was read a third time, and, after some discussion, re-committed to the Committee on Public Lands.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the engrossed bill for the relief of John Byers, which had been previously read a third time; and, resolved, that this bill pass.

Mr. DICKERSON presented the memorial of William Gamble, praying compensation for services, as inspector of the customs. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. LANMAN presented the petition of Elijah Boardman, captain in the second regiment of United States' infantry, praying relief in the settlement of his accounts. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

The Senate took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill making an appropriation for the repair of the national road from Cumberland to the Ohio river.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Robert Purdy.

SENATE.

On the question of filling the blank left in the bill for the amount of the appropriation—

Mr. TALBOT said he was not able, from his own observation alone, to say with confidence what sum would be adequate to the object of the bill. At the last session the sum of nine thousand dollars would have been sufficient; but such had been the injuries and dilapidations suffered subsequently by the neglect to make the repairs in time, that he was induced to believe it would now require not less than thirty thousand dollars to put the road in good condition on its whole extent. This opinion was founded not on his own observation alone, as he had stated, but on the information of gentlemen of judgment and veracity who had recently travelled the road. He therefore moved that the blank be filled with thirty thousand.

Mr. MACON thought it would be best not to decide this question by guess, but endeavor to obtain information to govern the Senate in voting the appropriation; and for the purpose of giving time for inquiry, he moved that the bill be postponed to Thursday.

Mr. TALBOT had no objection to the postponement; but he was not aware of any means by which the Senate could acquire more precise information than it now had in its possession—the opinion which he had given, being derived from the information of intelligent men, who had just passed over the road.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, thought the sum proposed rather large; and suggested whether the gentleman had not better inform himself, at the Treasury Department, what sum would probably be necessary for the object.

Mr. R. M. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, would not object to the postponement, if gentlemen would point out any resources of positive information; but he was convinced, after all their inquiries, the question would be entirely conjectural. It was impossible for the Senate, on such a question, to proceed with mathematical certainty; he wished them to vote, at once, the sum which appeared to them requisite—either thirty thousand, or twenty-five thousand, or twenty thousand dollars, but not procrastinate the subject without any probability of acquiring more precise information. His colleague had conversed with intelligent gentlemen well acquainted with the road, and the information derived from them was as good, he presumed, as could be obtained; if any better were expected, he would thank gentlemen to point it out. Although he believed that thirty thousand dollars would not be more than necessary, he would rather take twenty thousand than postpone the bill. Mr. J. remarked that the Senate had been liberal to the West at the last session, on a similar question, and he hoped they would now show towards that section of the country a feeling not less kind, but vote a sum adequate to put the road in repair.

Mr. RUGGLES would merely suggest, before the question was taken, that the second and third sections of the bill, (which provide for the appointment of an agent to superintend the repairs) were unnecessary, as he believed the superintendent who heretofore filled the appointment, (Mr. Shriver,) was still in office; for he, although the road had been completed some time, had been retained for the purpose of closing the accounts, and a better or more faithful agent, Mr. R. presumed could not be obtained.

The bill was then postponed to Thursday.

ROBERT PURDY.

The Senate took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the relief of Colonel Robert Purdy.

[The circumstances on which this bill was founded, were, according to the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, the following: In the year 1809, Robert Purdy, the petitioner, was a Lieutenant Colonel in the Army of the United States, and in command of the troops stationed at Highwassee garrison. A certain William Luty, a pedlar by occupation, applied for permission to sell goods to the soldiers, which was granted him on condition that he would not sell spirituous liquors to the soldiers, nor Indian countrymen. Shortly after said Luty obtained this permission, he was detected in violating garrison orders, whereupon he was confined under guard, and was convicted by a court of inquiry, of having sold spirits, both to the troops and Indian countrymen. Luty was kept under guard for about three days, when he was liberated and directed to leave the garrison; but, instead of complying with these directions, Luty got possession of one or two cabins near the garrison, and within the Indian territory, where he continued to sell spirits, to the great injury of the subordination and discipline of the garrison, and in violation of the laws regulating intercourse with the Indian tribes. Colonel Purdy ordered the cabins in which Luty had taken shelter to be pulled down, and they were demolished accordingly. After Luty was thus forced to leave the garrison, he instituted actions of trespass and false imprisonment against Colonel Purdy, and thereby subjected him to the payment of $816 70, costs, and charges. It appears that the court in Tennessee claimed and exercised jurisdiction of acts committed within the Indian territory, and determined that Luty could not be considered a sutler, because he was prohibited from selling spirits. The committee remark that it is a subject of much delicacy to review the decisions of our courts of justice; but are compelled to remark, that the jurisdiction of the court in this case is doubtful, to say the least of it. And they are confident that a license to sell spirits is not essential to constitute the character of a sutler. But, admitting the court to be correct, both as to jurisdiction, and the definition of a sutler, yet the committee are of opinion the petitioner is entitled to relief. Because, they are satisfied he acted with the sole view of promoting the public interest confided to his command; that he had no other means of restoring order and subordination among the troops, and of enforcing the laws of the United States, regulating intercourse with the Indian tribes. And, that he pursued, on this occasion, the same course which had been universally adopted by the commanding officer of our frontier garrisons. And, therefore, they reported the bill for his relief.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, recapitulated, for the information of gentlemen who were not in the Senate in former sessions when this bill was considered, the facts of the case, and the reasons generally which rendered its passage just and equitable.

SENATE.

Robert Purdy.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Mr. MACON made an inquiry or two of the chairman of the Military Committee, relative to some of the facts stated in the report, touching the legality of the conduct of Colonel Purdy. It was a pretty high-handed measure, Mr. M. said, for a citizen to be imprisoned by a military officer, and he wished to be satisfied that the act was justifiable.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, replied to the question of Mr. MACON. The cabins occupied by Luty were on the line of the Indian territory, and when that part which was within the boundary was demolished, the other of course fell. When Luty committed the act for which he was imprisoned, it was not only within the Indian reservation, but within the encampment ground of Colonel Purdy. Mr. W. said the courts of Tennessee had decided that the jurisdiction of the State was coextensive with its chartered limits, as well within the Indian grounds as where the Indian title had been extinguished, and had, in pursuance of that principle, given damages to Luty. The courts of Georgia, Mr. W. said, he understood had decided differently, and he was inclined to think this decision was a correct one, though he was not prepared to give a positive opinion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, would make a suggestion, as apposite to the subject, though perhaps unimportant. The United States had assigned all the judicial power they possessed to its own courts; one moiety of the judicial power of the people was assigned to the Federal courts, and the other moiety to the State courts; would it not, therefore, be unconstitutional for Congress to undertake to revise a judicial decision? Could it rightfully interfere with such decisions, after they were made by the courts? If the trial of the petitioners was a question arising under the Constitution or laws of the Union, it would be one reserved to the Federal courts to decide, and the party grieved might have recourse to the Federal courts for redress; then was it right, Mr. T. asked, for Congress to undertake to give him that which was provided by a different branch of the Government? If aggrieved by the decision of a State court, he could still, according to the construction of the Supreme Court, resort to the Federal court for redress. But how was it, Mr. T. inquired, that a military officer could have the right to come forward to Congress for redress from a judicial decision, which a civil character could not claim from Congress for any hard or erroneous judgment he might suffer from a court?—particularly if that officer has, by the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary act, the right of removing his cause to the Federal courts? The precedent was bad, Mr. T. thought, because it would have the effect to bring much business of the same kind before the Legislature, which it cannot, either properly or advantageously decide on. In reference to the practice of Congress in such matters, Mr. T. remembered an old case which was applicable to the subject. France once had a body called a Parliament: it was very numerous, and as all the members could not get information on and fully understand every subject, they appointed a committee of one member, called a Reporter, and all the rest of the body relied on the statements of that one individual. This practice virtually reduced the body to a single member. Here, said Mr. T., we pursue the same course, and judge on claims at second hand, on the report of the gentlemen of the committee. If, Mr. T. continued, we are to act on such questions, which are judicial in their character, we ought to decide according to the principles which govern judges. Would a bench of judges leave the decision of a case to one of their number, and all the rest submit their judgments to the opinion of that one? Such was the practice in the Legislature, and it showed the impropriety of bringing into Congress such business, which belonged properly to the courts, where each one who had to decide, was well informed of the merits of the case, and rendered justice accordingly. But if such subjects are to be received by appeal from the courts, we ought, Mr. T. said, for the sake of that economy which all profess to desire, to appoint a court of exchequer, instead of deciding them here. Let us, said he, take a hint from monarchical Governments, (certainly not renowned for their economy,) and appoint a court of exchequer, which will be better able to decide where justice lies, than such a body as this, where all are too much occupied with business of a different kind to investigate such subjects. Mr. T. continued to argue at some length against the practice of acting on such claims in Congress, where so much depended on the talents and integrity of any gentleman who might patronize a claim. It was spending the money of the nation on cases which were not understood, and in fees which the litigants would have to pay in court, and ought to pay there. The trial was, moreover, here, ex parte; no testimony was taken on the adverse side; the statements of the petitioner only were received; a committee heard the case, and the House was governed by their report.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, in reference to the propriety of granting indemnity to Colonel Purdy, cited several cases where officers, during the late war, were ordered to perform acts which were pronounced illegal by the courts, for which the officers had judgments for damages rendered against them; they asked of Congress relief, and had generally received it, even where the decision of the State court was perfectly correct; but in cases where the officer was obliged to obey the orders of his superior. An officer was not to consider whether his orders were right or wrong—his duty was to obey them; in doing so, he might incur damages which would be ruinous to him, unless Congress afforded him relief. There had been cases (and Mr. H. adverted to several) in which officers had suffered for acts of duty, in which it was clear that they could have pursued their remedy in the Federal courts, under the 25th section of the Judiciary act; but as the sums were small, and the officers were known to have acted in good faith, and for the best—even where not acting under orders—they were relieved by the Legislature. It was well known, Mr. H. said, that in the Northern States, during the late war, there was a good deal of excitement, and considerable jealousy and ill will towards military officers; and it was hard for them to get justice; they were obliged to appeal to Congress for relief, and where they were thought to have acted for the best interests of the United States they had been usually relieved; for, though the officer might seek relief in the Supreme Court, and should gain his suit, it would often be a remedy without relief, for the expenses of such an appeal would frequently amount to as much as the whole sum involved in some of the cases.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Robert Purdy.

SENATE.

Mr. VAN BUREN observed that the Constitution had very wisely divided the judicial power in the manner described by Mr. TAYLOR, between the State and the Federal courts; and, in reply to that gentleman, said he had yet to learn that relief had ever been granted by Congress to any applicant on the avowed ground of error in the decision of the court, if the court was one of competent power. But, although it was not competent for Congress to give relief on this ground, it was right to do so on a variety of other grounds. There might be cases in which an officer acts contrary, and knowingly contrary, to law, but where the exigency of the case secures to the United States a good by the illegal act; yet, in such cases as these, the Legislature will relieve the officer from the consequences which may follow his act. Such cases had been relieved—one even at the last session—the bill for the relief of Matthew McNair. Mr. Van Buren cited also other cases, amongst them, that of Mr. Gelston, the former collector of the port of New York, in which the damages amounted to $130,000, and in which, although there was no question that the court decided right, yet, as the officer acted for the good of the United States, Congress relieved him from the damages, great as they were. The officer acted on his own risk, and, as all of them must proceed on the same principle, they would be liable to be ruined by the performance of what they might, though erroneously, deem to be their duty, unless Congress were to grant relief, for all were fallible, and liable to err. Mr. Van Buren applied his argument to the present case, in which the officer had done nothing more than was right and proper, but had suffered damages for it; such an officer, so acting, ought certainly to be relieved, as an intelligent committee of the Senate had decided, and the bill ought to pass on the principles both of consistency and sound policy.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, again rose to make a few remarks in reply to Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman had said that Colonel Purdy could have sought redress in the Federal court, and had the error of the State court corrected; but Mr. W. doubted, indeed he denied, the practicability of that course. It was an action for false imprisonment, and he did not see how a Federal court could order the State court to stay proceedings in such a case. He believed it had been contended by the Court of Appeals in Virginia, that the Supreme Court of the United States had no jurisdiction over the State courts, in cases not of a stronger character than the one under consideration; and there was nothing in the Constitution or laws of the Union which would justify Colonel Purdy in removing his case to the Federal court. But even if he had possessed that right, he would have had to go a thousand miles to reach the Federal court; and would it have been just to require that sacrifice of an officer for executing his duty and the orders of the President? What, Mr. W. asked, was to become of public agents, under the circumstances of the petitioner, before the gentleman's court of exchequer could hear and determine their cases? They would suffer ruin, before relief could be afforded to them. Congress had always acted on such cases, he said, and had granted relief where the party applying appeared to be entitled to it. Nor had it been confined to officers of the Army, as he showed by adducing several examples of a different character. Colonel P. he said had incurred these damages for enforcing the laws of the United States and doing his duty, as he conceived, and it was one of that class of cases which, if any, was entitled to relief. It was the performance of the very duty for which he was placed in the Indian territory; and if he had neglected to act as he did, he would have made himself liable to be arraigned and disgraced for a neglect of duty. Mr. W. particularized a number of cases growing out of the late war, in which damages recovered against officers for false imprisonment, would have ruined them, but for the interposition of Congress. An expedition Mr. W. said, had recently been ordered to sea against the pirates; it might happen that some persons might be taken under circumstances so suspicious and strong as to justify their seizure and imprisonment, yet appear in the end to be pirates; yet would any one say that Commodore Porter ought to be suffered to be ruined by actions for false imprisonment, for making such arrests? No, certainly—Congress would not hesitate to indemnify him.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, made a few remarks, indistinctly heard. The tenor of his observations was, that where an officer had suffered damages for his fidelity to the United States, he ought not to be turned away from Congress without redress, because it might be said there was another tribunal to which he might resort; and that where an officer had done his duty by preventing a mischief, yet incurred a responsibility for so doing, he was equally entitled to relief, as though he had waited till the evil was perpetrated, and then punished it. Mr. B. spoke at some length in reply, (the Reporter understood,) to Mr. TAYLOR as to the cases properly referrible to the Supreme Court.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, again rose. The gentlemen opposed to him, he said, had yielded the question. The petitioner, it was stated, was fined for executing the laws, and yet he was punished by law for executing the law. Was this correct? Ought the party not to apply to those laws for redress, which he suffered for executing? and were the courts not the proper tribunal for him to appeal to? Was the Treasury, Mr. T. demanded, to underwrite every officer who is cast in the law? and yet it would come to this by the establishment of such a precedent. Adopt this practice, Mr. T. said, and we shall soon have here plaintiff and defendant—petitions will be presented by collusion, to obtain grants from the Treasury, and the stakes be divided between the parties. Mr. T. took this occasion, in reply to some remarks that had been made, to protest against the appellate jurisdiction assumed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The power denied, was no where to be found in the Constitution. Returning to the subject immediately under consideration, Mr. T. said, if military officers used the physical force placed under their command, to oppress a citizen, they ought to be the last who ought to be excused; they ought to be punished. This petitioner either broke the law or he enforced the law. If the former, ought Congress to protect him? and, if the latter, ought the courts not to protect him? This precedent, he repeated, would be a bad one. It was more necessary to make the military obedient to the law than any other class; and he would not, by this unnecessary indemnity, encourage them to break the law, to neglect their defence before the proper tribunal, and then grant them a privilege here not granted to any other class of citizens. This was, indeed, granting an exclusive privilege. Exclusive privileges! exclaimed Mr. T. He protested against them with vehemence, as abhorrent to justice and repugnant to the spirit of our institutions. Even in this case, he observed, it might be (he would not assert it, but merely suggest the idea) that the petitioner came here in concert with the prosecution, to squeeze a little out of the public Treasury. Mr. T. again adverted to the power contended for by the Supreme Court, and spoke against the supremacy asserted by that tribunal, which was a mingling of jurisdictions, he said, which would bring about a very different Government from that which the Constitution intended to establish.

Mr. EATON, of Tennessee, referred to the nature of the present case, and the facts disclosed by the most incontestible evidence, to show that there could exist no possible collusion between Colonel Purdy and his prosecutor. If, however, Mr. E. said, Colonel P. had taken the course recommended by Mr. TAYLOR, there would have been more room to hazard such a suggestion, if the character of the officer did not utterly forbid it. But, Mr. E. said, it was not in the power of the prisoner to appeal to the Supreme Court for redress, because this was an action at common law, and not one arising under a law of the United States or of the Constitution. Another reason, Mr. E. said, why Colonel P. could not apply to the Supreme Court, was, that the sum involved was not sufficient to entitle him to an appeal, the laws giving the right of appeal, limiting it to sums not less than $1,000. If the gentleman (Mr. TAYLOR) had been better acquainted with the practice of the Senate, he would have known, Mr. E. said, that there was no danger that it would ever set itself up as a revising body over the Judiciary. It was but the very last session of Congress that the gentleman's own colleague, (Mr. BARBOUR,) had eloquently and most zealously advocated the expediency of revising and declaring illegal an act of the Judiciary—he alluded to the case of Matthew Lyon—but, whatever might have been the opinions of the members, as to the justice of the decision of the Court in the case of Matthew Lyon, the Senate overruled the opinion of the gentleman, and determined not to interfere with the Judicial Department, but leave it to the undisturbed performance of its duties. The Senate, Mr. E. said, had thus solemnly decided against the principle which Mr. TAYLOR seemed so much to dread; the gentleman might, therefore, let his fears subside as to the assumption of power over the Judiciary by the Senate, for all his arguments were thrown away on such apprehension. As to the present case, Mr. E. repeated, it was not one which it was competent for the Supreme Court to relieve; it was only in the power of Congress to do it; and, as it was a case entitled to the interposition of Congress, he hoped the bill would pass.

After a few further explanatory remarks from Mr. MACON and Mr. WILLIAMS, the question was taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and carried without a division. Adjourned to Friday.

FRIDAY, January 3, 1823.

Mr. BARBOUR moved, that the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred, on the 17th ultimo, the petition of Joseph Emerson, in behalf of himself and others, be discharged from the further consideration thereof; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

Mr. BOARDMAN presented the memorial of Henry P. Wilcox, administrator of Joseph Wilcox, praying compensation for carrying George A. Hughes, the bearer of despatches, from Havre de Grace to the United States. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion, by Mr. BARBOUR, the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the memorial of Benjamin I. Shain, master of the schooner Ajax, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Secretary of State.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:
To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with the three resolutions of the Senate, of the 5th April, 1822, requesting the President of the United States to communicate, in detail, the expenses of building each vessel of war authorized by the act of the 2d of January, 1813, and its supplements; and, also, the names, number, grade, &c., of the officers and men employed at each naval station, during the two years immediately preceding the first of January, 1822, I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of the Navy, with the accompanying documents, which contain the desired information.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, January 3, 1823.

The Message and documents were read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

A message from the House of Representatives

JANUARY, 1823.

Joseph Janney.

SENATE.

informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory ;' a bill, entitled "An act in addition to 'An act to continue in force 'An act to protect the commerce of the United States, and punish the crime of piracy ; and, also, to make further provision for punishing the crime of piracy ;' and, also, a bill, entitled "An act to continue the present mode of supplying the Army of the United States ;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill for the relief of Robert Purdy was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the petition of Joseph Emerson, and others, praying for indemnity for property illegally captured by the cruisers of the French Republic, in the year 1797, be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with directions to inquire and report whether the claim of the petitioners was released to the French Government by the United States, by the Convention between the two Republics, made and concluded on the 30th September, 1800, and finally ratified, on the part of France, on the 31st July, 1801 ; and, if released and barred, to report a bill for the relief of the petitioners : Provided, They shall produce satisfactory evidence of the illegal capture of their property by the French, as stated in their petition.

JOSEPH JANNEY.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, unfavorable to the petition of Joseph Janney, of Virginia, who prays to be paid for certain buildings burnt by the British, in 1814, because, as is stated, of the alleged occupation of said property by American troops.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reverse the report, so as to declare that the petition ought to be granted ; and advocated the justice and reasonableness of the claim with much earnestness, and at considerable length.

Mr. RUGGLES (Chairman of the Committee of Claims) replied to Mr. BARBOUR, and defended the report of the committee ; but had not concluded his remarks, when he gave way for a motion to adjourn ; and the Senate adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, January 6.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, presented the petition of Jacob Butler, of the State of Tennessee, praying compensation for two horses lost in the service of the United States, during the late war. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of modifying the act of Congress of the last session, entitled "An act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida," so as to grant the right of appeal and writs of error from the decisions of the courts established by said act, to the Supreme Court of the United States, in all cases above — dollars.

Mr. DICKERSON submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing by law a subscription, on the part of the United States, to the stock of the company making a canal from the Delaware river to the Raritan, in the State of New Jersey.

Mr. MACON presented the memorial of Robert Abbott, praying the passage of a law authorizing the equitable settlement of the accounts of Captain Johnston Blakeley, who, with the crew of the Wasp, was lost in the year 1814. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BARTON submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing an interchange of the laws of the several States, by mail, free of postage.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act concerning the disbursement of public money," reported the same, with amendments, which were read.

Mr. LOWRIE presented the memorial of the Pennsylvania Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Manufactures, praying the revision of the existing tariff. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LOWRIE also presented the petition of Samuel Walker, of Joseph L. Dutton, and, also, of John Martin, and others, praying remuneration for the occupation and use of their property by the United States, during the late war. The petitions were severally read, and respectively referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. RODNEY rose and said, that, in the war which we were now waging against the pirates in the West India seas, it was proper, he thought, to give some stimulus to our seamen engaged in it. Our gallant tars, he said, were not likely to gain in such a war the honor they acquired in the late war, and, as there was but little of that to be got, he wished to supply the deficiency by providing a stimulus of another kind. He therefore asked leave to offer the following resolution :

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing a bounty to the officers and crews of the public armed vessels of the United States ; and to the owners, officers, and crews of the private armed vessels of the United States, for the prisoners captured, and the guns taken by them, in any piratical vessel.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of Joseph Janney ; and it was ordered to lie on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Public Lands, on the petition of Alexander A. White ; and it was laid on the table.

SENATE.

Cumberland Road Bill.

JANUARY, 1823.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the third instant, for instructing the Committee on Foreign Relations respecting the petition and claim of Joseph Emerson, and others; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The three bills last brought up from the House of Representatives, for concurrence, were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill for the relief of Joshua Russell was read the second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill allowing a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured in the United States from foreign hemp, together with the amendment proposed thereto; and the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Thursday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the benefit of George Shannon; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of William Sayles," and, on motion, it was laid on the table; and the petitioner had leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effect of such copies;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to a third reading.

The bills from the House of Representatives—the first concerning the apportionment of Representatives in the State of Alabama—the second to repeal part of an act passed by the State of Maryland, in the year 1784, respecting an addition to Georgetown—severally passed through Committees of the Whole, and were ordered to a third reading.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Joseph Forrest; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Thursday next.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims, in the Territory of Michigan;" in which bill they request the concurrence of the Senate. The said bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

On motion, by Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a donation of lands lying upon the waters of Pearl river, to be appropriated, under the direction of the General Assembly of the State of Mississippi, to aid in opening and improving the navigation of said river, from the seat of government of the State to the Gulf of Mexico.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary of the Navy, exhibiting a statement of expenditures, in virtue of the appropriation law for the year 1822; and of unexpended balances of former appropriations for the Naval Establishment, remaining in the Treasury on the 1st of October, 1821. The report was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill for the payment to Amos Nicholls of a sum of money for services rendered in the Navy Department; and the bill for the relief of Daniel Seward, were severally considered in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

The Senate then, according to the order of the day, resumed the consideration of the bill providing for the repair of the Cumberland road.

Mr. TALBOT, adverting to what had passed when this subject was last before the Senate, stated that he had addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, making the inquiries which had been suggested, and had received from the Secretary an answer thereto, (which was read to the Senate,) stating, first, that David Shriver, Esq., was, at the commencement of the Cumberland road, appointed superintendent thereof, by the President of the United States, with a salary of $1,800, which was, in 1816, increased to $2,500. That he is not now considered the superintendent, and is not in the pay of the Government. Secondly, that the Secretary had examined the correspondence of Mr. Shriver with the department, relative to repairs, but it contains no estimate of the sum necessary to effect that object; but the Secretary presumed that a sum less than $30,000 would not be sufficient for that purpose. Mr. T. said, that in addition to the data furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, he had consulted several gentlemen well acquainted with the road—one of whom thought $30,000 necessary for its repair; another, that $25,000 would be sufficient. To satisfy those who might object to the larger sum, he would move to insert $25,000, the lowest sum which was thought adequate. Less than this he was confident would be insufficient; and, to appropriate too little, would be throwing it away, as the repairs, if left unfinished, would be of no use. He hoped, therefore, that a sum sufficient would be voted, that the work might be completed in one season.

The blank was filled with the sum of $25,000: ayes 19, noes 11.

The blank left for the per diem allowance of the superintendent of the repairs, Mr. TALBOT moved to fill with three dollars. He had proposed a per diem compensation in the bill, he said, because the work would occupy only a part of the year—the Summer and Autumn—and nothing could be done on it in the Winter and Spring. It was not necessary, therefore, to give the superintendent a salary.

JANUARY, 1823.

Georgia Militia Claims.

SENATE.

Mr. RUGGLES questioned whether three dollars a day would be a reasonable compensation, considering the extent of the road, and the personal expenses of the agent; but he would not move a higher sum if that were thought adequate.

The blank was filled with three dollars; and then the bill was, without debate or division, ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

TUESDAY, January 7.

On motion, by Mr. PARROTT, the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred, on the 19th ultimo, the petition of George Ulmer, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Secretary of War.

Mr. LANMAN presented the petition of Ezekiel P. Beldon, praying relief, in consideration of services rendered his country during the Revolutionary war. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, gave notice that tomorrow he should ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of David G. Cowan.

Mr. BOARDMAN presented the petition of Daniel Boardman, of New York, praying that his patents, granted under the British Government, and registered at St. Helena, may be recorded in like manner as those in the district of St. Helena have been; and, also, that he may be permitted to cause a resurvey of his lands registered in his name at St. Helena. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEYMOUR presented the petition of John S. Larrabee, and others, who were bail and sureties for Walter Sheldon, as district paymaster in the Army of the United States, praying relief. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, unfavorable to the petition of Joseph Janney.

Mr. RUGGLES concluded the remarks he left unfinished on Friday, in vindication of the report of the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR replied at considerable length, in opposition to the report, and to show that the property of the petitioner was burnt by the enemy, in consequence of its occupation by a body of troops, and that therefore it came within the principle which had heretofore governed Congress in granting indemnity in such cases.

Mr. VAN DYKE (a member of the Committee of Claims) briefly explained the grounds on which the committee decided against the petition; and to show that it was not of that class of cases which had received relief from the Government.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. BARBOUR, to reverse the report, and negatived; and then the report of the committee was agreed to without a division.

The engrossed bills for the relief of Daniel Seward, and for the relief of Amos Nicholls, were severally read the third time, passed, and ordered to be sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence.

GEORGIA MILITIA CLAIMS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Military Committee, made the following report; which was read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate:

The Military Committee, to whom was referred the resolution instructing them to inquire into the expediency of providing for the final settlement of the militia claims of the State of Georgia, for services rendered under orders of the President of the United States, during the years 1792, '93, and '94, report:

That, in the examination of this subject, sundry authentic letters, and other documents, were submitted to their inspection; among which, the following being deemed the most material, are here so arranged and condensed as to present to the Senate, with the least possible detail, the merits of the case, viz:

A letter from the Governor of Georgia to the Secretary of War, dated 22d of May, 1792, communicating to the Department official information of the hostile disposition of the Creek and Cherokee Indians, as manifested in the murders which they had just committed, and the houses they had destroyed by fire. After stating these facts the Governor proceeds, "When you maturely deliberate on the present position of the Federal troops, and contemplate the orders to that effect, you will doubtless foresee a series of contemplated difficulties, that may attend the Army in the event of general hostilities. The movement of the Army ought to be governed by circumstances; and, whilst it is to remain subject to orders issued at the remote distance of one thousand miles, I cannot help feeling for the situation of the defenceless settlers, scattered over an extensive frontier of at least three hundred miles! The savage depredations that have taken place for near three years past, have been considerably to the westward of the Rock Landing; from which, to the river Tagalo, there is a frontier of about one hundred and thirty miles exposed to Indian ravages. When I point out this as defenceless ground, I do not leave out of view that portion of the frontier from the river St. Mary's to the Rock Landing; for, should a pressure take place to the westward, the Indians have sufficient sagacity to retaliate on the settlers on the lower frontiers. From those considerations, additional exertions towards a general defence will be indispensable."

On the 15th of June, 1792, Major Richard McCall, the commandant of the Federal troops in Georgia, thus addressed the Governor of the State: "I have just returned from the Big or High Shoals of Oconee. On my way up I found the settlements breaking. At this particular crisis, the settlers neglecting their crops, will, of course, be an injury to the frontiers. I have, therefore, in consequence of your Excellency's permission, called into service some militia. The reports of Captains Barnet and William Strong, my letter to General Clark, and my instructions to the different officers, will show the occasion of the measure."

The Governor of Georgia was informed, by letter from Andrew Pickens, dated at Hopewell, 12th September, 1792, that the Cherokee Indians, instigated by Spanish agents, had manifested an unfriendly disposition, and that four towns had actually determined on war. That the chiefs of the Creek nation had not returned from Pensacola, but were soon expected, with a large supply of ammunition; at which time it was expected a general war would commence between that nation and the United States. This letter was accompanied with one from Captain R. B. Roberts, commanding the United States troops at Fort Mathews, Big Shoals of Oconee, informing the Governor of the contents of a letter, received by him from Mr. Shaw, the superintendent of the Cherokee nation, which induced him to look for a predatory war, if nothing more serious. "The weakness of this post," continues the captain, ("although it is my duty to defend it to the last,) is such, as to render its tenure very precarious. The strength of it only twenty-four privates! The frontiers here are truly deplorable; no ammunition; no authority; and no settled mode adopted by Government for their protection. As I am on the spot, I hope your Excellency will not imagine I presume to dictate; but really, sir, if the militia are not called out immediately in force, this settlement will be totally broken up, and dreadful consequences will ensue." To this letter the Governor replied, on the 18th September, 1792, "That the commandant of the Federal forces had long since been served with a provisional arrangement of the militia; by which it will appear that ample provision has been made by the Government for any events that have as yet arisen; and in case emergencies should require additional aid, to the one-third of the militia under orders, agreeably to the aforesaid arrangements, there shall be no delay on my part in affording every support that the situation of the State will admit." In confirmation of this statement, copies of general orders of the years 1790 and 1792 are found among the papers referred to the committee for examination; by these the militia of the State are classed and held ready for active operations, whenever their services should be required.

On the 27th October, 1792, the Governor of Georgia was informed by the Secretary of War, of the determination of five towns of the Cherokees, consisting of from three to five hundred warriors, and aided by the Upper Creeks, to commence hostilities against the United States. But, adds the Secretary, "as Congress is on the eve of their session, this information would be communicated to them; the Constitution having invested that body with the powers of war, no offensive operations can be taken until they shall be pleased to authorize the same. At present the information does not warrant the conclusion, that more of the Cherokees than five towns, and the Creeks before mentioned, are for hostilities; but, when the flames of war are lighted up, it will be difficult effectually to restrain them within narrow limits. If the information which you may receive shall substantiate, clearly, any hostile designs of the Creeks against the frontiers of Georgia, you will be pleased to take the most effectual measures for the defence thereof, as may be in your power, and which the occasion may require." On the 18th of November, 1792, the Governor was informed, by Major Henry Gaither of the Federal troops, that, believing it to be necessary, and in consequence of his permission to do so, he had called into service two additional troops—one from Wilkes county, and the other from the county of Elbert.

In a letter of the 29th of April, 1793, the Secretary of War was thus addressed by the Governor of Georgia: "From the depositions of Benjamin Harrison and Francis Pugh, and from the information of Joseph Dabbs, there is little expectation of avoiding a general war with the Creek and Cherokee Indians. Blood has been spilt in every direction on the extended frontier of this State, and one man killed in South Carolina." After stating the plans he had adopted for temporary defence, he adds: "I shall follow this plan of operation, until measures be taken by the President for the better protection of the unfortunate settlers on this exposed frontier. If I find the pressure become great, the opposition must keep pace with the several emergencies."

On the 8th of May, 1793, his Excellency again wrote the Secretary of War, that, "such was the havoc and carnage making by the savages, in every direction, on our frontiers, retaliation, by open war, became the only resort! That the horrid barbarities recently committed, (some recitals of which were enclosed,) had compelled him to cause the additional aid of six troops of horse to be drawn into service."

On the 30th of May, 1793, the Secretary of War acknowledged the receipt of the several letters which had been addressed by the Governor to that department, and adds, "that, from considerations of policy, at this critical period, relative to foreign Powers, and the pending treaty with the northern Indians, it is deemed advisable to avoid, for the present, offensive expeditions into the Creek country. But, from the circumstances of the late depredations on the frontier of Georgia, it is thought expedient to increase the force in that quarter, for defensive purposes. The President, therefore, authorizes your Excellency to call into, and keep, in service, in addition to the regular force stationed in Georgia, one hundred horse, and one hundred militia foot, to be employed under the orders of Lieutenant Gaither, to repel inroads, as circumstances may require." After directing the manner of forming and employing this force, the Secretary concludes thus: "The case of a serious invasion of Georgia, by large bodies of Indians, must be referred to the provisions of the Constitution. But the providing with efficacy, in future, (the necessity of which appears but too probable,) requires, absolutely, that no unnecessary expense shall be incurred in the meantime."

In reply to the Governor's message of the 8th of May, the Secretary of War, on the 10th of June, says: "The State of Georgia being invaded, or in imminent danger thereof, the measures taken by your Excellency may be considered as indispensable. You are the judge of the degree of danger, and of its duration, and will, undoubtedly, proportion the defence to the exigencies. The President, however, expresses his confidence that, as soon as the danger which has induced you to call out so large a body of troops shall have subsided, you will reduce the troops to the existing state of things, provided the safety of the frontiers will admit the measure." After speaking of some military supplies that had been forwarded, he thus concludes: "As a general and open Creek war, in the present crisis of European affairs, would be complicated, and of great magnitude, the President is anxiously desirous of avoiding such an event." Enclosed is a copy of a letter to the Governor of South Carolina, in case circumstances should require you to call for aid from that State."

The language of this letter to the Governor of South Carolina, is strongly expressive of the President's apprehensions of a state of serious hostilities with the Indians. The Secretary says to the Governor: "The President of the United States has received authentic information from Georgia, of the unprovoked and cruel

JANUARY, 1823.

Georgia Militia Claims.

SENATE.

outrages of parties of Creeks upon the frontier of that State; and as it is at present uncertain to what degree the evils complained of may be extended, the President has directed me to request your Excellency, that, in case the frontiers of Georgia should be seriously invaded by large bodies of hostile Indians, you would, upon the request of the Governor of said State, direct such parties of the militia of South Carolina to march to the assistance of Georgia, as the case may require; for the expenses of which the United States will be responsible."

On the 19th of July Captain Constant Freeman was sent into Georgia, as agent of the War Department, to regulate the issues of public property to the troops who might be in the service of the United States, and to prevent or remedy any abuses which existed. Having immediately on his arrival entered on the duties of his appointment, on the 17th of October, 1793, he directed Major Gaither to attend to the instructions which he had communicated to him from the War Department, in relation to the monthly muster and inspection of the militia in the service of the United States, promising to aid the person he should appoint, with the necessary instructions.

On the 19th February, 1794, his Excellency George Mathews, who had succeeded Mr. Telfair in the government of Georgia, and having, in person, examined the exposed parts of the State, offered a plan for its defence to the War Department. He protests against the orders which forbid the militia from pursuing the Indians, whose tracks were stained with the blood of those they had just murdered, over a temporary and artificial line, as calculated to encourage the Indians, and to deprive the citizens of the State of the opportunity of reprisal, enjoyed by all nations under such circumstances. This letter is concluded with the following remarks: "I have now to request that some person may be appointed to muster the militia that now are, or have been in service, as I presume Captain Freeman has informed you of Major Gaither's having refused to make the appointment. I can, sir, with great sincerity assure you that, in the defence I may require for this State, I have not a wish to make the expense one shilling more than is requisite; and when you reflect that we possess a frontier of nearly four hundred miles, exposed to numerous tribes of hostile Indians, I flatter myself the plan I now submit will not be deemed extravagant. I have to request, if the arsenal or military stores of the United States will admit of it, that you send forward equipments for three or four hundred horse. I trust the President will not think this unreasonable, when it is taken into view that this State forms an extensive barrier, or rather picket, to the United States."

In letters of the 25th of March, and 14th of May, 1794, the Secretary of War acknowledges the receipt of Governor Mathews's letter; assents to the propriety of his plans generally, for the defence of the State, and sanctions, particularly, the erection of block-houses throughout the whole line of exposure, at the distance of twenty-five miles apart. On the subject of the pay of the militia theretofore employed, the Secretary observes, "as to the number of militia kept up by your predecessor during the last year, no returns or muster rolls have been received, of course, no judgment can be formed of their amount; some reports have made the number before-mentioned to you. When the returns and musters shall be received, the question will be impartially considered by the President of the United States, whether, under all the circumstances of the case, he can consider himself as authorized to pay them. If he cannot, which is most probable, the question will be submitted to Congress." In relation to the muster and pay rolls, the agent of the War Department, Captain Freeman, thus addressed the Governor of Georgia, on the 28th of April, 1794, "I am very happy that your Excellency has ordered the muster and pay rolls for the militia to be prepared and forwarded; and that we so perfectly coincide respecting the nature of the service which has been performed. I make no doubt but that all obstacles will be removed as soon as the former accounts of the militia can be laid before Congress, and that, in future, regularity and order will be introduced."

On the subject of these claims, Captain Freeman, in a report to the Secretary of War, made the 25th of October, 1802, after stating what muster and pay rolls he had forwarded to the War Department, and particularly noticing those for the service termed unauthorized, remarks, "When the accountant received the first estimates, he required explanations relative to these claims; and afterwards, a certificate from the Governor, that the militia had been called into service for the defensive protection of the frontiers. This requisition I transmitted to his Excellency, who made a statement of the militia services. I transmitted it to the Secretary of War, from whom I received a letter, which encouraged the hope that these claims would be admitted and paid; and other letters afterwards received from the accountant, confirmed this belief. However, from the peculiar circumstances of the Government at that time, the attention of the Secretary of War was wholly occupied upon other objects; and he left the Department before any decision took place. It is proper to observe, the citizens of Georgia never thought the force authorized by the President of the United States, adequate to the protection of the frontiers."

From the foregoing exposition of the papers submitted to the examination of the committee, and the contents of others, yet to be noticed, the following facts seem to be established: That, during the years 1792-'93-'94, the State of Georgia was almost constantly in a state of serious alarm and danger from Indian hostilities, against which she was not permitted to defend herself, as was her obvious policy, by carrying the war into the enemy's country, and by burning and destroying their villages and crops, to have relieved her citizens from the painful necessity of being for years in arms upon her frontiers: That Georgia was not permitted to pursue this course, because it was the duty, and one of the attributes, of the Federal Government "to provide for the common defence;" and its policy, in this instance, having a due regard to the safety of other parts of the Union, and the success of pending negotiations with other Indian tribes, forbid a war with the Creek and Cherokee Indians: That the President became at length seriously convinced of the dangerous situation of the State, and not having Federal troops at his disposal, did, on the 27th of October, 1792, invest the Governor of Georgia with discretionary powers, in relation to the force to be employed, for the safety of the inhabitants, but confined his operations strictly to defensive measures: That the Governor continued in the exercise of this discretionary power until the 30th of May, when it was suspended by a letter of that date from the Secretary of War; but from the increasing pressure upon every part of the frontier, the power to act discretionary was again restored, in the broadest terms, in the letter of the Secretary, of the 10th of June, wherein he says, "The State of Georgia being invaded, or in imminent danger thereof, the measures taken by your Excellency may be considered as indispensable. You are the judge of the degree of the danger, and of its duration, and will, undoubtedly, proportion the defence to the exigency." So ample was the power thus given for defensive purposes, that, in its exercise, the Governor of Georgia was not restricted to the use of the means within the State, but was informed that the Governor of South Carolina had been required, should he request it, to order a detachment of the militia of that State to his assistance. That, under this authority, the Governor of Georgia did call out and place under the command of the Federal officers in that State, large bodies of its militia, who were employed along a frontier of nearly four hundred miles, for defensive purposes, during the periods to which this inquiry was directed; the services of which troops are acknowledged, and the estimates of the pay claimed by them, amounting to $129,375 66, are found in the documents examined by the committee. And, in relation to which, the then Secretary of War, Mr. Pickens, wrote the agent of the War Department in Georgia, in August, 1795, "the large estimate for services, about which my predecessor doubted, I have looked into, and will immediately further examine. From the complexion of these claims, connected with the Governor's certificate, which I received, enclosed in your letter of the 23d of June, I am inclined to think they must be generally admitted."

And again, in a communication to the Governor, in September following, the Secretary of War assures him that "money for paying the Georgia militia is preparing to be forwarded; no delay will take place, that is avoidable; the post is on the point of starting; I shall write you particularly by the next."

That the President did intend to intrust the defence of the State of Georgia to the discretion of the Governor, is apparent, from his requiring, as necessary to a decision on these claims, his Excellency's certificate that the troops were called into service by him, and employed for defensive purposes. That they were not, therefore, admitted and paid by the administration under which they were authorized, can be accounted for only upon the grounds suggested by the agent of the War Department, "that, from the peculiar circumstances of the Government at that time, the attention of the Secretary of War was wholly occupied upon other objects; and he left the department before any decision could be made."

Under this view of the subject, the committee are of opinion that the defence of Georgia was a necessary measure on the part of the Federal Government; but became expensive and protracted from the peculiar situation of the United States, which did not permit an invasion of the Indian territory; that the forces employed by the Governor, in defensive operations, under the authority of the President, did not exceed the exigencies of a frontier of nearly four hundred miles, constantly exposed to the incursions of treacherous enemies, inhabiting the adjacent territory; and whose security from pursuit, enabled them to concert, in safety, upon the very confines of the State, their plans of robbery and murder; and, consequently, that the expenses of this defence are justly chargeable against the United States. They, therefore, recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Military Committee be instructed to report a bill appropriating $129,375 66, in full discharge of the militia claims of Georgia.

THE CUMBERLAND ROAD BILL.

The engrossed bill making an appropriation for repairing the National Road from Cumberland to the Ohio river, was read the third time, and, the question whether it should pass, being about to be put—

Mr. MACON asked that the question should be decided by yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, then rose, and in an argument of about an hour, submitted his views of the inexpediency and unconstitutionality, not only of this bill, but also of the exercise by the General Government of the power to make internal improvements at all in the States; of the impolicy and unconstitutionality of departing from the exercise of express and rightful powers, to exercise concurrent powers; the advantage and necessity of adhering to the true line of demarcation between the powers of the Federal and State Governments; his opinions as to the manner by which that line was to be ascertained, and where it exists, &c.

Mr. TALBOT said he could not forbear an expression of the surprise he experienced at the opposition which was now, for the first time, made to the passage of the bill on the table; an opposition which, at the present stage of the bill, its third reading, was not to have been anticipated, by the usage of the Senate; and of which, the honorable gentleman, (Mr. TAYLOR,) who had just resumed his seat, had afforded no previous intimation. But, notwithstanding, said Mr. TALBOT, the unusual course, in this instance, adopted by the honorable gentleman, and the unseasonable period, as it would seem to me, adopted by him, for urging his objections to this measure, yet, as it will be expected of me, as chairman of the committee who reported this bill, I feel myself stimulated by a sense of duty to myself and to the Senate, who have, in some degree, honored me with the charge of this important and interesting subject, to make some reply to the very learned, ingenious, and subtle speech which we have just heard; and, feeble and inadequate as my powers are, and inadequate to engage in debate with the venerable gentleman from Virginia, I flatter myself, with the indulgence of the Senate, to be enabled to furnish a satisfactory answer, if not a complete refutation of the objections of the honorable gentleman to the adoption of the contemplated measure.

The objections urged by the honorable gentleman to the bill, are, to the Constitutional power of the Congress of the United States to appropriate money for the contemplated object; to the expediency of the measure, upon the concession of the existence of such powers of legislation in Congress: and, lastly, to the provisions of the bill; and especially that part of it which characterizes this road, of which we propose the repair and superintendence, by the General Government, as a national one.

JANUARY, 1283.

Cumberland Road Bill.

SENATE.

In support of the first proposition, the defect of power in Congress to appropriate money for the object contemplated by the bill, the honorable gentleman set out with assuming the practicability, if not the facility, with which the clear, strong, and perspicuous lines of distinction were to be drawn between the powers of the General and the State governments; affirming that those lines of distinction might be so clearly and distinctly traced, by the mere process of reasoning by the rules furnished by him, as to produce conviction on the minds of all. If this assumption be found correct, and this beautiful theory, in the abstract, be justified by practical experiment, applying the touchstone furnished by the gentleman, to all cases, of doubtful, nice, and difficult constructions, as they arise, under our new and complicated system of Federal Government, then, indeed, will he deserve the imperishable wreath of immortal glory—and the thanks and gratitude not only of his countrymen of the present age, but of their remotest posterity. Such a discovery would be, indeed, the political panacea for all the ills which afflict the body politic; and a discovery not inferior in importance or beneficial efficacy, to that of the elixir of immortal life—the idle and vain pursuit of dreaming philosophers. Could the vain and fanciful ideas of the venerable gentleman be realized, the politician and statesman, with his infallible standard of Constitutional construction, like the mechanic with his square and compass, might, almost as mechanically as the workman plans and constructs his house, plan and lay down his powers of Federal and State legislation; and circumscribe, with the utmost precision, the exact limits of each; and say to the one and to the other, thus far shalt thou go, and no farther. But, a little experience in this most difficult of all sciences, Mr. President, has taught me that nothing short of the most active, constant, and vigilant exercise of the best talents of the sagacious and experienced statesman, by successive acts of legislation on cases as they arise or present themselves, growing out of the real or apparent conflict between Federal and State jurisdictions, tested by a long succession of sage experience, and matured by the best talents to which our liberal and enlightened forms of Government shall give birth, can produce that desideratum which the gentleman seems to flatter himself he himself discovered, and with which he has favored the Senate, in the speech to which we have listened with so much pleasure.

But let us proceed briefly to test the correctness of the rule, deemed so infallible and so clear, by which the gentleman imagines the respective Powers, with the limits properly to be assigned to each, is to be circumscribed. This rule of the honorable gentleman, if it was correctly understood, was this: that National, or Federal legislation, was limited to subjects of a general or foreign nature; those of the State Governments extending to, and embracing all subjects of a local or internal kind; the latter acting on, adapted to, and governed by, the interests, the feelings, prejudices, and sympathies, of those on whom they acted, and whose affairs they were to govern and control.

But a slight degree of reflection must satisfy the honorable gentleman himself, how unsatisfactory and fallacious such an attempt at definition or circumscribing the respective limits of national and State authority is, as all such attempts at general definition must be. For, let me but put it to the honorable gentleman himself, to say, whether acts of the Congress of the United States for the erection of a fortification at one point, an armory or lighthouse at another, acts, as coming within the scope of the general power to regulate foreign commerce, and to declare and prosecute war, and of the systematic exercise of which, in such establishments, the gentleman himself cannot and will not question, are not, in their very nature and essence acts of local legislation, and acts, too, having a direct and immediate bearing on the interests, feelings, and sympathies, of those in the vicinity of such erections, who are more immediately affected by those acts of legislation.

Will the gentleman deny that the act, in virtue of which the fortifications at the Rip Raps were commenced, and which are now in progress to completion, in which Virginia takes so deep an interest, was an act of usurpation on the legitimate and sovereign rights of this enlightened and patriotic State, or is within the legitimate exercise of the powers delegated, though, by implication, to the General Government, to declare and carry on war against other nations? When the gentleman shall be prepared to pronounce this, and a thousand other acts of a similar character, to be usurpations on the part of Congress on the sovereign powers of the States in which such erections are made, then, and not till then, will this favorite principle be considered as a test by which to define and separate the powers of national from those of State legislation.

The truth is, Mr. President, and a most obvious one it is, that all legislation, either that of the States, or of the nation, is either general, embracing the whole of the States or of the nation; or embracing only a portion, or a particular point or spot of the State or of the nation; and is consequently more or less local in its operation. Wherefore, no principle can be more fallacious than that furnished by the venerable gentleman as an infallible test for defining the boundaries between the Federal and the State sovereignties. Nor is it within the scope of human wisdom to discover or furnish to the politician, or legislator, any such infallible and unerring guide to the immediate solution of all the nice and delicate questions which have arisen, and will arise, from the real and apparent conflicts and collisions between our Federal and State authorities; which, whenever they do arise, will demand, and should receive, the most close and attentive investigation, aided by all the lights of past experience, and all the skill and wisdom of the enlightened and philosophical legislators who are called upon to decide and act upon them. To such may, and must be confided, by the theory of our Constitution, and not to the recluse and retired scholar, issuing from his closet, covered with the dust and cobwebs of his study, maxims and rules for the construction of constitutions, for the observance and government of the enlightened legislator engaged in the active scenes of practical legislation for his country.

These remarks, Mr. President, I have thought proper to submit, in reply to the observations of the venerable gentleman, founded on the supposed principle in the construction of Federal powers, that all local or geographical legislation—acting upon the peculiar interests, feelings and sympathies of the people to be affected by such legislation—belonged to the States and was denied to the General Government. The gentleman has not denied to the General Government the exercise of such powers as are or may be fairly implied from those expressly delegated by the Federal Constitution; nor is it contended, by any statesman of standing, for talents or reputation in the country, that the powers to which I have before alluded are not fairly and clearly deducible from the powers delegated to the General Government to declare and prosecute war, and to regulate commerce with foreign nations. If, therefore, the power delegated of regulating commerce with foreign nations, carries with it, irresistibly, in the minds of all, the incidental or implied power of erecting navies, building ships of war, erecting fortifications to protect our harbors, lighthouses, buoys, sea walls, for the protection, defence, and facility of our foreign or external commerce; upon what principle, or what train of reasoning, can it be contended that the correlative power of regulating interior commerce—that is, the commerce between the States—does not confer, by the same irresistible implication, the same or similar powers with those conferred, in the opinion of all, by the power of regulating foreign commerce? Is the power conferred in relation to foreign commerce designed by the framers of the Federal Constitution for the purpose of enabling Congress, by the wisdom of their regulations, to improve, facilitate, and ameliorate, by the wisdom of their enactments, so as to promote, as far as possible, the prosperity and happiness of the people of the United States; and was not the power conferred and delegated in the same language, of regulating commerce between the States, intended for the same wise, enlightened, and benevolent purpose? And if, by the power of regulating commerce between the States, the improvement and the facilitation of that commerce can be best effected by the opening of roads and canals, for the transportation of the productions of one State to another adjacent or contiguous State—and, indeed, these seem to be almost, if not entirely, the only means by which these objects could be effected—upon what principle of good sense, or with what reverence for the framers of this instrument (the admiration of America, and of the enlightened world!) can this power of opening roads and canals be denied to the Congress of the United States? Was the power of regulating commerce between the States designed by the enlightened framers of the instrument to confer powers calculated in their exercise for the improvement or the deterioration of that important branch of commerce? Did they intend to confer alone the powers of imposing burdens on this valuable internal commerce, such as duties on imports or exports from one to another State; or, by other odious or onerous measures, obstruct this natural and fraternal intercourse between the States? None but a madman could indulge the supposition. If, then, the power designed to be conferred was one beneficial to the nation, and promotive of its prosperity and happiness, will the honorable member from Virginia condescend to inform the Senate with what view, to what purpose, was this "power to regulate commerce between the States" conferred upon the Congress of the United States, if the power to make roads and canals—the only, or almost the only means within the competency of the General Government of promoting, aiding, or facilitating commerce between the States—be denied in the construction of the Constitution? It is not by the erection of fortifications or lighthouses, or fixing buoys within the bosom of the States; this belongs to external or foreign commerce; and in construing the powers of Congress in the regulation of foreign commerce, was proper, and has been approved by the voice of the nation. But, when it concerns the business of improving the internal commerce between the States, the furious partisans of State rights are in arms; the tocsin of alarm is sounded; the territorial rights of the States are about to be invaded as by a foreign foe, for devastation and destruction, and not by a parental Government of your own formation, of your own representatives, elected by yourselves, and legislating in common for themselves and you; by a Legislature, one branch of it coming from the States, citizens of the States, having every endearing motive for upholding its legitimate and sovereign rights; the other elected by the States themselves, which they represent, immediately, in their aggregate or sovereign capacity. And is there danger to be apprehended that a Congress thus constituted can ever be assailed by motive, or exposed to temptation, to invade the territorial rights of States, to the detriment of their true interest, or the infringement of their legitimate State sovereignty? Surely none.

But, passing by this point, on which I have detained the Senate much longer than I had intended, as well from an unfeigned respect for the venerable gentleman who opposes this bill as from the vast importance of the Constitutional question which the gentleman has raised and urged with so much ingenuity, against the adoption of the measure under consideration, the importance of this question, and the measures to which a decision affirming the power of Congress to make roads and canals, which the gentleman questions, I feel with the most anxious and lively sensibility—and, indulging as I do the fervent hope of seeing it result ere long in the adoption of a general system of internal improvements; the adoption of which is my most ardent prayer—I will proceed to make a few remarks on the next ground urged by the gentleman against the adoption of this measure, that is, the inexpediency of passing the bill on your table. And on this point, whatever may be the opinions of honorable gentlemen, here, of the Constitutional powers of Congress to open or establish roads for commerce, for transportation of the mails, or otherwise, I flatter myself that the small appropriation required by this bill for the immediate repair of a road established and completed, now dilapidated, and going rapidly to decay and ruin, will receive the assent of all, or at least of a large majority of this honorable body. For, the question presented for decision now is, not whether the power by which this road was laid out, and by successive acts of appropriations made and completed, during a period of some fifteen or twenty years, with the approbation of so many and such enlightened legislators, under such diversity of circumstances, and under the influences of such infinite variety of political feelings and principles, and sanctioned by such a succession of enlightened and patriotic Presidents, who have filled the Chair of State during the progress of this work—a road which, in its progress and completion, has cost the Government the enormous sum of $1,800,000 was constitutionally established; but, whether that destruction of this beautiful and costly road, which is now progressing with such rapid pace, shall be arrested, and the road placed for once in complete repair, by the appropriation of the sum contemplated in the bill—this is the true, and now the only question. The road is made. The money of the nation has been expended with the approbation and solemn sanction of the nation, expressed through its proper organ, the Representatives of the people in Congress assembled. And shall the appropriation of a small sum of money for its repair and superintendence be now refused, at a crisis when its application is so essential for its preservation from total ruin, and under the full conviction that there is no other power to which an appeal, with the slightest hope of success, except that which is now called upon to act, can or will be made? The States through which it passes, and who, before the adoption of this measure by the General Government, had given their assent, and, with their consent transferred complete jurisdiction and ample authority to the government of the nation to execute the work as one of national concern, and for the nation's good, disclaim all duty or obligation on their part to preserve the road in repair; and it devolves, at least for the present, on the nation, who have executed a work so truly national, to preserve their work from threatened ruin.

JANUARY, 1823.

Cumberland Road Bill.

SENATE.

The rapid and constantly accelerated progress of the decay which this noble work exhibits to the traveller is as much calculated to surprise as to mortify us, and is to be attributed, in a great degree, to the inaccessible and rugged character of the country over which it affords a safe and easy passage across the entire range of the Alleghany mountains, which is traversed by it for some eighty or one hundred miles, winding for some of this distance around heights and precipices of steep and rugged aspect, and almost impassable before the execution of this noble work. From these heights above, the fragments of overhanging rock are often precipitated. The superincumbent earth is often sliding down under the influence of Summer rains and Winter storms, as well as frost, by which the road is filled and obstructed from above, and its artificial bed shoved and propelled on its lower side; by which its final ruin would, in a few years, be effected, without the aid of timely and suitable repairs.

But, the proper time for these repairs has, in the present instance, been suffered to elapse without their application; and to this unfortunate omission in not appropriating the sum required for this purpose at the last session—an omission certainly not ascribable to the body I now address, by which, bills, having this subject in view, passed some two or three different times—it is to be ascribed, that, instead of the sum of $9,000, the sum then deemed and still believed fully adequate to the attainment of an object so desirable, now requires the increased sum of $25,000, which is deemed at present, with the most economical and faithful application, barely adequate to place this road in a state of complete repair. Such has been the fatal influence of delay in the application of a sum so indispensable to an object of such deep and vital interest to several portions of the Union, and one deserving to be cherished by all!

On the great value and importance of this road, Mr. President, it would be superfluous for me to descant. There is surely none so dull or so blind to the true interests of this nation, and to its Government, to the perpetuation of its prosperity and its liberties, as not to see, and, perceiving, not to appreciate.

In a commercial point of view, this noble highway, for the transportation of the goods and merchandise from the mercantile cities, on the Atlantic border, to the West, with the corresponding transfer of the agricultural and other productions of the vast regions beyond the Alleghany mountains to the market of the East—markets which those inhabiting this portion of the Union have so deep an interest to retain—the facility and consequent cheapness of transportation which this road has introduced is almost incredible, and affords the most decisive and conclusive evidence, if any were wanting, of the immense advantages to be derived to internal commerce from the construction of artificial roads. The effect of which, in its practical consequences, is to level and reduce, for all purposes of travelling and transportation, the most rugged, impassable, and inaccessible mountains.

But, if the advantages of such a highway to commerce, to all classes, and in every region almost of our extended empire, and to the poor emigrant, with his one-horse cart, or his Yankee wagon, in transporting himself from the Eastern to the more fertile regions of the West, are so vast, and deserve to be so highly appreciated, of how much more extended and exalted character, in the eye of the patriot and the statesman, whose first wish is the perpetuation to all future times of our happy Union, is such a mean of communication between the two great leading divisions of our widely extended but happy regions? In this, its political point of view, highways like this, Mr. President, present benefits to the nation, inappreciable in the extent of their future happy consequences. In this respect, such highways become one of the strongest bands—one of the firmest cements of union, which the wisdom and benevolence of the enlightened and philosophical statesman can invent or conceive. It is by their agency in furnishing the means and the inducements to frequent, cheap, and easy communication, between the different and distant parts of these United States, the freedom of social and commercial intercourse brings together individuals from the different portions of our empire; gradually wears off those asperities and peculiarities of manner and temper, on either side, by which harmony and good feelings are produced, cherished, and cultivated between citizens of different portions of the Union, who, but for such approximation, are brought by slight and unessential differences in customs, manners, or habits, to despise and to hate each other; and by thus inculcating the new sentiments of brothers of the same great family, the members which compose our great political society are taught to cherish such sentiments of harmony and good will towards each other, and towards the Union, as must tend, more strongly than any other cause, to the perpetuation of the blessings of our Union—the only safeguard for the protection and perpetuation of our inestimable liberties. Such, Mr. President, are the advantages, feebly portrayed or hastily glanced at, to be attained by the opening of roads and canals for the improvement and facility of internal commerce—measures so much and so ardently to be desired, and of which this Cumberland road stands as yet a solitary specimen.

But the venerable gentleman not only objects to the bill on your table, on the grounds of want of Constitutional power to make appropriation for the object contemplated, and the expediency of making such appropriation, were the right to do so fully conceded to Congress, but he takes strong offence at the phraseology of the bill in which this Cumberland road is designated as national. I must confess, Mr. President, whatever may be the feelings or sentiments excited in the gentleman by this designation, to me it seems entirely appropriate, not only as descriptive of the road thus indicated, but as an attribute to which this highway has the fairest and the most unquestioned claim. And that to me it is a subject of pride as well as pleasure, to use a word so truly characteristic of this road as regards its origin, its construction, and its designation. Projected by the wisdom of its counsels, executed with the nation's means, and destined, in all times to come, for the nation's use, and constituting one of its proudest monuments, it is in every sense truly and emphatically national, and one every way entitled to that proud denomination. And I can assure you, Mr. President, that often as it has been my destiny to travel on this highway from the region beyond the mountains, to attend my humble duties in this place, that I never do so without feeling a swell of generous and proud emotion at the reflection that the road I pass on is, in its design and construction, worthy the character of the nation to whom it appertains; was the work of the nation amongst whose citizens I am proud to count myself; and that such a work is not the work or property of any one State, however great, or rich, or powerful, of our immense Confederacy, but of the nation.

This road, Mr. President, is, indeed, a work worthy the nation by whom it was made, and to whom it appertains, and, after the enormous sums which have been expended from its coffers in the construction of such a monument to its wisdom and its glory, I can never persuade myself that the Congress of the United States will incur the reproach of permitting such a work to go to decay and ruin, for want of the small sum required by the bill to place it once more in complete repair, and make it what it was intended to be by those to whom we owe its origin and completion.

When Mr. TALBOT had concluded—

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, followed on the same side. He urged particularly the breach of faith which, if the Cumberland road were allowed to fall into decay, would ensue with the State of Maryland, which had given her consent to make the road through that State, and had subsequently taxed her citizens to make connecting roads. He also contended for the constitutionality and the expediency of internal improvements by the General Government, and replied to Mr. TAYLOR, on that point.

Mr. MACON merely remarked, in reference to an argument used in the debate, that, as this road was authorized originally to be made through the respective States, with their consent, there had not been, so far as the Constitutional question went, any broad Constitutional question settled by the making of the road.

Mr. VAN BUREN offered a few observations on an incidental point touched by Mr. TAYLOR; adding the opinion, that the large expenditure in making this road will have been worse than useless, if it were now suffered to go to decay, and his desire to see it preserved.

The question being then taken on the passage of the bill, it was carried, by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Boardman, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Holmes, of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson, of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, Knight, Lanman, Parrot, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Stokes, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Williams of Mississippi, and Williams of Tennessee—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Findlay, Gaillard, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Smith of South Carolina, and Taylor of Virginia—9.

The bill was then ordered to be sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence.

The Senate then, on motion, adjourned until to-morrow.

JANUARY, 1823.

Suppression of Piracy.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8.

JOHN ELLIOTT, from the State of Georgia, attended this day.

MR. NOBLE presented the memorial of Winthrop Robinson, now of Indiana, praying relief, in consideration of services rendered during the Revolutionary war. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MR. EATON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was recommitted the bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others, reported the same, with an amendment, which was read.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 6th instant, for instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of modifying the act for the establishment of a territorial government in Florida, so as to grant the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 6th instant, for instructing the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to inquire into the expediency of authorizing an interchange of the laws of the several States, by mail, free of postage, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 6th instant, for instructing the Committee on Roads and Canals in relation to stock of the company for making a canal from Delaware river to the Raritan, and agreed thereto.

MR. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, presented the resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, instructing their Senators and Representatives in Congress, in relation to the lands reserved for schools in that State. The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory,'" was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill, entitled "An act in addition to an act to continue in force 'An act to protect the commerce of the United States, and to punish the crime of piracy; and, also, to make further provision for punishing the crime of piracy,'" was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill, entitled "An act to continue the present mode of supplying the Army of the United States," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill, entitled "An act to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims, in the Territory of Michigan," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effects of such copies," was read a third time, and the further consideration thereof was postponed until Saturday next.

The bill entitled "An act to repeal part of an act passed by the State of Maryland, in the year 1784, and now in force in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, entitled 'An act for an addition to Georgetown, in Montgomery county,'" was read a third time, and passed.

The bill concerning the apportionment of representatives in the State of Alabama was read a third time, and passed.

MR. SMITH, of South Carolina, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a lighthouse, or beacon, on Cape Romain, in the State of South Carolina, for the protection and security of the navigation in that vicinity.

MR. SMITH, of South Carolina, presented the petition of John L. Wilson, and others, inhabitants of the State of South Carolina, praying a division of the State into two judicial districts. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MR. BARTON gave notice that to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce a bill to remit to the State of Missouri the postage on certain law books.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan Territory, and for other purposes;" and, also, a bill, entitled "An act making a partial appropriation for the support of Government for the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

SUPPRESSION OF PIRACY.

The resolution offered by MR. RODNEY on Monday, instructing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into the expediency of allowing a bounty to the public armed vessels and private armed vessels of the United States, for prisoners captured and the guns taken by them in any piratical vessel, was read for consideration.

MR. RODNEY said he thought that in the war we were waging against the bucaniers of the West Indian seas, the Government ought to hold out inducements to our officers and seamen, greater than were now offered to them, and thus do all in its power to put a speedy end to the war. In such a warfare, he had no idea that there was any thing like honor to be acquired, and as that stimulus was not afforded to the brave men who would be engaged in prosecuting it, something ought to be held out to them in its place. It was a warfare of much danger; the service was arduous, and the exposure, day and night, which such a service required, was, in those seas, extremely hazardous, from the great liability to the fatal diseases of the climate. He thought, also, that some encouragement ought to be held out to private armed vessels to co-operate, as far as possible, in bringing this war to a close. What that encouragement ought to be, he could not say; that would be left to the wisdom of the Senate. The late war afforded, however, a precedent for his object, and that was the amount of the bounty. In that contest a bounty of $25 for each prisoner was at first allowed, and, subsequently, $50 were granted. The bounty which he proposed, Mr. R. said, would have the further effect of inducing sailors to enter the public service, and thus place promptly in the hands of the officer charged with conducting the expedition (and a most suitable and excellent appointment it was) the means of prosecuting the war effectually. It was demanded by the interest of the country, Mr. R. said, that it should be so prosecuted, and ended as soon as possible, as the commerce of the country had suffered, from the depredations of piracy, a degree of prostration which it had not experienced for a long time before. Under these impressions, he had offered the resolution for the investigation of the Naval Committee.

SENATE.

Drawback on Cordage.

JANUARY, 1823.

The resolution was agreed to.

DRAWBACK ON CORDAGE.

The Senate then, according to the order of the day, resumed the consideration of the bill to allow a drawback on the exportation of cordage manufactured from foreign hemp—the question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. CHANDLER, which provided that the hemp of which the cordage claiming drawback is manufactured, had been imported within one year preceding, &c.

Mr. D'WOLF assigned the reasons why he thought this amendment unnecessary and inexpedient.

Mr. CHANDLER had proposed the amendment on the spur of the moment, and it might be defective; but he thought something of the kind necessary, to prevent ship-owners from exporting to some foreign place the cordage necessary for their own use, to rig their vessels there, as occasion required, and thus get clear of the duties on the hemp used by themselves, by receiving the drawback.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, was in favor of the principle of the amendment. He felt obliged to the gentleman from Rhode Island for bringing this bill forward, but he thought it very unguarded in its provisions. To remedy what he conceived a defect in the bill, he had prepared an amendment, different in form from that before the Senate, and which he read. To give an opportunity for trying this instead of his own, Mr. CHANDLER withdrew his amendment; and Mr. LLOYD then offered the amendment which he had read, but, at the request of Mr. D'WOLF, who wished to offer some remarks on the bill, in reply to its opponents, Mr. L. waived his amendment for the present.

On this the debate was resumed, on the general merits of the bill, and continued until past three o'clock. The discussion embraced a variety of views of the probable effects of the measure, on the navigation, the manufactures, and the revenue of the country—of the condition of the different interests of the nation—what had been done, and what ought to be done, for them respectively, by the Government—the course of trade as pursued to different parts of the world, &c. Mr. D'WOLF,

Mr. LLOYD of Massachusetts, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland, supported the bill; and Mr. DICKERSON and Mr. FINDLAY opposed it—each of the gentlemen at considerable length, and some of them repeatedly. At the close of the general debate—

Mr. LLOYD renewed the amendment he had waived, which was, to require of the person making application for the drawback, to "produce such satisfactory proof to the collector, in the form and under the attestations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, that the cordage so proposed to be exported, was truly made and manufactured exclusively from imported hemp, as stated in said entry."

This amendment was opposed by Mr. D'WOLF, and supported by Mr. LLOYD.

Mr. LOWRIE moved to amend the amendment, so as to confine the operation of the bill to hemp which shall be imported after the passage of the bill; because, if extended to all the hemp and cordage now in the country, it would very materially impair the estimated revenue.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, offered some reasons to show that this amendment would destroy the object and the useful effects of the bill.

The amendment moved by Mr. LOWRIE was agreed to—ayes 21; and then the amendment offered by Mr. LLOYD was agreed to as amended.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays on engrossing the bill and reading it a third time, and was negatived by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Boardman, Chandler, D'Wolf, Holmes of Maine, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Mills, Morril, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Van Buren, and Van Dyke—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Brown of Ohio, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, King of Alabama, Lowrie, Macon, Rodney, Smith of South Carolina, Southard, Stokes, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Ware, Williams of Mississippi, Williams of Tennessee—24.

So the bill was rejected.

THURSDAY, January 9.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to continue the present mode of supplying the Army of the United States," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. RUGGLES presented the petition of Henry Johnson, of Ohio, praying the donation of a small portion of public land, for reasons stated in the petition; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LOWRIE presented the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Philadelphia, praying the erection of certain permanent and floating lights. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. BARTON asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to remit to the State of Missouri the postage on certain law books. The bill was read, and it passed to the second reading.

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of David G. Cowan. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON also presented the petition of David G. Cowan, praying a law may pass, allowing the equitable settlement of his accounts, for reasons therein stated; and the petition was read.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, gave notice that tomorrow he should ask leave to introduce a resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LOWRIE submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the sale of the tracts of the public land on which are lead mines or salt springs, which have heretofore been reserved from sale, or may hereafter be surveyed by the United States.

Mr. EATON presented the memorial of Edward Doyle, praying indemnification for the destruction of his property during the Seminole war. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BENTON presented the petition of James McClung, praying the payment of an outstanding certificate, issued to his father for a horse impressed in the public service. The petition was read, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. NOBLE submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the act of Congress, entitled "An act granting a tract of land to William Conner and wife, and to their children," approved 7th May, 1822, so as to vest the fee simple to the tract of land therein named, in the said William Conner.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, on the militia claims of the State of Georgia, for services rendered under orders of the President of the United States during the years 1792, 3, and 4; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Thursday next.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 8th instant, for instructing the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures to inquire into the expediency of erecting a lighthouse or beacon on Cape Romain, and agreed thereto.

On motion, by Mr. LANMAN, the petition of Samuel Harrison, agent for the heirs of Captain Jonathan Carver, praying for the recognition of an Indian deed for a tract of land near St. Anthony's Falls, on the Mississippi, presented at the first session of the Ninth Congress, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The two bills last brought up from the House of Representatives, for concurrence, were read and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan Territory, and for other purposes," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill, entitled "An act making a partial appropriation for the support of Government for the year 1823," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others, together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on Public Lands; and, the same having been agreed to, it was reported to the House; and, the amendment being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Joseph Forrest; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Joshua Russell; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Senate, according to the order of the day, took up the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt.

Mr. VAN BUREN moved, by way of amendment, a substitute for the bill, embracing several sections, and a variety of provisions, and qualifications of the broad principle laid down in the original bill. He followed his motion with some remarks explanatory of the amendment he offered, and the reasons why he deemed the bill inexpedient without his modifications.

Mr. MILLS, of Massachusetts, also submitted his objections to the bill as originally proposed, the reasons why he could not support it unless materially modified, and certain amendments which he should offer in addition to those already proposed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, replied to both the preceding gentlemen, and defended the bill against their objections.

The bill was then laid over until to-morrow, to give time to prepare the further amendments which had been suggested.

The bill from the House of Representatives concerning the disbursement of public money; reported yesterday from the Committee of Finance, with amendments, was taken up; and, after some explanations by Mr. LOWRIE, they were agreed to, and the bill then postponed to Monday, for the purpose of having it printed as amended.

[The amendments provide—first, that nothing contained in the bill shall be so construed as to restrain the Secretaries of any of the Departments from requiring such returns (besides the returns prescribed by the bill to be rendered every three months by officers in the United States, and every six months by those abroad) from any officer or agent, subject to the control of such Secretaries, as the public interest may require. Secondly, that in all cases where any officer in default shall

SENATE.

Amendment to the Constitution.

JANUARY, 1823.

account to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, such officer may be continued in office, any thing in the bill to the contrary notwithstanding.]

FRIDAY, January 10.

The bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill for the relief of Joshua Russell was read a third time, and passed.

The bill from the House of Representatives, making a partial appropriation for the expenses of Government for the current year, was reported by Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee of Finance, without amendment. The bill was subsequently taken up in Committee of the Whole, and considered, and ordered to a third reading, and was thereupon, on motion of Mr. LOWRIE, read a third time, by general consent, passed, and returned to the House of Representatives.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the ninth instant, in relation to the public lands on which are lead mines or salt springs, and agreed thereto.

The Senate also resumed the consideration of the motion of the ninth instant, in relation to William Conner, and agreed thereto.

The bill to remit to the State of Missouri the postage on certain law books, was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The bill for the relief of David G. Cowan, was read the second time, and referred, together with said Cowan's petition, to the Committee of Claims, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of James Shackelford, and others, and also the petition of Jacob Lindsay and others, reported a bill granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. RODNEY submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to inquire into the expediency of fixing light vessels at or near the shoals called the Brandywine, and Middle Grounds, in the Bay of Delaware, or at such other place or places as may render the navigation thereof more safe and convenient; and also to inquire into the expediency of erecting a lighthouse at Fort Delaware.

The bill entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeably to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeably to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown;" and also a bill entitled "An act to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said two bills were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill entitled "An act to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill to abolish imprisonment for debt was taken up, when

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, submitted some amendments in addition to those offered by Mr. VAN BUREN; and then all the amendments were ordered to be printed, and the bill postponed to Monday next.

The bill from the other House, to continue the present mode of supplying the Army, was taken up in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, observed that, when the act first passed adopting the commissariat system, as it was an experiment in our Military Establishment, it was made temporary and limited to five years. If the system were to be continued, it was now necessary to legislate on it. He for one wished that the system should be made permanent, as it had completely answered the expectations of its friends; but the House of Representatives had thought it best to limit it to five years, and he acquiesced in the limitation.

The bill was reported without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, rose to ask leave (of which he yesterday gave notice) to introduce a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Mr. T. prefaced his motion with a few remarks. He adverted to the circumstances which led to the former amendment of the Constitution in relation to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, by which it was required that the person should be designated for each office by the Electors. He described the evil which that amendment was intended to cure, and said that if it had been foreseen that the evil could occur in a different form, the remedy would have been extended to meet it. Mr. T. deprecated any improper fastidiousness in recurring to the Constitution, either for instruction or for its improvement. If ever the time should arrive when it would be considered as unwise or ridiculous to do so, the powers of the Constitution would become remitted, and merged in legislation and precedents; and we should gradually return to the spirit, the principles, and the practice, of the British Government, where precedent and legislation controlled every thing. Mr. T. inculcated, impressively, a constant attention to the Constitution; the practice of testing every act of legislation by it; and a vigi-

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE:

lant care not only that its powers should be rigorously exercised, but that it should be repaired and improved whenever the public good should require it to be done. If an appropriation of money, he argued, were necessary to repair a public road, it might be said, with equal propriety, that an appropriation of attention and care were necessary to keep the Constitution in repair. Inattention to that, he said, would produce in it furrows and dilapidation, and would bring it into the same disuse that neglect would cause in a public road. Mr. T., after other remarks of the same character, and to enforce the same general sentiment, went on to say that whenever any opinions or wishes were demonstrated to be general with the people, they ought to be attended to and put in practice. It was manifest, he thought, that this was the case in regard to the present mode, in the last resort, of electing the President of the United States, and that the people universally deprecated the election of the President by the House of Representatives. Thinking so, he had sought to provide a remedy, and therefore asked leave to introduce the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States:

"The Electors of a President and Vice President shall meet on the — day of — next preceding the expiration of the time for which the existing President may have been appointed; vote for a President and Vice President, according to the Constitution; and make two lists of all persons voted for, to be signed and certified by them; one to be delivered, sealed, to the President of the United States, within — days thereafter, to be opened and examined by him. And if it shall appear that no person has received the votes of a majority of the Electors appointed, the President of the United States shall forthwith, by proclamation, and also by notifications to the Executive of each State, publish the number of votes given to each person as President. Whereupon, the said Electors shall again meet on the — day of — next succeeding their first meeting, and vote for one of the two persons as President, who shall have received, at their first meeting, the greatest number of votes for that office. Or, if it should happen that more persons than two should have received the greatest number, and also an equal number of votes, the said Electors shall vote for one of them as President. The said Electors shall transmit one of the lists to be made at their first meeting, and also that to be made at their second, (should it take place,) to be proceeded upon as the Constitution has prescribed, except that the person having the greatest number of votes at the second meeting of the said Electors shall be the President. But if two or more persons shall have received the greatest and an equal number of votes at the second meeting of the said Electors, the House of Representatives shall choose one of them for President, in the mode prescribed by the Constitution."

The leave was granted, and the resolution was read, and passed to a second reading.

Adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, January 18.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary of War, to whom was referred the petition of George Ulmer. The report was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports made under an act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana. The reports were read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Archibald F. Macneill, of North Carolina, made a report, accompanied by a resolution that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, presented the petition of John Low, a soldier of the Revolution, praying to be placed on the list of pensioners. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States and certain British colonial ports. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of Walker K. Armistead, praying the passage of a law authorizing the equitable settlement of his accounts. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. DICKERSON presented the petition of Samuel Howell, of New Jersey, praying compensation for services rendered his country during the Revolutionary war. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GAILLARD presented the petition of Sarah Perry of Rhode Island, praying a pension for five years. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. G. also presented the memorial of Lewis A. Petray and Just Viel, merchants of Charleston, South Carolina, praying that certain articles shipped from St. Augustine, when an American port, to Charleston, may be exempted from the payment of duties. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, it was resolved that none of the documents accompanying the President's Message of the 10th December last, be printed for the use of the Senate, excepting the letter from the Society of the United Brethren to the Secretary of War, and the statements marked A and B.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, requesting the President of the United States "to cause to be laid before the Senate the number of arms required, annually, to supply the militia of the West, according to acts of Congress; the probable number necessary to be placed in military depositories, located or to be located, on the Western waters; the cost of transportation of arms to the Western States and deposits; the probable cost of manufacturing arms in the West; the probable cost of erecting, at this time, on the Western waters, such an armory as that at Harper's Ferry, or at Springfield; and such other information as he may deem important to establish the expediency of erecting, on the Western waters, a national armory;" I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of War, containing the desired information.

SENATE.

Claim of Joseph Emerson.

JANUARY, 1823.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, January 10, 1823.

The Message was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of William Thornton, praying a renewal of his patent for certain improvements, particularly in a boiler, reported a resolution, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to authorize the purchase of a number of copies of the sixth volume of the Laws of the United States; the bill to release Amos Muzzy and John White from imprisonment; and, also, the bill, entitled "An act in addition to an act to continue in force 'An act to protect the commerce of the United States, and to punish the crime of piracy,' and, also, to make further provision for punishing the crime of piracy," reported the same, respectively, without amendment.

CLAIM OF JOSEPH EMERSON.

On motion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, the Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the third instant, for instructing the Committee on Foreign Relations respecting the petition and claim of Joseph Emerson and others; and, on the question to agree to the first branch of the resolution, as follows:

"That the petition of Joseph Emerson, and others, praying for indemnity for property illegally captured by the cruisers of the French Republic, in the year 1797, be directed to inquire and report whether the claim of the petitioners was released to the French Government by the United States, by the convention between the two Republics, made and concluded on the 30th of September, 1800, and finally ratified, on the part of France, on the 31st of July, 1801."

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, spoke at considerable length on the subject of his motion—going into the circumstances of the claim, the history of the treaties with France, and the transactions of the times, out of which the claim grew, and on which it relied for support, &c.

Mr. BARBOUR, and Mr. KING, of New York, each spoke at some length on the topics introduced by Mr. H. in his remarks—going to show that the claim was of a class which could not and ought not to be indemnified by the Government; justified the course adopted by the committee, &c.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, rejoined to these gentlemen; and Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, also spoke on the same subject.

The question being taken on agreeing, first, to the first branch of Mr. HOLMES's resolution, it was decided in the negative, by yeas and nays—yeas 4, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Holmes of Maine, Parrott, Rodney, and Smith of Maryland.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Boardman, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Morrill, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of South Carolina, Southard, Stokes, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, Williams of Mississippi, and Williams of Tennessee.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, the Committee on Foreign Relations were discharged from the further consideration of the said petition.

TUESDAY, January 14.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of Lemuel Bent, praying to be exonerated from a judgment obtained against him by the United States. The petition was read and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. LANMAN presented the petition of Phebe Wilcox, stating that her son, Lieutenant Wilcox, on whom she principally depended for her support, was killed during the late war, whilst engaged in the service of his country, and praying that some provision may be made for her relief.—Referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FINDLAY presented the memorial of Henry Huber, and others, of the city and county of Philadelphia, manufacturers of bridle bits, stirrup irons, and coach and harness furniture, praying the protection of the Government. The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a report of the Commissioners of the Navy Pension Fund, made in obedience to the act for the better government of the Navy of the United States; and the letter and report were read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of modifying the act of Congress of the last session, entitled "An act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida," so as better to secure the rights of the citizens of of the said Territory.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Walker, the petition of Joseph L. Dutton, and also the petition of John Martin and others, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel Walker, and others. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 10th instant, for instructing the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures to inquire into the expediency of fixing certain light-

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

vessels and of erecting a lighthouse at Fort Delaware, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, on the petition of William Thornton; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The report of the Committee of Claims, unfavorable to the petition of Archibald McNeill, was taken up, when, Mr. MACON having moved to recommit the report—it was, on motion, laid on the laid.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom the subject had been referred by resolution, made a report adverse to the expediency of modifying the act granting a tract of land to William Conner, his wife and children, so as to vest the fee simple in Conner himself; and the report was read.

The joint resolution, introduced by Mr. TAYLOR of Virginia, proposing an amendment to the Constitution, received its second reading; and, on motion of Mr. BARBOUR, it was ordered to be referred to a select committee.

The bill granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land, was read the second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands, held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effect of such copies," it having been previously read a third time; and resolved that this bill pass.

The bill, entitled "An act to continue the present mode of supplying the Army of the United States," was read the third time and passed.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, and the amendments offered thereto, by Mr. VAN BUREN.

These amendments, as before stated, embrace a variety of provisions, which are, substantially, the following: 1st. They make the act prospective, so as not to interfere with the remedies of the parties upon existing contracts. 2. They except from the exemption secured by the act, all cases of moneys received by public officers, and, generally, all cases of moneys received by persons acting in a representative character. They also except all cases of action brought for torts. 3d. In the excepted cases the amendments provide, that if it shall be made to appear to the court, that the money for which the suit is brought was either corruptly received or fraudulently withheld, the defendant shall be subject to actual imprisonment, without the privileges of the jail now allowed, until the debt be paid, or the defendant discharged by due course of law. 4th. They authorize arrest and bail when it shall be made to appear that there is reason to believe that the defendant is about to depart from the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, rose and addressed the Senate about two hours on the general merits of the measure he had proposed by this bill.

Before Mr. J. had concluded his remarks, he gave way for a motion for adjournment; and some time after 3 o'clock, the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, January 15.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, presented the petition of Edward Evat, of Baltimore, praying compensation for a house consumed by fire, in the year 1815, while occupied by a detachment of United States' troops. The petition was read and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, communicated to the Senate the preamble and resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Maryland, [published at large, in the proceedings of the House of Representatives,] approving the general policy of the Federal Government, in relation to the defences of the nation, the increase of the Navy, &c. The resolutions were read and laid on the table.

Mr. KING, of New York, presented the petition of Eleanor Lawrence, of New York, praying indemnity for injury sustained in consequence of the occupation of her farm by the troops of the United States, and the erection thereon of military works, in the late war with Great Britain. The petition was read and referred to the Secretary of War, to consider and report thereon to the Senate.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to make perpetual an act passed the 3d day of March, 1817, entitled 'An act to continue in force an act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed 3d day of March, 1815, and for other purposes," reported the same, without amendment.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory,'" reported the same, with an amendment; which was read.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Henry P. Willcox, administrator on the estate of Joseph Willcox, deceased, made a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Willcox; and the report and bill were read, and the bill passed to the second reading.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Samuel Odlin, of Lubec, in the State of Maine, stating that he had made a contract with Lewis F. Delesdernier, late Collector of the Port of Passamaquoddy, for a certain parcel of land, which he had paid for and improved, without receiving a title therefor; which said land has been attached by, and since set off to, the United States, as Delesdernier's property. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate of the 10th instant, instructing said committee to inquire into the expediency of amending the act granting a tract of land to William Conner and wife, and to their children; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved, that it is not expedient to amend the said act of Congress in the manner contemplated in the before mentioned resolution of the Senate, of the 10th of January, 1823.

SENATE.

Imprisonment for Debt.

JANUARY, 1823.

The Senate then proceeded to the appointment of a select committee, for the reference of Mr. TAYLOR's proposed amendment to the Constitution; and Messrs. TAYLOR, of Virginia, KING, of New York, MACON, DICKERSON, and SMITH, of South Carolina, were appointed the committee.

The Senate took up the resolution offered yesterday by Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, proposing an inquiry into the expediency of so amending the act establishing a Territorial government in Florida, as better to secure the rights of the people thereof.

In submitting this resolution yesterday, Mr. J. observed, that the Committee on the Judiciary had been instructed, a few days ago, at his instance, to inquire into the propriety of modifying the act of the last session, providing for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida, so as to grant the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, in certain cases; but he had since been apprized of the necessity of several material amendments to the said act, in relation to other subjects. With the view, therefore, of referring them generally to the committee, he had offered the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

The bill to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States and certain British colonial ports, was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Walker, and others, was read the second time.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Senate then resumed, in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, under process from the United States courts.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, concluded the speech he commenced yesterday in support of the general principle of the bill, and on the amendments offered thereto. His remarks are given in full, as follows:

It is easier (said Mr. JOHNSON) to convince my own mind of the impropriety of abolishing imprisonment for debt, I fear, than by communicating my views to carry conviction to the bosoms of others. I am conscious that public speaking is not my forte; but, on this important subject, it has become my duty to present to the Senate my sentiments.

The power of a creditor to imprison his debtor is the only case in the United States where, among freemen, one citizen has legal authority to deprive his co-equal fellow-citizen, at discretion, of the right of personal liberty. It constitutes an awful exception, both in our civil and criminal code, which, in my humble opinion, is repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution. In the case of minors, it is true, the parent has a limited control over his child, the guardian over his ward, and the master over his apprentice; but this power is necessarily given only on account of the minority of the subject.

When the years of infancy are past, and man attains to the age of freedom, our laws regard his personal liberty too sacred to be annihilated by his own voluntary act. If a man, by solemn contract, binds himself to serve another, even if the reward of that service is paid at its commencement, the contract is void in law, and cannot be enforced. A failure to perform the service will only subject the person to the payment in money of the amount of damages incurred; but the power does not exist to deprive him of his freedom, nor to extort his personal service without his own consent. Personal liberty is not permitted to enter into the contemplation of either party, as any part of the consideration for the fulfilment of the contract, or the penalty for its violation. You must confide in his honor, or look to his effects for relief if he deceives you. An action for damages alone can be sustained; for, however strong your claim may be to his personal service, the principle is deemed too dangerous to be tolerated in a free government, to permit a man, for any pecuniary consideration, to dispose of the liberty of his equal. But, in cases of debt, our present law, regardless of the honesty or the misfortunes of the debtor, gives to the creditor this sovereign power over his person—a power too sacred to be abridged by his own act, to lodge him in prison at discretion. You vest the creditor with the prerogative of Heaven, without imparting to him its attributes of righteousness or mercy; the power to execute vengeance where there is no crime, and to inflict punishment without trial or proof of guilt.

Let us examine whether there is any solid foundation on which this barbarous practice, this anomaly in our laws, can find support. I will advance it, as an incontrovertible principle, that poverty is no crime; nor is a failure to fulfil a pecuniary engagement, when prevented by misfortune, in any degree associated with guilt. The victim of penury is a proper object of sympathy and benevolence. If there is a spark of divinity remaining in fallen man, it inspires this sentiment, and the revelation of God's will to his creature confirms it. A striking illustration of this is given us in the miraculous interference of Heaven on behalf of a poor widow, recorded in the Old Testament. Her husband had been a righteous man, though reduced to insolvency. After his death an unrelenting creditor, like those for whose malicious pleasure this law exists, was threatening to sell her two sons into bondage to pay the debt of their deceased father. She cried to a prophet for advice. Moved with divine compassion he raised a cry to Heaven in her behalf, and the Almighty interposed, by increasing her only remaining store, a solitary cruse of oil, into an abundance equal to the relief which her necessity demanded. Had poverty been a crime, in the sight of God, she would not have been rescued from its consequence by a miracle.

Riches carry influence into every society. Wealth is power. But analyze merit, and it is found to consist in virtue, in honor, in benevolence. It is a fundamental principle in our institutions, and a uniform sentiment in social life, that the worth of every man depends alone on his mental endowments and his moral qualities; and I believe there never has been a criminal code, either in ancient or modern times, which denounced poverty as a crime. There exists, in most communities, a pride of property, under the influence of which the rich will refuse to associate with the indigent, and even imbibe sentiments of superiority over the laboring class of society. This spirit, thank Heaven, is less predominant in the United States than in any other region of the civilized world; but even here it is not utterly exploded; yet this vain, this domineering, this purse-proud spirit, among the few creatures who possess it, has never dared to stigmatize poverty or misfortune with the imputation of guilt. Even Draco, in his bloody code, with all his eagerness in search of crime, that he might punish it with death, never introduced poverty into his black catalogue. But here we punish fraud and misfortune indiscriminately. Our laws make no distinction between the honest and the dishonest debtor.

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

The honest victim of disappointment, when all his fair prospects are blasted by the unforeseen accident, which rends from him in a moment the honest gains of many industrious years, must, at this unpropitious moment, be torn from the embraces of his family, and dragged to the felon's den, where nothing but a wall of stone or brick separates him from the murderer. His poverty is made a crime of so deep a hue, as to transcend the pardoning power of the Government; and neither the tears of his wife nor the cries of his helpless children can restore him to them, nor his industry to their support, till the vengeance of an incensed creditor shall be satiated.

It will not be denied that imprisonment is a punishment; and what is the language of the law when applied to the criminal code? It is better for ten guilty men to escape than for one innocent person to suffer. This doctrine of mercy is extended in these enlightened days, and the sentiment is universally approbated, that it is better for ninety-nine guilty persons to escape than that one innocent person should be punished; but, in the civil code, these humane maxims are most cruelly violated by vesting in the creditor a discretionary power over the body of the debtor, without proof, or even a charge of fraud or dishonesty. My object is to protect the innocent and punish the guilty; and, to effect both of these purposes, guilt must be made manifest by conviction on an impartial trial, and not presumed against every appearance of fact. As the law now exists, guilt is presumed, but not proven; and though we admit the fact that a debtor may be guilty of fraud by concealment, or conveyance of property without a valuable consideration, we do also know that he may be unfortunate, and yet honest.

We have not yet read of a monster so bold in cruelty, and so regardless of the esteem of mankind, as to avow the disposition to punish innocence. Caligula, and even Nero, professed to punish guilt alone. Though without trial, and without proof, they sacrificed their subjects, yet they pretended to have the secret knowledge of some crime to justify their cruelty. But an appeal to facts will prove that inability to meet pecuniary engagements does not furnish prima facie evidence of fraud. It may be received as the evidence of misfortune—of the want of foresight, or of indiscretion; but our present system regards it in the light of conviction of fraud, and delivers over the body to the arbitrary decision of the creditor. This is the essence of tyranny. It is a violent outrage upon the humane maxim of the law, which presumes every person innocent till his guilt is established upon certain evidence; and we have a grievous sin to answer for, in permitting a principle so sacred to be thus violated.

But, it is said, that no honorable man will abuse this power. If this were the fact, and if all men were truly honorable, my feeble efforts to-day would be worse than useless. But, sad experience tells us, that even honorable men, so called, when lured by the love of wealth, and made judges in their own cause, are not always entitled to confidence. Saul of Tarsus, when blinded by bigotry, though a learned, and doubtless an honorable man, verily thought he did God service in persecuting the saints. But, admit that no honorable man will misuse this power, are all creditors honorable? They are not; and we arm the dishonorable with the tyrant's rod, to scourge the innocent.

Millennial days have not yet commenced. Satan is not yet bound, and man is not restored to his pristine purity. The history of the world shows us, that depraved man, savage or civilized, is the same in every country, and in every age, when placed under the same circumstances; and that arbitrary power cannot be safely confided to any human being. He will abuse it. For this reason, the Constitution of the United States has wisely imposed limitations upon the powers of Congress. We cannot abridge the freedom of speech, nor restrict the rights of conscience. Why this limitation upon our power? Because it is liable to abuse. The wisdom and virtue of the whole nation concentrated, are not sufficient to guard against the misuse of power without restriction; and it should never be imparted unless indispensable. Necessity requires that powers, and transcendent too, should be vested in the Government; but they should be confined to the Government, and not transferred to citizens in their individual character.

It is far from my desire to limit the power of the creditor over the property of his debtor. It is the sacred duty of Government to protect every individual in the quiet and absolute enjoyment of his honest acquisitions; and it is perfectly clear, in my mind, that our laws should recognise an interest of the creditor in the possessions of his debtor. If, in case of debt, the remedy against the property is too limited, let it be extended; give it the greatest latitude; but confine its operation to that object, and do not carry it to personal liberty. I believe the power of attachment against property is already complete, with but few exceptions; and if the system can be perfected, let it be done. The whole property of the debtor is subject to execution, except the tools of the mechanic, the utensils of the farmer, and perhaps, in some instances, a bed for the wife and children to lie down and mourn, when all their other dependence is gone, and the prison doors are barred upon the husband and the father. In one or two of the States, the real property is also shielded from execution; but there are very few exceptions to the general rule.

In case of fraud, the creditor has his remedy at common law or in chancery, and where the fact can be established of fraudulent concealment or conveyance, such property is made liable to execution and sale. If modern experience can suggest an improvement in the wisdom of ages, let the system be made still more complete. Take the little that is reserved. Strip the debtor of every thing that can benefit the creditor; but do not take that which will degrade the man, reduce his wife to an unnatural widowhood, the children untimely orphans, and inflict the keenest wound upon the whole family, without one solitary advantage to the creditor, except the infernal pleasure of gratifying the most diabolical of all human passions, the revenge of a vindictive spirit.

Every person who enters into a contract, containing stipulations to be executed in future, is sensible of some hazard in the performance. The events of futurity are beyond the power of human control. Not even the angels of Heaven can govern events; they are reserved to the Almighty himself, who alone controls the destinies of the Universe, and directs the affairs of men. Should angels enter into executorial obligations, unless by divine instruction, they, as well as feeble mortals, might fail to comply with their engagements. Contracts are always reciprocally voluntary; and there is nothing in their nature which can justify cruel and barbarous remedies for the injury sustained by their non-fulfilment.

The love of money is the root of all evil; and while we secure to each, as far as human foresight can secure, the enjoyment of his wealth, we should be careful not to increase this love by artificial stimulants. Riches are the idol of the world, and ever have been; and we should rather seek expedients to moderate our passion for wealth, than to increase it. It is dangerous to society, and ruinous to our own souls. Remember the rich man. His lands brought forth abundantly, and his profusion was his god. While transported with all the raptures of false devotion, holding a delightful soliloquy on the future enjoyments which his wealth would afford, "Soul, take thy fill, thou hast much treasure in store for many years," the awful summons of death arrested him: "thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee, and then whose shall these things be?" His palaces and his gardens were exchanged for a coffin and a tomb. Such may be the lot of him who holds in confinement his fellow-man, for the love of the same idol; and the public body that gives its legal sanction, may share with him the reward. The Gospel inculcates the sentiment of mercy to our debtors, and the dispensation of charity to the poor. Our Saviour taught his followers to pray for mercy on no other principle than that of dispensing it. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." The gates of Heaven were unfolded to receive Lazarus, a poor mendicant on earth, while they were barred against the rich man in his purple robes, who refused him the crumbs that fell from his table. While these lessons of divine instruction teach us to moderate our desire after wealth, and to extend benevolence to the indigent, our laws encourage hardness of heart and avaricious dispositions, by authorizing us to pursue our debtors with unrelenting severity. We follow him with all the angry rigor of the law, in hope to make him disgorge some hidden treasure; but the pursuit is unavailing. Upon the honest and unfortunate, degradation and ruin are the only and certain consequences; but its effects on the fraudulent are to produce perjury and corruption, without procuring relief to the prosecutor.

It is said, that imprisonment for debt, under the mild execution of the law which now prevails, is a mere shadow; and it may sometimes coerce the payment of debts, if it should be continued. If this is but a shadow, where is the substance fled; and why does it blush to appear? If the law is so barbarous that honorable men are unwilling to execute it, then, for the honor of the country, I beseech you blot it out of your civil code, and suffer it not to exist for those who are so lost to honor, as to make it their resort. But the history of its practice proves that it is more than a dead letter. It is the tyrant's rod and the poor man's terror. In cities, where the density of population renders the evil more visible, their prisons are never solitary. A good man in adversity is pursued by a combination of creditors, each with a separate demand, to procrastinate the period when he hopes to relieve himself from a loathsome prison by the only legal resort, a degrading oath. As soon as one creditor has finished his course of prosecution, another commences, and thus he is continually harassed, till his spirits are broken; his credit destroyed; his prospects blasted; his moral influence sunk; and frequently he is compelled to abandon the society of his dearest friends, where he might have survived his misfortunes, but for this legalized cruelty of which he is made the victim.

The object of Government is to secure us in the enjoyment of our rights, and to guard them against every violation, unless forfeited by crime. Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, are inalienable. In what manner is the personal liberty of the citizen shielded by the Constitution? The writ of habeas corpus cannot be suspended, unless, in times of civil war or foreign invasion, the public safety may require it. Every freeman is secured in his person, his house, his papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures. No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or other infamous crime, unless on the presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except cases arising in the land and naval forces. No man shall be compelled to testify against himself. The accused shall enjoy the right of a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury—to be informed of the nature of the accusation—to be confronted with his accusers—to have compulsory process to obtain his witnesses, and to have counsel for his defence. These are some of the principles contained in the Constitution, to shield personal liberty from encroachment. But, in the case of imprisonment for debt, where no discrimination is made between innocence and guilt, they are all abandoned; and the political maxims contained in the Declaration of Independence are set at naught. The feelings of humanity are outraged—innocence is punished—the moral law disregarded—the precepts of the Gospel put at defiance; all this you do to obtain the pound of flesh nearest the heart of the unfortunate debtor.

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

It is said that imprisonment for debt is not a punishment, but a means to reach some hidden treasure. These means are resorted to without even presumptive evidence as to existence of this hidden treasure; not even the form of a trial is necessary. The will of the party is sufficient; and, in nine cases out of ten, the ca. sa. is issued where the presumption of innocence is in favor of the debtor. We first punish and then inquire into the guilt of the prisoner.

In France such was the practice, when obnoxious persons were arrested by letters de cachet, and for years consigned to the Bastille. The Spanish inquisition used the torture, not as a punishment, but as a means to extort confessions of guilt from suffering innocence. Suspicions of political or religious heresy constituted the offence. We shall discover the character of these means by reading the history of John Calistos, whose limbs were mangled with chains, and whose joints were dislocated by the torture of the inquisition, for the purpose of extracting confessions of guilt which had no existence.

It is our duty to examine into the constituent principles of national strength, and to cherish and preserve them. Do they consist in numbers, in riches, in the salubrity of the climate and richness of the soil, in commerce, in manufactures, in agriculture, in internal improvements? These compose only a part of the elementary principles of national power. In addition to these there is a moral power which is more important to preserve; and without which Greece could not have repulsed their Persian invaders—Rome could not have conquered the world; and the United States could not have sustained their independence against a foe so powerful. This moral power, which is so important to the prosperity of every nation, consists in the love of liberty—devotion to country—in high-minded, honorable, gallant, magnanimous, and virtuous feelings. Nothing selfish or sordid—nothing avaricious or effeminate.

To preserve this moral power in its greatest purity and vigor, every citizen should be secured in the pursuit of happiness, and protected from violence. He should never be degraded unless he has been guilty of crime. Equality of rights should be preserved; the law should carefully avoid giving one citizen a control over the personal liberty of another.

Even in criminal prosecutions, no freeman can be arrested for a moment, unless the accusation is supported by the oath of a competent witness, defining the crime and describing the person. Self-preservation and the most obvious dictates of reason, point out this course. In case of guilt, you operate upon the person, and not the property of the criminal. Corporal punishment alone can satisfy the violated law. In these cases the accused has a right to bail, except in capital offences; and even then it is allowed, unless the guilt is made manifest or the presumption strong. But how is it with the poor debtor, when punished by imprisonment? You do not require the oath of the party, that he has good ground to believe there has been a fraudulent concealment or conveyance of property; but, in the first instance, the creditor may issue his ca. sa.—and confine his debtor in jail in the same manner as if he had been regularly arrested, tried, and convicted of crime by an impartial jury. If the debtor be innocent you can never recall the punishment; nor has he any redress for such barbarity.

The creditor may derive satisfaction from the hope of expecting payment from the friends and relations of the unhappy sufferer. In this way you seal his destruction, and reduce his family to extreme misery. Stimulated by a vain hope, and entertaining a suspicion, the offspring of avarice, the unrelenting creditor pursues his victim already reduced to want and wretchedness.

The legitimate fund, for the payment of debts, is composed of the real and personal property of the debtor. Both are visible and tangible. The real cannot be removed; and the personal property is subject to execution wherever it can be found. But this does not satisfy the law. The body must also be subject to execution, although the imprisonment of the body pays no part of the debt.

I would say, fraud deserves punishment; but the prosecution should be based upon the oath of the party who makes accusation. And instead of presuming guilt, requires its manifestation by an impartial jury. Then the punishment would be inflicted as a violation of the penal code.

When the character of the debtor is converted into that of the criminal, then it would be legitimate and proper to demand bail to compel his appearance; because the vengeance of the law is to operate upon the person of the individual, if convicted of guilt.

To permit an unfortunate debtor to be confined in prison is immoral and criminal in the Government. The remedy provided by law for the creditor against the property of the debtor is complete—if defective, make it perfect. To clothe the creditor with the transcendent and despotic power of imprisonment, without even the allegation of fraud, is a monstrous usurpation on the part of the Government, and violatory of the theory as well as the practice of our political system in every other department. Upon the fraudulent debtor the capias ad satisfaciendum, by which the body is arrested, has no effect, his mind is not alarmed at the iron doors of the prison; his heart is not torn to pieces by wounded pride and virtuous sensibility. He will not disclose, but will find means to conceal his hidden treasure, until he relieves himself from confinement by due course of law. From such men you gain nothing by imprisonment; but you must resort to legal and equitable remedies, by which concealed effects, or property fraudulently transferred are made liable to execution to satisfy the demand.

When you arrest the unfortunate and honest man, and cast him into prison, his prospects are blasted, and his hopes are withered, as the plants and vegetation is destroyed by the influence of the Bohon Upas, the poisonous tree of Java—the body is confined; but the debt remains, and is hourly increasing in magnitude—his future anticipations are overspread with clouds, his credit is injured, his usefulness to society is impaired—the peace of his family is interrupted, and while confined in prison, he leaves behind him a wife with weeping eyes and a bleeding heart.

The misery of which this system is productive, has been denied with a boldness which excites astonishment. To justify its continuance, and prevent its repeal, it has been represented as purely nominal. When facts innumerable, and the experience of every day, furnish conclusive evidence that it is a source of incalculable distress; and that distress, in a majority of cases, falls with a heavy hand upon those who are entitled to our commiseration. In our cities, there is not a day in which the honest debtor is not taken into custody. Our city prisons are never empty, and often crowded; and this calamity is increased by the reflection, that it is confined principally to the laboring poor, and those who, by some honest calling, have supported themselves and enriched their country. The cases of imprisonment are more rare in the country. But, even there, they frequently occur. When we behold the lion in his iron cage, surrounded by admiring spectators; when we see the leopard chained to the pillar—reason justifies the salutary restraint, and no inquiries are made into the causes of the confinement. When we behold the midnight incendiary, the highway robber, or the assassin, in the custody of your law, humanity acquiesces in the justice of the measure. But when we behold the honest debtor, who has been unfortunate, carried through your streets by an executive officer, as a felon, and consigned to the jailer, his wife and his children walking beside him, with melancholy aspect, and willing to share his fate, rather than to be separated from him, reason revolts, humanity drops a tear upon our fallen condition, and the tender heart bleeds at the sad spectacle. The feeling of indignation becomes universal, and your laws are pronounced cruel and barbarous. The debtor becomes the slave of the creditor, not to perform manual labor in discharge of the debt, but doomed to idleness in a loathsome jail, erected by contributions upon the people, for the confinement of criminals. Deprived of locomotion—denied of the comforts which fall to the lot of the most indigent, his only work is to notch down the days of his captivity, like the unfortunate prisoner represented by Sterne in such glowing colors. That veneration for the Constitution which should swell every bosom, is weakened. It is this degrading system which demoralizes the honest man, and prepares the desperate debtor for treason, stratagem, and war.

If your system had deprived him of property only, he would have survived the wreck of misfortune; but you not only deprive him of his property, you also make him a bankrupt in credit, in reputation, and in happiness. No man can be free whose personal liberty, whose personal independence, can, for a moment, be disposed of at the will of another. So long as that shall be the case, it is in vain to talk of liberty; for you destroy in the citizen that devotion to freedom which inspired that virtuous Roman, who declared, that "a day, an hour of virtuous liberty, was worth a whole eternity of bondage." It was a sentiment which gave power to Rome. It is a demonstration of the moral power of that community. It was inspired by devotion to liberty, and is worthy the character of an American citizen. It is a feeling that ought to be cherished by every independent nation. The preservation of personal independence, is not incompatible with the most sacred regard for the right of property. Every wise and just Government will preserve the one and the other. We contend only for equality of rights. We do not expect to preserve an equality of worldly honors and riches. These are the result of moral and mental endowments. In no age or nation do we find men endowed with equal talents, capacity, fortitude, industry, and acquirements. The result of this is the inequality of property and fame; and as it arises from the gift of Heaven, and our own exertions, no Government can wisely or justly arrest our career, or disturb the fruition of our labors. It is our imperious duty, while we guard these natural advantages, to be careful how we give, by artificial stimulants, political advantages to one class of citizens, over another. It is upon this great principle of equal rights, that the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are based. They denounce privileged orders—they denounce private monopolies. It is the reverse of this system which has been the prolific fountain of so much calamity to other nations, and which has produced the wreck of so much human happiness. In the most perfect state of society, this world is little more than a house of mourning; and it is our high duty to alleviate the distresses of our own people—to smoothe the rugged path of life—to turn the sorrows of the unfortunate into joy, and to dissipate the clouds of adversity.

Upon a careful examination of the operations of this tremendous power over personal liberty, I can see nothing to justify it. I can see no salutary effect to excuse this great departure from our free institutions. Society is not enriched, because the victim is deprived of useful employment. It does not extort from the fraudulent his ill-gotten treasure, because he has already put it beyond the reach of his creditor. It does not benefit the creditor, because, without this rigor, the honest debtor will surrender his property. But touch not

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

this ancient custom, is the language of some. The same language was held during the Revolutionary conflict in relation to kingly government, because it was consecrated by ages. Tyrants and despots had governed the world. The same language might be held in relation to the holy inquisition, which has existed for centuries past. The same language is applicable to the Union of Church and State, which had existed from the darkest ages of antiquity, when the Delphic Oracle uttered its responses to the surrounding nations. Notwithstanding this appeal to the authority of antiquity, there is a total revolution in these particulars except upon the subject now under discussion.

We carry no religious heretics to the stake; we disfranchise no citizen for his religious tenets—we burn no witches, although we read of them—yet we are happy in the conviction that we are as powerful in tolerating, in all cases, error of opinion where reason is left free to combat it. I have the happiness to believe that we should have no cause of regret, if from this day to the end of time no freeman could be imprisoned for debt in the United States of America. The human mind unfortunately is inclined to superstition, fanaticism, and tyranny. The early history of this country proves the fact; and happy for the human race that the general diffusion of knowledge, the freedom we enjoy, and the protection given to each individual generally, stays the hand of persecution, and deprives of its terrors the spirit of despotism. When the Saviour of men came to break down the partition wall between the Jew and the Gentile, he was reproached with having violated the Sabbath, when he restored the blind man to his sight, when he gave life and strength to the withered hand, when he cured the infirm female, and when the palsied limbs were restored by the powers of his word; but he rebuked his accusers, and told them, if their oxen or sheep were to fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, they would think it no crime to lift them out. There is no part of the character of our Saviour more lovely and more worthy of imitation than that in which he relieved the poor in distress and affliction, the children of misfortune. If we who advocate this measure believe that we have this memorable example before us for our imitation in giving relief to unfortunate debtors, I hope we may not be stigmatized with an attempt to lessen the legitimate fund of the creditor, but to prevent Shylock from taking his pound of flesh, when, by unavoidable accident, the demand could not be punctually discharged.

It is a fact notorious in the history of all nations, that the arbitrary and uncontrolled power which has been vested in the creditor has convulsed to its centre almost every community; and that all nations have been compelled to resort to harsh and temporary expedients, or to adopt some permanent system of relief, to save them from revolution and civil war; thus performing the salutary operation of the safety-valve in regulating the tremendous power of steam. The Jews had their jubilee, which restored to every man his inheritance; and the release, which existed every seven years, when the captive debtor who had been sold into bondage was restored to his liberty. At Athens, Draco's code of laws contained no permanent system of relief. The criminal and civil code were alike rigid and severe. The consequences were fatal to the repose of that people. The Republic was involved in the most alarming commotions. The harmony of society was totally destroyed, and revolution was threatened. The debtors convened in various parts, and determined by solemn resolutions to elect a military chieftain to lead them on to their purpose, which was to obtain a new division of property—to put to death their creditors, and to new model the Government. The creditors had exercised to the full extent the powers which the law had granted for the collection of their demands; the insolvent debtor was reduced to absolute slavery, doomed to the most servile employment, put to the draught like beasts of burden, in the cultivation of their farms. The sons and daughters of the debtor were sent to foreign countries, and sold into slavery. In this crisis, it was doubtful who was most powerful and likely to prevail, the rich creditors with those who managed their farms and worked the mines of Attica, or the debtors, with those who espoused their cause. In this situation, it was unanimously agreed upon to have recourse to an amicable settlement of the difference; and Solon, a man of distinguished talents, virtue, and integrity, was unanimously elected. It is very evident, from the history of Greece at this moment, that the power of the creditor over the debtor was the chief cause of this alarming condition of the Commonwealth. The very first act of Solon's administration was to abolish existing debts, and totally to destroy the power of the creditor over the body of his debtor. But he refused to make a new division of property; and every individual was made secure in the enjoyment of his possessions. Both parties submitted to these measures; and thus, by this harsh measure, Solon saved the Republic. A permanent system of justice confining the remedy against the property of the debtor would have saved the historian the trouble of recording these melancholy scenes.

In Rome we have the same example. We will pass over the history of that mighty nation, until we come to the expulsion of Tarquin the Proud, when a republic was substituted for kingly government. It was after this period, and in the best days of Roman liberty, that the law of the twelve tables existed, containing a system of cruelty, relative to debts, which is a blot upon the human character. After judgment was obtained, the debtor was allowed thirty days of grace; he was then committed to the custody of his creditor; he was loaded with chains, not to exceed fifteen pounds weight. In this condition it was his privilege to be exposed three times in the market place, to ascertain if his friends or countrymen would relieve him. If no friendly hand extended relief, at the end of sixty days the debt was discharged with the loss of life or liberty. For, be it remembered, if two or more creditors were so unfeeling, they had the right to divide the body of the debtor, or to sell him into foreign slavery beyond the Tiber. This cruel proceeding was not confined to the worthless vagrant, the idle and dissipated, but it embraced, and actually operated upon, the brave defenders of Roman liberty—those who had bravely faced the foe in danger, had repelled the foreign invader, and carried about them the honorable scars of their gallantry. This arbitrary power, so barbarously exercised, produced the most dangerous convulsions and alarming disaffection in the Roman Commonwealth. The ruin which threatened the very existence of that Government was so great that they resorted to the extraordinary expedient of appointing a dictator, who was clothed with absolute power and dominion. The army refused to meet the foes of their country, and the people, en masse, refused to volunteer their services to repel even invasion while they saw a Roman citizen scourged by a merciless creditor, and his body bleeding from the severity of the punishment. The tribunitial power in Rome had the same origin; it was the offspring of the despotic power which was vested in the creditor. The people demanded these officers, with power to protect their personal independence. If Rome had confined the power of the creditor to the property of the debtor, these civil wars and disorders never would have existed. Yet, notwithstanding the light of history, and the warning voice of experience, we shut our eyes, and refuse to profit by them. This savage custom existed in Rome until it produced a reaction in favor of the debtor. One extreme is frequently productive of its opposite; for, when the Christian emperors ascended the throne of the Cæsars, they established a code by which the debtor was released forever from the discharge of his debts, provided he would take an oath that he had not property sufficient to discharge all. It was now no longer lawful to sell the debtor for the discharge of his debts. Christianity triumphed over Paganism, and the precepts of the Gospel forbade the infamous traffic. When the creditor lost this power to reduce the debtor to bondage, avarice quickened into life a thousand projects to gain an equivalent; and, unfortunately for mankind, wealth triumphed over poverty. By the connivance of the courts, and by the stratagems of creditors, debtors were first held to bail upon presumption of fraud without proof; and the plan was consummated by granting the ca. sa. after judgment, in virtue of which the body was confined to close jail, and doomed to perpetual imprisonment. This was the substitute for the power of selling the debtor and his family into slavery.

In Great Britain, from whence we have drawn much of our jurisprudence, this system is still in operation, without the relaxation of insolvent laws, except in debts of small amount; and, in that case, the party has the benefit of an insolvent law, provided his creditors do not resolve upon his confinement, at their own expense.

It must not be omitted here, that the system of bankruptcy established in Great Britain, by which both the body and the future acquisitions of the party are exempt from existing demands against him, is confined to the mercantile class of the community. And, while thousands are doomed to perpetual imprisonment in that island, which, in many respects, may boast of its liberty, the partial relief given to that nation, by this system of bankruptcy, operates as the safety valve, and, together with the strong arm of Government, prevents disorders and convulsions like those recorded in Roman history. Whenever the body is taken, in Great Britain, under the ca. sa., it is considered as the legal extinguishment of the debt; and the only satisfaction which the creditor can enjoy, is the perpetual confinement of the prisoner, unless there be a voluntary payment of the demand. This identical system has been adopted in every State in the Union, with some modification, embracing a relaxation of the system, so far as to give to the party the benefits of insolvent laws, upon conditions more or less degrading and severe, according to the policy of the respective States. This is a concise history of the origin, progress, and present state of this abominable system. It originated in ages of barbarism, and its cruelty has been refined by avarice, while the condition of man has been ameliorated in every other respect by the light of civilization. The relaxation of this barbarous system, in the present age of reason and philosophy, is urged as an argument to sustain the tottering fabric, and to prolong its existence. When Mary, the sanguinary queen of England, deprived her unfortunate subjects of the rights of conscience, and consigned them to the devouring flames as heretics, many of whom were distinguished for true piety—Cranmer, Ridley, and Rogers—what should we think of that argument which would seek to deny the perfect right of conscience, because, instead of the fire and fagot, the exercise of that inestimable privilege would only be attended with political disfranchisement or corporal punishment? With due deference to the opinions of others, to me it appears the argument would be as rational as for any gentleman to contend for the present system of imprisonment, in consequence of its relaxation. If the relaxation of the system proves any thing, it is the impolicy and injustice of the principles it contains, and furnishes a strong argument for its total abolition. Every change in the system, which has lessened the inhumanity and injustice of the measure, is a demonstration that the sentiment of mankind, in the progress of civilization, is in favor of its entire annihilation.

Governor Plumer, of New Hampshire, Governor Robertson, of Louisiana, Governor Adair, of Kentucky, and Governor Wilson, of South Carolina, have all recommended to their respective States to abolish imprisonment for debt; and, in the bold and patriotic language of distinguished freemen, have denounced the practice as sanguinary and as a foul blot upon our national character. In many parts of New England, the prison bounds are extended to the limits of the township or county in which the prison is located. The Legislative Council of Michigan have extended the jail limits to the bounds of the county. Kentucky has totally abolished the system. I understand that Missouri and North Carolina have done the same. In France, which contains 30,000,000 of inhabitants, imprisonment for debt has been abolished; and we have it from undoubted authority, that it has produced the most salutary effect upon the prosperity of that nation. This odious system was abolished by the Napoleon Code; yet our imaginations are haunted with the dreadful consequences of its abandonment. Destroy this system, and the pound of flesh cannot be demanded. We are taught to believe it more difficult for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of Heaven. It is a melancholy truth; for when our Saviour offered to the young man, surrounded with wealth, eternal life, upon condition he would sell his worldly estate and give it to the poor, he declined the offer, and retired with a sorrowful heart. Unfortunately for the human race, we place too high an estimate upon worldly acquisitions; and we are unmindful of that reward which is offered to the benevolent heart, when all nations shall be gathered together; when the Son of Man shall come in all his glory, and the holy angels with him, the language will be—Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. I will forbear to repeat the denunciation against those who refused these charities of life, nor dwell upon the doom of that servant who had been forgiven a debt of 10,000 talents, but the same day met his fellow servant and demanded ten pence; and, upon his inability to pay, caught him by the throat and cast him into prison.

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

We flatter ourselves that honorable men will not use this tremendous power for the purposes of oppression. We are unmindful of the power of gold upon the human mind, when we derive consolation from this delusive hope. Every traitor to his country is reduced from his allegiance by the love of money. Ambition may swell his bosom; the love of power may mislead his judgment; he knows that wealth is the consequence of power; and the enjoyments which he seeks may be purchased with this wealth. Judas Iscariot is represented to have betrayed his Lord and Master from the influence of thirty pieces of silver. It was the love of money that corrupted the heart of Benedict Arnold, and induced him to turn his arms against the bosom of his own country. These facts prove the danger of vesting too much power where the object is the accumulation of wealth. The rich have generally governed the poor, and the fortunate have controlled the destinies of the unfortunate.

The improvement of the human mind is slow but certain in its progress. We are more inclined to bear with evils, when sufferable, than to seek redress by modifications of ancient customs; but this is the age of investigation. The time has come when the inquiry into the propriety of this measure will go on, and the final result cannot be doubtful. I will not indulge a doubt, for one solitary moment, that a great majority of the Senate will yield an unqualified approbation to the principle of this bill. Although a great diversity of sentiment might exist in regard to the limitations and conditions upon which it shall pass, I will not anticipate insuperable difficulties in relation to the details. The principle is sacred; and it will not be satisfactory to the nation to be told that we lack knowledge, and wisdom, and experience, to put it into effective operation. In adopting a measure so important to the liberty and happiness of the United States, the friends of the measure should prepare themselves to sacrifice individual views and technical modifications for the purpose of uniting, as a firm phalanx, all those who are willing to support the measure. The best course to produce this result is a free investigation of the points of difference as to its modification.

I would submit a few remarks as to the propriety of its retrospective operation. Our first duty is to provide for present distress. We are taught, by high authority, to believe, that sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof; and, in comparison with this great duty of providing for present necessity, to let the morrow provide for itself. But, if we can provide for present calamity and distress, and can provide also for the evils of to-morrow, we shall discharge a double duty, and we shall receive a double reward—the blessing and gratitude of the present generation, and the plaudits of “well done,” from millions yet unborn, besides the pleasure arising from the approbation of a good conscience. The right of applying this principle to existing contracts is not denied. It has been settled by the highest judicial tribunal of the country, viz: the Supreme Court of the United States. It has been decided, that to release the body of the debtor, in all cases, is a measure which affects the remedy alone. That it has no relation to or connexion with the essence of contracts; and, consequently, cannot impair their obligation. Congress possesses not only the right to release the body, but the future acquisitions of the party from existing demands, by the exercise of a positive grant of power to adopt an uniform system of bankruptcy; but I do not propose by this bill to lessen the property fund upon which contracts rest for their fulfilment.

Policy and justice would declare this inexpedient, as a permanent system; for property and confidence in the integrity of the contracting parties, constitute the only proper and legal basis of pecuniary or personal obligation; and the man who would enter into executory contracts under the expectation that he would have to resort to the imprisonment of an honest debtor in case of failure, deserves to lose his debt.

Although an unfortunate but honest debtor, after imprisonment, is legally bound to his creditor; yet it is my opinion that, in morality and in conscience, he is absolved from the obligation, where his personal independence has been violated, without the imputation of fraud or collusion.

No contract can divest the sovereignty of a

State of its power of modifying and changing remedies in the administration of justice. And every wise nation will adapt them to the condition and circumstances of the country. The proposition to make the measure prospective assumes the ground of immutability in the laws; and yet no proposition is more clear than the propriety of their mutability. It is much to be regretted that our prejudices are so inveterate, that even personal liberty too frequently kicks the beam, when property is put in the opposite scale. Naaman, the Syrian military chieftain, felt his bosom swell with gratitude towards the prophet Elisha, when he found himself cured of the leprosy, by following his advice, in washing three times in Jordan's stream. In his wonderful restoration, he also acknowledged that the God of Israel alone was worthy of adoration, and entered into a solemn declaration, that henceforth he would look to him as the only being that regulated and sustained the universe; but it was his request that there should be this exception, that when he entered with his royal master into the house of Rimmon, he might be permitted to bow to this idol, according to the custom of the Syrians. We are taught, likewise, by high authority, to give up prejudices in the following language, "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off; if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out." Time will disclose the fact, whether we can rise superior to this unmerciful system, which dooms the debtor to prison.

But it may be emphatically inquired, why this subject, to which so much importance has been given at this session, has been neglected by our predecessors? There is a time for all things, and the history of this Republic furnishes an answer for this apparent omission. The war of the Revolution presents the first crisis in which this nation has been involved. The object was no less than a contest for self-government. We were engaged with a most powerful enemy, superior in numbers, in riches, and the means of conquest. We had also to encounter the dreadful consequences of civil war. We fought and we conquered. At the close of the Revolution, we fondly expected tranquillity and peace, but we were disappointed in that expectation. It was now discovered that our strength had been consolidated, and our Union preserved by a moral power, which never forsakes a community devoted to liberty; and not by the Articles of Confederation. Notwithstanding the monuments of our victories and our glory, which were erected throughout our extended country, from Bunker's Hill in the North, to the Eutaw Springs in the South, we found the written bond of our Union weakened, and compared to a rope of sand. This consideration turned the thoughts of the nation to a new constitution, which should cure the defects of the Articles of Confederation. This state of things involved us in a second crisis which demanded the undivided attention of the nation. Our present form of government was the result. The organization of the various departments under this new constitution, equally engrossed public attention. We had fought for independence and had obtained it; yet the question seemed to be pending, whether we could preserve that freedom in the form of a written constitution, by which all power was acknowledged to be in the hands of the people. Before we had calmly settled down, upon what we conceived to be the legitimate principles of this new form of union, we were involved in a quasi war with France; and we were agitated by the angry and vindictive animosities of party. We were again amused with the prospect of harmony at home and peace with all nations, when suddenly our political horizon was obscured by foreign convulsions; and we were involved in a contest of commercial restrictions with the belligerent Powers of Europe, which terminated in a war with Great Britain. Through Divine Providence we sustained our cause, and victory crowned our efforts. A second time we fought a good fight and finished our course with joy.

During these interesting periods, it could not be expected that this subject should have engaged attention. Since the memorable period of the late war, we have been wisely and beneficially employed in bringing down the war to a permanent peace establishment.

Having finished this great work, we have perfect leisure to attend to the interior administration of our concerns.

Distracted by no party—blessed with peace and tranquillity—now is the accepted time to call the attention of the nation to the crying evil of imprisonment for debt.

From the remotest period of antiquity, to the present day, there never was a time when so many individuals were exerting themselves to improve the intellectual and moral condition of man. The good and the virtuous, throughout Christendom, are employing all their energies; and Christians, of every denomination, are united in the mighty effort. Benevolent societies are established in every region of the civilized world. The deaf and the dumb, the male and female orphan, the pagan and the savage, are all embraced in those moral exertions. Missionaries of our holy religion are penetrating every country. Burmah and Hindostan are receiving lessons of Christian morality, and the worshippers of Juggernaut are learning the knowledge of the true God. Jerusalem is again becoming the field of gospel labor. Divine light begins to beam on Persia, where the sun has long been the idol of their devotion. The savages of our own country are recipients of the same benevolent efforts, and the wilderness of America begins to wear the aspect of gladness. It is not expected that we, as a Government, should become members of these societies and make appropriations of money to carry on their designs; but, while we witness these interesting scenes, which, on every hand, are calculated to rejoice the heart of the philanthropist, it is our duty, and I trust we shall find it our pleasure to remove every obstacle to the happiness of the human race, and to take from the hand of tyranny the rod of oppression.

These United States present a sublime spectacle to the universe, in the annual convocation of the people, by their Representatives in the Congress of the nation, and in the Assemblies of the States, to legislate both for the present and for future generations. We should give an example to the world worthy of our character, that may profit foreign States and distant ages. Posterity will revise our acts, and pronounce upon them an impartial sentence of reprobation or applause, as their character shall merit; and I venture the prediction, that the next generation, in reviewing the transactions of this day, will be astonished to learn that this vestige of barbarism was so long suffered to remain a blot upon the enlightened age in which their fathers lived.

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

We read, with deep interest, the annual Executive communications, and exult in the contemplation that there is a general coincidence of sentiment and concurrence of action throughout the nation to increase the happiness of man. Nothing escapes the vigilance of those who are the appointed guardians of public liberty and political prosperity. Commerce and manufactures, agriculture and internal improvement, education and moral refinement, all occupy the attention of the first statesmen; and now the denunciation of this unmerciful practice, imprisonment for debt, finds its way into executive recommendations and legislative discussions; and as certain as that moral light is irresistible, so sure is the rapid approach of that day, when personal liberty, sacred to every American bosom, shall be held paramount to every pecuniary obligation, and no longer made the sport of misfortune and the prey of despotism.

For this love of liberty, a principle inherent in man, the savage still adheres to his wandering life, and spurns the proposition for civilization, because, in his view, prisons mark its bounds. It is for this liberty that we have fought and bled, and while the bosom of the patriot swells with ardor for that country in which he is protected from violence, and secured in the enjoyment of his inalienable rights, liberty is the charm which binds him to its destinies. For the preservation of those blessings, power is imparted to the Government; and when we consume the midnight oil, and bring to view in public counsel the result of our researches, the grand object of all is to secure the weak from the encroachments of the strong, and to extend to all the blessings of equal rights and equal privileges.

For what has mankind been struggling since the usurpation of Nimrod? For the restoration of violated rights; for liberty of speech, liberty of conscience, and the power of locomotion; to rescue innocence from punishment, and to guard the poor from the oppression of the wealthy. But these sacred principles are abandoned in the person of the debtor, so long as he is subject to imprisonment at the arbitrary discretion of his creditor.

For these sound principles, the ancient Greeks fought at Marathon and Thermopylæ. For these the celebrated nations of antiquity were in frequent convulsions; but the monuments of their glory remain only in the pages of history, while we behold, with melancholy contemplation, the marks of their oppression in the walls of Babylon and Nineveh, in the ruins of Balbec and Palmyra, and in the obelisks and pyramids of Egypt.

For these principles the South Americans are braving the field of danger—the modern Greeks are emulating the deeds of their ancestors—the Neapolitans have made a fruitless effort to establish them; and Spain, for their restoration, has proclaimed a new constitution. For these principles alone I contend, conscious that their existence is peculiarly dear to every American, and in the confident hope that the wisdom and justice of this nation will establish them upon a basis, permanent as the everlasting mountains, and without revolution or convulsion.

When Mr. J. had concluded—

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, offered an amendment to the details of the bill, and some explanatory remarks.

Mr. MILLS added some remarks to those he before submitted, principally on the details which it was proposed to give to the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, submitted, pretty much at large, his views of the bill—the general principle of which he decidedly advocated—and concluded by offering a substitute, which would provide guards that he deemed necessary; and which would, he argued, supply all the benefit that could be provided by bankrupt and insolvent laws, united, while it would avoid the delay and other objections to which those laws were liable.

Mr. EATON admitted the correctness of the principle of the bill, in the abstract; but argued to show that so vital an innovation in the principles, the structure, and system of the common law, would produce more mischief than it would remedy or avert—that it would offer impunity to fraud, &c.

Mr. MACON advocated the object of the bill, which he should support, if it could be so guarded as to relieve the honest debtors without affording facilities to the knave, to defraud his creditor. He maintained that creditors have rights entitled to protection, as well as debtors, and these he would not impair further than to exempt from imprisonment those who honestly surrendered their property to pay their debts.

Mr. TALBOT zealously supported the general principle of the bill; stated his objections to the amendments which had been submitted by Messrs. VAN BUREN and TAYLOR, and offered an amendment himself, (embracing several sections,) the object and effect of which he explained fully.

The bill was then, on motion of Mr. BARBOUR, (who wished an opportunity to offer some remarks on it,) postponed until to-morrow, and the amendments offered to-day were ordered to be printed.

THURSDAY, January 16.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making appropriations for erecting fortifications on St. Mary's river, within the mouth of Potomac, and on a point within the mouth of Patuxent.

SENATE.

Imprisonment for Debt.

JANUARY, 1823.

On motion, by Mr. NOBLE, the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the petition of Winthrop Robinson; the petition of John Low; the petition of John Welsh; the petition of Ezekiel P. Beldon; the petition of Frederick Pearl; the petition of George Byers; and the petition of Thomas Haly; were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution instructing them to inquire into the expediency of providing for the final settlement of the militia claims of the State of Georgia, for services rendered, under orders of the President of the United States, during the years 1792, '93, and '94; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act in addition to the act, entitled 'An act for the prompt settlement of public accounts,' and for the punishment of the crime of perjury;" in which bill they request the concurrence of the Senate.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Senate resumed the consideration, in Committee of the Whole, of the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, and the amendments offered thereto.

Mr. MILLS, of Massachusetts, rose, and entered at large into the questions presented by the subject—submitting the reasons why he could not go, and arguments against going, to the extent proposed by the bill; the difficulties which would arise in the practical operation of so broad a measure, the embarrassments in which it would involve our established and nicely adjusted system of jurisprudence, &c.

Mr. BARBOUR, of Virginia, took the opposite ground, and, in a speech of more than an hour's length, strenuously maintained the justice and expediency of the proposed measure, in its greatest latitude, so far at least as regards the ordinary class of debtors, but excepting all those who become debtors by any of the various ways which constitute breaches of trust; which latter he looked upon as criminals, deserving punishment, rather than as unfortunates entitled to commiseration. Of the substitutes offered to the bill, he preferred that proposed by Mr. VAN BUREN, except its feature of prospective application, which he objected to, and maintained the justice of making the bill applicable to all debts, past and to come.

When Mr. B. concluded, the bill was postponed to to-morrow, and the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, January 17.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to land in Louisiana, to try the validity thereof, reported the same with sundry amendments.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of James Morrison; and the report being read, was, on motion, recommitted, for the purpose of making a selection of the various papers connected with the claim, to be printed.

Mr. RUGGLES submitted a resolution, directing an inquiry into the expediency of paying the claim of David Cooper, of Michigan, for property converted to public uses.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the representatives of James McClung; which was read.

Mr. FINDLAY presented the petition of Joseph S. Macpherson, a master commandant in the Navy of the United States, praying the passage of a law authorizing the equitable settlement of his accounts, for reasons stated in the petition; which was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to amend an act, entitled "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida," approved the 8th of May, 1822. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repairing the mail road from New Orleans to Nashville, and of establishing ferries at the water courses on the route, or of making bridges over them, so as to facilitate the conveyance of the mails to and from New Orleans; and, also, to inquire into the expediency of repairing the national road commencing at Madisonville, in the State of Louisiana, and terminating at Florence, on the Tennessee river; and into the propriety of providing for the conveyance of the mails, on the said route, in covered carriages.

The bill brought up yesterday from the House of Representatives, for concurrence, was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Willcox was read the second time.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate:

The Convention concluded and signed at St. Petersburg, on the 12th day of July last, under the mediation of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, having been ratified by the three Powers, parties thereto, and the ratifications of the same having been duly exchanged, copies of it are now communicated to Congress, to the end that the measures for carrying it, on the part of the United States, into execution, may obtain the co-operation of the Legislature, necessary to the accomplishment of some of its provisions. A translation is subjoined of three explanatory documents, in the French language, referred to in the fourth article of the Convention, and annexed to it. The agreement executed at the exchange of the ratifications, is likewise communicated.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, 16th January, 1823.

The resolution offered yesterday by Mr. SMITH,

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

of Maryland, directing an inquiry into the expediency of making appropriations for the erection of fortifications on St. Mary's, within the mouth of the Potomac, and on a point in the Patuxent, being read;

Mr. SMITH stated to the Senate the advantages which would result, in time of war, to the commerce of the Chesapeake, and to the navy, from fortifications on the points designated; the security they would give to the extensive shores above, &c. He referred, also, to the protection they would afford to the Seat of Government, as no enemy could land on the Patuxent in less than twenty-five miles below the position he suggested for a work there, if a proper one were erected. These works with the aid of those below and a few steam frigates, he said, would give complete protection to the commerce of the bay and its waters, the extensive commerce of Baltimore, &c., which, thus protected, could not be interrupted by any enemy in the bay. The fortifications at the mouth of the bay, he said, could not alone protect it from the incursions of an enemy; it was necessary to have other works above. Vessels taking shelter from an enemy under the guns of the fortifications he proposed, could make sail at night fall, and before morning be out of reach of an enemy; in fact he knew of no fortifications in the country which afford as valuable protection to the commerce as these would, which he now proposed.

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Senate then again went into Committee on the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, rose, and in a speech of considerable length opposed the bill in toto, and replied to its advocates. He vindicated the principles and the wisdom of the common law, and opposed any innovation upon it; contended that there was in this country no such thing, in reality, as imprisonment for debt, but, if there was, the States were competent to remedy the evil, if it was one; maintained that creditors had rights as well as debtors, and that the latter, nine times in ten, deserved no commiseration, as their want of principles or of prudence often inflicted on others far more distress than they themselves suffered.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, spoke a short time, on the practical effect and operation of the bill, and of the substitutes proposed—avowing himself favorable to the general principle, and suggesting such provisions as he thought would probably accomplish it, so as to produce the most good with the fewest disadvantages; for he despaired of framing such a law as would exclude from its benefits the fraudulent, while it protected the liberty and rights of the honest.

Mr. VAN BUREN delivered an argument of more than an hour's length, in support of the object of the bill. He laid down the principle that imprisonment for debt, as practised in this country, is inoperative as a remedy, unnecessarily rigorous, unjust, and ought to be abolished, in regard to debtors involving no fraud or breach of trust to the public or an individual, and this principle he defended with much earnestness. He reviewed the different amendments offered, pointing out the defects of those offered by the other gentlemen, and sustaining the expediency of adopting the principles and provisions embraced in his own substitute. When he had concluded, the bill was laid on the table, on the motion of Mr. VAN DYKE.

Adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, January 20.

Mr. LOWRIE presented the memorial of Lewis Dal Schweinctz, agent for the Society of the United Brethren, praying to be divested of a certain trust estate, for the benefit of Christian Indians, on being compensated for the improvements made thereon. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, the Message from the President of the United States of the 10th of December last, in relation to that subject, was referred to the same committee, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. GAILLARD presented the memorial of Thomas Napier, and others, merchants of Charleston, praying that certain duties paid on the importation of goods from St. Augustine, since its cession to the United States, may be refunded. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SOUTHWARD presented the memorial and petition of Elijah Vansyckel, of Philadelphia, praying that the duties secured on the importation of sugars, which sugars were consumed by fire, may be remitted. Referred to the same committee.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan Territory, and for other purposes," reported the same, without amendment.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution instructing them to inquire into the expediency of providing for the final settlement of the militia claims of the State of Georgia, for services rendered, under the orders of the President of the United States, during the years 1792, '3, and '4; and, on motion, by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Thursday next.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, the report of the Ordnance Department, which accompanied the Message from the President of the United States, of the 13th instant, transmitting the information required by a resolution of the Senate, touching the expediency of erecting a National Armory on the Western waters, was ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 17th instant, in relation to the claim of David Cooper, and agreed thereto.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statements of the foreign commerce of the United States,

SENATE.

Road—New Orleans to Nashville.

JANUARY, 1823.

made in pursuance of the act of January 10, 1820; which letter was read.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel F. Hooker. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading.

The bill for the relief of the legal representatives of James McClung, deceased, was read the second time.

The bill to amend an act, entitled "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida," approved the 8th of May, 1822, was read the second time.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee of Claims, to which was recommitteed, with instructions, the report of the said committee on the petition of James Morrison of Kentucky, with the accompanying documents, reported the same, with a list of documents to be printed.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act concerning the disbursement of public money," as amended in Committee of the Whole; and, on motion by Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee of Claims, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel Hodgdon. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Buel, made a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Samuel Buel. The report and bill were read, and the bill passed to a second reading.

ROAD—NEW ORLEANS TO NASHVILLE.

The Senate took up the following resolution offered by Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, on Friday last:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repairing the mail road from New Orleans to Nashville, and of establishing ferries at the water-courses on the route, or of making bridges over them, so as to facilitate the conveyance of the mails to and from New Orleans; and, also, to inquire into the expediency of repairing the national road commencing at Madisonville, in the State of Louisiana, and terminating at Florence, on the Tennessee river, and into the propriety of providing for the conveyance of the mail on the said route, in covered carriages.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, said he had at the last session introduced these propositions, but they were not finally acted on for the want of time; that, as the inconveniences complained of still existed, he deemed it his duty again to call up the subjects, and to present them in a shape to be acted on. It would be perceived, from the present mode of conveying the mails from the city of New Orleans to this place, on horseback, through a wilderness of several hundred miles, between New Orleans and Nashville, over water-courses destitute of bridges or ferries, that they were constantly exposed to delays; and it is a fact, he said, that, in consequence, the mails were often damaged, and, in some instances, entirely lost. In short, the failure of the mails, on the route alluded to, were so frequent as to render the mail establishment, to the State of Louisiana, almost useless.

Mr. J. said that, in providing for the accomplishment of the object suggested, the great Constitutional question, which had excited so much interest as to the power of the National Government to appropriate the public money for the purpose of internal improvement, is not involved. That a considerable portion of the country, through which both these roads pass, belongs to the United States, and other portions of it are claimed by Indian tribes; consequently, the General Government can exercise exclusive jurisdiction over these subjects. It appears, by the acts of Congress, he said, that a number of roads were constructed by the United States, and under different administrations, some of which are in the original States, and that the money expended in constructing them was paid out of the Treasury of the United States. There could be no doubt, therefore, as to the power of Congress to make the appropriations required in this instance, and to adopt such other steps as may be necessary to accomplish the objects he had in view.

Mr. J. said, with respect to the great national road alluded to, he had, at the last session, explained its bad condition, and suggested the propriety of repairing it. The troops of the United States had been employed for a considerable length of time, under the immediate command and direction of General Jackson, in opening this road, and immense labor had been bestowed on it. He thought it not less important to the Western country than the Cumberland road; in a military point of view, it was calculated to be much more important; and, as a mail route, it would be of great utility. The distance from New Orleans to Nashville by this road, is said to be about three hundred miles less than by the route now used for the conveyance of the mails. But it is now unfit for any purpose whatever, and is not used. Is it not the duty of the Government, he asked, after having accomplished this great work, so important, in many respects, to the whole Western country, to adopt such steps as may be necessary to keep it in repair? It could be done at a small expense. In addition, however, to this expense, it was necessary, he thought, to obtain grants for small tracts of land at some of the water-courses on the route, for the purpose of establishing ferries thereon.

Mr. J. concluded, by remarking that the revenue accruing to the United States from the post office at New Orleans is considerable, and that the people of Louisiana had a right to expect that the same advantages as are enjoyed by the other States, in regard to the mail establishment, will be extended to them. The road should be immediately repaired, the necessary bridges and ferries established, and the mails carried in covered carriages. The Postmaster General, with whom he had consulted, concurred with him in the expediency of adopting the measures proposed by his resolution.

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Senate then resumed, in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt.

Mr. SOUTHARD, of New Jersey, rose, and, after some introductory remarks, offered a substitute for the original bill, which embraces a number of sections. The following comprises the substance of the provisions:

It provides that the process of the courts should remain as they now are, but whenever a capias ad respondendum, or writ in the nature of it, in actions founded on debt or contract, was to be served by the marshal or other officer, and the defendant refused to give bail, he might be discharged, upon executing an assignment of all his property, with a schedule annexed, for the benefit of his creditors, to be returned by the officer with the writ; whereupon, appearance might be entered by or for the defendant, and the action proceed as usual. That the officer, under the direction of the court, should assign the property to some person, for the benefit of all the creditors, pro rata. That a notice of the assignment be published, and distribution made among the creditors who put in their claim. That a like assignment and schedule might be made when a capias ad satisfaciendum was to be served, and bond given for the defendant to appear and answer, if required, interrogatories respecting the fairness of the assignment, schedule, &c.; and if the creditor thought proper, he might file a declaration suggesting fraud, and have the fairness of the defendant inquired into by a jury; and if the matter was found against the defendant, the ca. sa. might issue, and defendant never after have the benefit of the act. That the assignment, &c., on the ca. sa. should inure first to the benefit of the plaintiff in the suit; next, of other judgment creditors, and then of other creditors rateably. That courts of common law might grant writs of ne exeat in the same cases and under like regulations as courts of equity now do.

Mr. SOUTHARD said he offered a new bill, by way of amendment, and proposed to explain its details, and compare them with the original bill, that the Senate might perceive the views which induced him to offer it, and his objections to the plans already submitted. He did not expect it would meet the approbation of a majority of the Senate, nor did he believe that any one which could be suggested would be free from difficulties, or be at this time adopted; but he yielded to the intimations, so often given in the debate, and added another to the number of propositions which were to be referred to the committee, and from which they would, if possible, select something which would be acceptable. Mr. S. read the amendment which he proposed, and added—this amendment is not founded on the notion that we are bound, always, to look to the relief of the debtor alone, and that there is a difference in the principles of moral honesty, by which the debtor and creditor are governed—the rights they possess, and the justice due to them in making and administering the law. This is a radical error in all the schemes which have been heretofore suggested, and in the truth and justice of which he could not acquiesce. All creditors are not unfeeling nor inhuman; nor all debtors, fair, honest, and worthy of compassion. Their principles and motives of action are the same, and common to human nature. If there be any difference, it is probably against debtors, and arises from the circumstance that they are suffering under misfortune, and that men are more frequently disposed to escape, by unfit means, from the pressure of calamity, than, when fortunate, to forget the duties of kindness and justice. The provisions of the law, however, should be general, and not referred to distinctions like these.

The object of the original bill is to change the relative situation and rights of the creditor and debtor. What is the relation which they bear to each other? The creditor has loaned his money, sold his property, or rendered personal service to his debtor. For the possession and use of this money, goods, or service, the debtor owes an adequate compensation, and is bound to make it, by every principle of morality and justice. He can be excused only by absolute inability. If he refuses, while he has the means, he is not innocent. The want of means never can exist while he possesses property which can be devoted to the object; and no law should intervene between him and the just claim of his creditor, so long as the power to satisfy that claim lasts. On the contrary, the authority of society ought to compel him to discharge it, by appropriating to that purpose what he possesses. One great object in the formation of society is to insure the discharge of the obligations which one citizen owes to another. Upon these principles the amendment rests. It proposes to free the person of the debtor, when he has done what is within his power, and surrendered his property; and it permits him to do this before he is imprisoned, and thereby to avoid imprisonment. When he has manifested a disposition to perform his duty, as far as his ability extends, he is to be relieved from the legal consequences of his situation. When the creditor demands payment, and it is refused, it becomes necessary to appeal to the tribunals which society has established for the settlement of such controversies. The moral and legal obligation of the debtor cannot be satisfied by a mere denial, either of the justice of the claim or the means of payment. The denial must be tried, and the aid of compulsory process, if necessary, afforded to compel a trial. The party should not be permitted to evade justice by removing himself or his property beyond the reach of the court. He ought, by some mode, to be compelled to remain and answer; otherwise it is optional with him whether satisfaction be made, and his duty performed. If he be dishonest; if he be a bad citizen; if he do not feel and acknowledge the obligation of duty,—he will leave the jurisdiction of the court, avoid its authority, and render nugatory the pursuit of the claim. There are surely many men who would feel no compunction at this course; to whom a removal, with their property, although sufficient to discharge the debt, would neither be unpleasant nor burdensome. No creditor can ever recover from an unwilling debtor, so long as removal from one jurisdiction to another be permitted without restraint. Yet it is for the unwilling that the law is provided; on them it is always designed to act.

SENATE.

Imprisonment for Debt.

JANUARY, 1823.

The original bill, by abolishing the capias ad respondendum, and taking away the right to bail, leaves it at the option of the defendant whether he will answer or not, and will in practice make a recovery often impossible. If, for example, a suit be commenced in Maryland, before judgment and execution, the defendant may remove to Delaware, and there is no power to prevent it. Judgment and execution in Delaware will in like manner be evaded; and this may be always done, even where the defendant has property. Such a result cannot be satisfactory to the honest part of the community. It would lead to effects upon the morals of society, and the confidence due to a well-organized Government, which are to be deprecated and avoided. The proposed amendment does avoid these effects. It leaves the capias ad respondendum as it now exists. It keeps possession of the body until the dispute is tried and the claim satisfied; and, as the only sure and effectual means of compelling the performance of a positive duty, by requiring bail for his appearance, it secures him until that duty is performed. If it be objected that the great object of abolishing imprisonment may thus be defeated, and it be asked whether, to secure the appearance, the body should be imprisoned, the amendment answers, in some cases it is to be imprisoned, and justly; in others it is not. The party is not to be confined if he finds bail. If he has neither property to pay the debt, nor credit to find bail, he may still remain at liberty, if he do what is within his power—give up the property he has, whatever it may be. If his credit be gone—if his estate is insolvent—let him so declare, and secure his creditors, as far as he has the means, by an immediate assignment, not only of that which is tangible and may be reached by the common writs of execution, but of all that he possesses, and be thereupon discharged. And is there any thing harsh, unreasonable, or unjust, in this? If he can, he ought to give bail, and not avoid the discharge of the obligation which morality sustains and society ought to enforce. If he cannot give security, it must arise from a state of insolvency, both of property and credit, which demands that he should not be permitted to escape, and squander his means of payment.

The difference between this amendment and the plans proposed by the honorable members from Kentucky, New York, and Virginia, will be at once perceived. Under them, the defendant cannot, in any case, be restrained or imprisoned. Under this, he can, unless he will secure his appearance, either by bail or a pledge of his property. Under them, he may escape at will. Under this, he is compelled to answer. The advantage is manifestly in favor of the latter.

The member from Kentucky (Mr. JOHNSON) proposes to avoid the evils which would result from abandoning the compulsory process, by leaving the writ of ne exeat in force. But this would be an ineffectual remedy. It can be issued only by one species of courts, those of equity jurisdiction, in cases of equitable demands, and would be inapplicable to a vast majority of causes. It is, besides, so expensive as utterly to forbid its use in many instances. Where the sum claimed is very small, the costs and expense of this writ would exceed the demand, and amount to a denial of justice. Nor is it easy to perceive why bail should be forbidden, on the capias ad res, and that writ abolished, while another is spared which is more expensive, and eventually produces the same result, and may lead to imprisonment. To be consistent, this writ ought also to be destroyed. It is, however, often useful to effect the purposes of justice, and the amendment provides, not only that it shall remain, but may be issued by courts of common law jurisdiction, as it is now issued by chancery. It will be remarked that the amendment proposed, continued Mr. S., makes no distinction in the character of the debtor. None ought to be made until after trial—because, until then, it cannot be determined whether the defendant be a debtor, and, if a debtor, whether unfortunate or criminal. It is alike unjust and unwise to punish frauds, or impropriety of any kind, until the delinquency be fixed by judgment. That legislation which denounces whole classes of men as fraudulent, is essentially incorrect and erroneous. Hence the exceptions made by the honorable member from New York (Mr. VAN BUREN) ought not to be admitted. No man should be condemned unheard, nor subjected to peculiar difficulties, privations, or punishments, until the decision of a competent tribunal has established his guilt. At the institution of the suit, it cannot be justly decided whether the officer is a defaulter, or the trustee, guardian, executor, or attorney, guilty of fraud. Take the executor as an example. By force of the exception, he is presumed fraudulent, and is deprived of the benefit of law—but is it true, that every executor who is sued has acted fraudulently? He may not even be a debtor—or, if a debtor, a perfectly fair and honest one. There are many cases in which his personal responsibility is involved, without the existence of moral turpitude. He may, without a proper understanding of the law, or of the situation of the estate, have paid a debt which he ought not to have paid. A claim of higher character, and which should have been first satisfied, is presented, and he has nothing left to pay it. Will you denounce and punish him as guilty of fraud? If you do, your law is unequal and oppressive, and deserves not the respect and confidence of the citizen. An executor ought, in no case, to be regarded, by your law, as having acted improperly, until a wasting of the estate, a devastavit, has been fastened upon him. And, even that, when adjudged by the court, is often merely technical, and implies mistake, not fraud; error, not guilt—proves no criminal intention—merits no corporal punishment. Take, also, another of the exceptions, the public defaulter. For him, when guilty, no one is even disposed to apologize. But is every man who is nominally a debtor to the Government, necessarily a public defaulter? I verily believe that a great proportion of those who have been proclaimed to the country and the world as having squandered the public money and rioted upon the public funds, are not guilty, at least to the extent charged. Some can satisfactorily account for the expenditure when a trial shall be had. Some have been, like other men, subjected to inevitable losses and misfortunes; and a few, although they have faithfully devoted themselves to the nation, done the State good service, and received no profit, are yet unable to furnish legal evidence to account for the balance against them. Will you place all these beyond the influence of your law, presume their guilt, and draw a distinction between them and other debtors? It would be a violation, not of justice merely, but of the equal rights of the citizen. The objection, then, to these exceptions, rests on this obvious principle, debtors should not be presumed fraudulent, until fraud be proved; nor stigmatized as guilty until guilt be established. No distinction should be made at the commencement of the suit. The present laws of the States and the Union, make none, and he did not perceive the justice of the innovation proposed.

JANUARY, 1823.

Imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

The simple proposition, which the amendment suggests, with respect to the first process in the action, is, that bail may be required to secure the appearance of the defendant to answer the demand. This being accomplished, no further claim is made upon his person; or, if the defendant, being insolvent, have not credit to obtain the security, he may devote his property to that object. In either case, the legitimate design of the arrest has been obtained; and imprisonment is unnecessary. In practice, this provision can create no difficulty. The honest man can find pledges for his appearance, at any stage of the proceeding. He who cannot, must have lost the confidence of those around him, and ought to place his property where it may satisfy just claims.

But, sir, there is another and more important process against the debtor, and which the bill abolishes: a process after judgment, to enforce its payment—the capias ad satisfaciendum—in common parlance the ca. sa. When judgment is pronounced, the justice and extent of the creditor's demand are no longer doubtful. It is liquidated and established; and he has a perfect right to have it satisfied, and to call upon the power of society to enforce it against an unwilling debtor, by all the means which are properly calculated to produce the effect. The first process, for this purpose, ought to be directed against the property: that should be first devoted to the object. But such writ cannot always be effectual; the property may be secreted, or of such kind as will be exempt from seizure, by any process now known, although the defendant has an immense amount of it in his hands and under his control. Even a limited experience will inform us, that executions against property are often eluded by those who live most luxuriously, but who, having no visible estate on which the officer can levy, may entirely escape the coercion of the law, if their persons be protected. Is this right? Is it just? Is it wise in government, is it correct in morals, to permit it? While the debtor, it may be, riots in expensive pleasures, and enjoys his wealth, beyond the reach of your law, the creditor, with his family, may be reduced to the utmost penury and distress, fit objects for the exercise of those feelings of compassion, which the honorable members from Kentucky, Virginia, and New York, have lavished so profusely on the debtor alone. Surely that is a misguided humanity, which wastes itself upon one class, in total forgetfulness of the sufferings of others, though created, perhaps, by the objects of its benevolence, and in utter disregard of the claims of justice. If, sir, the body of the debtor is to be secured from imprisonment, every mode to reach the whole property should be furnished, or you will work monstrous injustice: you permit, without rebuke, the violation of contracts—the neglect of obligations—the prostration of the very elements of which civil society is composed.

I would, therefore, continued Mr. S., free the body then, and then only, when an assignment had been made, of such kind that every species of property, real and personal estate, choses in action, public stocks, every thing by which debts could be paid, might be controlled and commanded by it, and the creditor placed in the entire rights of the debtor, and enabled to secure his claim against the efforts of concealment and fraud, if such should be practised. The third section of the amendment endeavors to reach this result, by such modifications of the usual proceedings, as will extend kindness to the debtor, without infringing the not less sacred rights of the creditor. It leaves the ca. sa. or writ in the nature of it, untouched: that the officers may, if necessary, take the body; but directs that the body be not taken, if the defendant will assign his property for the payment of the debt. It is only in this, or some similar mode, that the equal rights of the two parties can be protected, and honesty and justice maintained. To maintain them, I would preserve the right to imprison the body of the freeman, however humiliating the idea may seem. On this point, sir, I have no peculiar professions to make of humanity and feeling, or respect to the person and liberty of the citizen, as passports to the confidence of the body I address; nor shall I be regarded as unmindful of them, because I do not make such professions. We have two objects to effect, and it is not wise nor just to permit the one to absorb the other. Contracts should be held inviolable. No man should be suffered to escape from their performance, until his power to perform had ceased. The demands of justice and honesty should be rigidly enforced, and if the seizure of the body be necessary to enforce them, the body should be seized. No relief should be extended, from humanity to the debtor, until he had done what they require. And, in order to accomplish this object, imprisonment should be retained as one of the most efficient means. It has been most incorrectly considered and treated, in this discussion, as a punishment for being unfortunately in debt, and for not doing what the party had not the power to do—as a tyranny, exercised by one citizen over another. It never was designed as a punishment—nor as the instrument of tyranny, but as a means, and a powerful one, of compelling the performance of obligations—the surrender of property. And when that is effected, its purpose is answered. If it be carried beyond that point, it then, and then only, ceases to be a means of enforcing a duty, and is converted into a punishment. Such it never ought to be—such it never can be, under the proposed amendment. Whenever the property is surrendered, the body is free, because then imprisonment becomes unjust and oppressive, and should not be permitted. It then ceases to answer any valuable purpose, but produces a positive evil, by depriving society, without necessity, of the services of the citizen for his own support and the profit of the community. That the fear of imprisonment will, in many cases, restrain men from creating unnecessary debts, and induce them to assign their property and pay while they can, is not to be questioned. To disbelieve it, is to deny some of the most ordinary feelings of human nature. Against the pain and disgrace of imprisonment, pride and the love of character revolt. The fondness for pleasure, attachment to property, disposition to fraud, will often sink beneath its influence. It is one powerful instrument of enforcing the payment of debts—of these we have not too many; and therefore let not this be discarded until we find a fit substitute.

Nor does it seem to me, sir, a matter of much importance, whether imprisonment for debt originated in ancient or modern times, was one of the provisions of the old common law, or has been superadded by statutory regulations. I would respectfully suggest to the honorable member from New York, that the question is scarcely worth an expenditure of time, or the exertion of his talents and learning. There are many principles which, if not found in the earliest records of that law, have been incorporated by ancient statutes, and are now, as essentially as any others, a portion of it; such is the power of which we speak. For much more than a century, every court, in every place, which has administered justice according to the principles of the common law, has issued this writ, and exercised power over the person of the debtor, not as a punishment, but as the means of procuring satisfaction of the judgment. And whatever be its origin in England, its exercise there is found, at a period and among a people altogether unworthy of the epithets bestowed by the member from Virginia, (Mr. BARBOUR.) It was extended, confirmed, and practised there—where they loved liberty as well as we love it—where are found some of the most illustrious instances of devotion to its cause—and whence we have derived some of our most valuable institutions, and drawn some of the best lessons we have learned. And our liberties never will suffer reproach from that cause, if we preserve it, without abuse, to operate only on those who are unwilling to be just.

The honorable member from Virginia (Mr.

BARBOUR) maintains, in respect to this power, a principle both novel and unsound. He seemed to insist that society did not possess this power over the person, to enforce the execution of the contract, although its control, for that purpose, over the property, was rightful and complete. Whence, sir, has he learned this doctrine? I know not in what system of moral or political law it is to be found. I had supposed that civil society, especially a society established and regulated by the consent and will of freemen, had perfect right and power to regulate its government and the contracts of its citizens, and enforce either upon the person or property, the claims of duty and the obligations of justice. I have yet to learn that the person may not be restrained, to compel obedience to the requisitions of morality and law. And this is the only fair purpose of imprisonment after the judgment.

As the amendment proposes that the body be free from arrest and imprisonment, both on the original and final process, when the debtor has made an assignment which shall transfer his rights to his creditors, this assignment is the next feature worthy of attention. The officer having the writ to execute is the only person to whom, in the first instance, this assignment can be made; but he takes it, as the temporary agent and trustee of the creditors; and that the return of writ, transfers, under the direction of the court, his agency and trust to some one who shall collect and distribute the money among those who are entitled to it. This receiving and transfer is all the officer has to do, and is all that his engagements would permit. In doing it, he acts in a similar capacity as when he receives a bond for the appearance of the defendant, and assigns it, on motion of the plaintiff, where the appearance is not perfected.

When the assignment is made on the cap. ad. res., at the commencement of the suit, it is to inure to the benefit of all the creditors, in proportion to their claim. This is just, because, the debtor being insolvent, and no one having exhibited extraordinary vigor in pursuit of his rights, nor obtained any peculiar claim on him, no reason can be urged why one should be preferred and a rateable distribution not made among all. All are in equal right; all should be equally benefited. But when the assignment is taken, after the judgment, at the execution of the ca. sa., it is to inure to the benefit, first of the plaintiff, then of other judgment creditors, as far as can be done without giving fraudulent preferences; and afterwards of other creditors, in proportion to their claims. The plaintiff, having been alert in establishing his rights, and obtained a peculiar lien, his debt ought to be first discharged, as one of the highest grade. Vigilantibus et non dormientibus leges subseruiunt.

But, sir, although the debtor may have executed an assignment, and annexed to it a schedule of his property, yet he may not have acted faithfully; a part may be concealed from the officer, and the creditor defrauded. Hence, it is provided that, on the execution of the assignment on the ca. sa., a bond shall also be given, conditioned to appear and answer interrogatories respecting his property,

JANUARY, 1823.

imprisonment for Debt.

SENATE.

under the direction of the court, if it shall be supposed necessary to propound them. In many, probably in most cases, such interrogatories will not be considered necessary, because it will be apparent that a faithful surrender has been made. But, wherever fraud is suspected, this provision will furnish a ready mode by which it may be detected or disproved. Its object is to reach the debtor to the utmost extent, and leave him no possible means of evasions, unless he escape through the medium of perjury, and dares its pains and penalties. He is to be freed, Mr. S. repeated, from the obligation of immediately discharging his contract, only when he has faithfully endeavored to discharge it. And if, in any stage of the proceedings, he fails to comply with the requirements of the law, or if, in the investigation, he shall be found to have acted fraudulently, the fact is to be recorded, and he is to be forever left without the protection which the law affords to the honest debtor; the writ is to be executed, and he is to suffer the imprisonment he merits. This warning is calculated to produce caution, circumspection, and fair dealing. But the existence of the fraud which is to be thus punished, is not to be presumed but proved. It must be established by trial, and rest upon the verdict of a jury.

I have thus, Mr. President, exhibited the principal features of the plan I propose. The remainder of the amendment is auxiliary to the provisions I have explained, and calculated to sustain the positions I have assumed in the argument; and, although I profess no peculiar regard for the scheme, and it may not meet the approbation of the Senate, yet to me it seems better than any other yet offered, calculated to effect the ends both of humanity and justice, and to approach somewhat nearer to that phenomenon in legislation, the perfect liberty of the person of the honest debtor, reconciled with the strict rights and just claims of the creditor.

There are some reasons in favor of this amendment, which are worthy the consideration of the Senate. Its principal feature is, that it does destroy imprisonment in every case, except that of fraud which is proved, not presumed; settled by trial and judgment, not anticipated before investigation. It goes further, in this respect, than any other, except the original bill, which seems to cast loose all restraint upon the debtor, leaves the creditor without remedy, and makes the enforcement of contracts a matter not of compulsion but of choice. Under this amendment, no honest man can be imprisoned; none but he who refuses to pay his debts while he has the power.

It also leaves all our writs as they now are, and only changes, in some respects, the modes of executing them; and, although the eloquent member from Virginia has found so much to censure, in attachment to well known usages and instances, and supposes an unwillingness to change radically our system of judgments and executions, arising from bigotry of feeling and the remains of devotion to the maxims of ancient tyranny, yet I for one am willing to bear the imputation, rather than encounter the consequences of the course he proposes. It may, sir, be devotion to ancient maxims, but they are maxims connected intimately with the very objects for which civil society was formed—maxims which compel faithfulness between citizen and citizen, which will sustain honesty and repress fraud. It may, sir, be bigotry, but it is that species of bigotry which rigorously enforces the obligations of duty and the demands of justice. The preservation of our present process will lead to these results, and save us from uncertainty and confusion. Wherever in society, especially in the administration of law, there is a well known course of practice, it should remain unaltered, unless the benefits of a change are palpable and sure. At present, the court, the bar, every intelligent member of society, understands the details and operation of your system; and if you can effect the great purpose you have in view, leaving those details essentially unchanged, you accomplish much for the peace and order of society. You do this especially in the case for which you are legislating. It is to be remembered that our Union is composed of twenty-four independent Republics, each of which has peculiar and favorite modes of proceeding, and each of which is to be, in a greater or less degree, reached and affected by your decision. Innumerable diversities exist in every part of their practice, from the commencement to the end of the suit; and no man is learned or wise enough to calculate the extent to which any change you may make will injuriously act upon them. Will you not, ought you not, to be cautious how you trespass? Is it not the dictate of wisdom that you do not innovate without necessity? So thought and acted those who preceded us in legislating on this subject.

When the judicial system of the United States was established, the existing process of the several States, though in many respects dissimilar, was, by positive enactment, adopted as the rule in the courts of the Union. It was a wise regulation, and should not be incautiously overthrown. Yet such must be the effect of the bill, and most of the proposed amendments. This fact, Mr. S. added, furnished the principal difficulty, and afforded one reason on which I ventured the belief, that we should devise no system which would be approved by this body. But it is not the only difficulty. Your courts must become insolvent courts. In every case the same proceedings must be had; the property surrendered. And what is to be the operation of a discharge? A discharge to-day will not be one to-morrow—in the case of A will not operate in the case of B—in Maryland will not be conclusive in Delaware. There must be a repetition of proceedings as often as the defendant is sued. Would it not, then, be better to leave all legislation on this subject to the States, where it properly belongs, and, by continuing to adopt their process, free the debtor in your courts when he is freed in theirs, and then only? Or superadd, at once, to the insolvent system you provide, the bankrupt principle of absolving from the debt, and permitting one discharge to be pleaded against every claim? But, Mr. S. added, it was not his intention to pursue these difficulties. There was a strong inclination manifested to legislate on the subject, and his desire was to aid in discovering the best mode of accomplishing the object in view, and averting the evils which, he believed, were threatened by the bill and some of the amendments. The amendment which he proposed, he thought, merited attention for another reason. The Federal and State courts are now equally open, and furnish the same facilities in the prosecution of claims. But, if you take away the writ of ca. sa. in the manner proposed, you immediately create a distinction between them, a distinction which must eventually operate unfavorably to the Government of the United States and to the Federal courts; for you lessen their means of recovering debts, and drive suitors from them. Your system can affect only your own courts, and when a citizen is about to sue, he will inquire where are the most numerous and efficacious means of attaining his purpose, and finding them in the State courts he will sue there. He will not institute a suit where the person of the defendant is directly, and his property indirectly, free from control, but will seek relief where both may be coerced. But, sir, the suits of your Government will be decided there; and while individuals will escape from the pressure of your law, by suing in other courts, your Government will have diminished means of recovering its dues. It will not only have one instrument less than the citizen to compel payment, but that very circumstance will induce the debtor always to postpone your claim, and satisfy first the man who can most effectually reach his comfort and feelings as well as his purse. Thus the operation of this bill will be upon the courts of the United States, and upon the claims of the Government. Your courts will be less efficient—your dues less safe. This result is avoided by the amendment. None of the present facilities in the collection of debts are surrendered. The property can be secured, the person controlled, so long as its control is necessary for effecting payment. You lose nothing; perhaps it may safely be said you gain something in the efficiency of your system.

SENATE.

Imprisonment for Debt.

JANUARY, 1823.

This amendment also, in some degree, meets the wishes of the honorable member from Virginia, (Mr. TAYLOR,) in breaking down that distinction between insolvency and bankruptcy, to which he so strenuously objects. It applies to every member of the community—to the farmer, mechanic, manufacturer, and merchant—and it is equally operative in every State. In some of the States the entire abolition of the capias must produce much inconvenience and injustice. If I am rightly informed, and the honorable member from Virginia (Mr. BARBOUR) can correct me if I err, in one or more of the States, real property is not permitted to be sold for the payment of debts. If, then, you absolve the person of the defendant, in what way can you possibly compel him, who is unwilling and dishonest, to satisfy a judgment against him? Your execution will not reach his land, and you cannot touch his body, to induce him to surrender it. He will disregard your judgment, and laugh at your process. Sir, I would not permit this mockery; I would not assent to a proposition which would suffer such dishonesty, which would not operate equally everywhere, and reach the utmost farthing of the property, wherever the person was protected. This fact, that, in a portion of your Union, the whole land is not subject to sale under execution, is a sufficient objection to the bill, and a strong argument in favor of the amendment.

I have thus given you, sir, the opinions which I entertain on the subject under discussion, and explained the reasons which induce me to prefer the amendment which I have offered to you; and I should here have closed my remarks, were it not for the gratuitous and unmerited denunciation by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BARBOUR) of the State from which I come, on account of one of her laws, by which, it is said, a free man has been sold—a denunciation interesting to my feelings, and which seems to require some explanation from me, as a Representative of that State. It was not easy, sir, for me to perceive the application which this censure had to the argument, nor why the honorable member should have thought it necessary to wander from the question, in order to make it. But having been made, I am sure I shall be indulged with a pardon for detaining the Senate a few moments in stating the character and history of that law, as far as I now recollect it. It was passed at a period somewhat remote, when our ideas were not, perhaps, so definite, and our feelings so acute on such points as at present; a period when many, perhaps all, the States, had laws, not less negligent of the rights of the citizen, which it would be difficult to reconcile to our present notions of what is compatible with liberty, or suitable for freemen; and which prove that New Jersey was not more barbarous than her sisters. Abundant illustrations of this truth might be presented, but I can take no pleasure in recounting them. This law did not apply to females, to married men, to those who had families dependent upon them. It operated only on unmarried men, without children, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty. It was produced, in part, by the peculiar situation of the State, and rested upon this principle, that such men as I have mentioned, who had contracted debts without the means of paying them, were under a moral obligation, which it would not be injustice to force them to discharge, even by personal service, and if they would not willingly render that service, to compel them. Hence, if they did not arrange the satisfaction of the debt, the court was directed to dispose of their labor for that purpose. Now, sir, although I am not the advocate of that law, but was, in some measure, the instrument of its repeal, yet I am the apologist of those who passed it. Its principle was sound, the object to be obtained was correct, but the mode of affecting it was more questionable. And although it was passed at the period mentioned, applicable to the persons designated, founded on the principle stated, yet it was seldom, perhaps never executed, until, in the case alluded to by the honorable member, it was enforced upon a man who merited all that the court had power to inflict. He was hired out, or, if you please, sold, for a term of service, to pay the debts which he had fraudulently, and immorally contracted, and which he would not satisfy. And it proved a nominal, not real punishment—some small price was given, and the purchase never enforced. And yet, after this mild, and almost unobjectionable operation of that law was brought to the notice of the Legislature, it was, in less, I believe, than forty-eight hours, and by an unanimous vote, expunged from the statute book. Does, then, its character or history justify peculiar rebuke? Beside, it is the principal, if not only blot upon the code of that State. Few things can be found in it to call in question her liberality and love of freedom. I challenge the production of a system more pure—where the duties of humanity are more sacredly regarded, and the equal rights of equal citizens more thoroughly protected. It is a code, sir, fit to govern that race of freemen, who prepared for themselves, and still enjoy, the first free written constitution in existence.

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

But although the censure of the honorable member was calculated to give some pain, it was also calculated to give some pleasure; inasmuch as it seemed to be an ample pledge that it could not be retorted, and that the State which he represents had relieved her statute book from every censurable feature. I rejoice if it be so—for if I remember aright, in the last revision of her laws, published about three years ago, there were some provisions which seemed objectionable, at least to those who did not well understand her situation and internal policy. I allude to those provisions, by which a freeman convicted of an inferior crime, by an inferior tribunal, might be sold—by which a freeman might have his body lacerated in the public streets, not upon a judicial conviction, before a jury; not after a fair and impartial trial, but after a summary proceeding, his guilt being established by the uncorroborated oath of the injured party—by which a freeman, married or unmarried, who had not visibly a regular and honest mode of obtaining a livelihood, might be apprehended upon warrant, and hired to personal service—by which the time and services of a freeman might be sold to satisfy the taxes due to the Government.* And these may have been repealed—or if not repealed, can be amply explained and justified, else, surely, would not the honorable member have ventured the picture which he presented of the tyranny and barbarity exercised in another State. But, sir, whether repealed or justifiable, is of little moment in the decision of the question before the Senate, and I submit to its candor the explanation given of the law of New Jersey, as well as the amendment to the bill upon your table.

When Mr. S. had concluded—

Mr. BARBOUR made a few remarks in reply to

Mr. S. on one or two incidental points touched by the latter.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, followed, at some length, in reply to Mr. SOUTHARD, and in support of his own substitute, which he thought preferable, in principle and practice, to that offered by Mr. S. The amendment of Mr. S., he argued, began where it ought to end; it commenced with bankruptcy, instead of ending with it—and a debtor, under such a law, would in the outset be compelled to choose between bankruptcy and a prison. Mr. T. took an excursive view of the common law, citing several of its ancient absurdities and its anomalous principles, to show that it was an unfit guide in legislating for this country, and the present age. He also added some remarks in further support of the justice and expediency of the abolishment of imprisonment for debt.

After a few explanatory observations, between Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, and Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, touching the merits of the common law, the bill was laid on the table, and the amendment of Mr. SOUTHARD ordered to be printed.

TUESDAY, January 21.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, presented the petition of Seth Knowles, of Charlestown, in the State of Massachusetts, praying debentures on a quantity of rum exported. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of Susan W. Eakin, widow of the late Lieutenant Samuel A. Eakin, of the United States Navy, deceased, praying some provision by law for her support. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT also communicated a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, praying a different organization of the United States court for the said State. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, presented the memorial of a number of the Banks of Charleston, South Carolina, and others, representing the expediency of certain alterations in the charter of the Bank of the United States. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Hodgdon was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Buel was read the second time.

The bill for the relief of Samuel F. Hooker was read the second time.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to enable the President of the United States to treat with the Chippewa Indians for the purchase of certain lands on the south side of Lake Superior, supposed to contain valuable mines of copper; and the bill was twice read, by unanimous consent.

Mr. BENTON also laid before the Senate a communication from Governor Cass, detailing certain * These statutory provisions are not alluded to for the purpose of fastening peculiar censure on that State—for the reasons on which they were founded may not be understood; and no State has been always humane, just, and equal in its laws.

information in relation to the said subject, which was read.

MR. BENTON, from the same committee, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to authorize the President of the United States to cause the lead mine and salt spring lands belonging to the United States, to be exposed to public sale; and the bill was twice read, by unanimous consent.

MR. BENTON, from the same committee, also reported a bill to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri; and the bill was twice read, by unanimous consent.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the benefit of George Shannon; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Friday next.

On motion by MR. BARBOUR, the Message from the President of the United States of the seventeenth instant, transmitting copies of the ratification of the Convention concluded at St. Petersburg, on the 12th of July, 1822, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WILLIAM KELLY, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Alabama, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of John Walker, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat in the Senate.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to authorize the purchase of a number of copies of the sixth volume of the Laws of the United States; and the same having been amended, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill was taken up to release Amos Muzzy and Benjamin White from imprisonment, the former being confined under a judgment against him for defalcation in the payment of moneys received by him, as postmaster, at Sangerfield, New York, and White being confined under a judgment against him as the security of Muzzy.

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom this bill had been referred, recommended the rejection of the bill; and now it being moved by MR. MILLS to postpone the bill indefinitely, it was so postponed, and of course rejected.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "in addition to the act to continue in force an act to protect the commerce of the United States and to punish the crime of piracy," passed through a Committee of the Whole, and was ordered to a third reading.

The bill granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land, also passed through a Committee of the Whole, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to regulate the intercourse between the United States and certain British colonial ports; and, on motion by MR. LLOYD of Massachusetts, it was laid on the table.

The Senate took up the bill from the other House, "concerning the disbursements of public moneys," and, after some explanation by MR. LOWRIE, of the amendments reported by the Committee of Finance to the bill, (giving a discretion, in certain cases, to the Heads of the Departments only, as heretofore particularly stated,) the amendments were agreed to, and the bill ordered to a third reading.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Senate then again resumed, in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt.

MR. VAN DYKE offered his views of the propositions before the Senate, and his reasons for being opposed to the broad measure originally proposed, yet in favor of a modified system of exemption from imprisonment for debt. He concluded by moving that the bill and amendments be referred to a select committee of seven members, that they might, having heard the various views offered by gentlemen, endeavor to frame, from the different substitutes which had been proposed, such a bill as would meet the concurrence of a majority of the Senate.

This motion was agreed to, and Messrs. VAN DYKE, JOHNSON of Kentucky, VAN BUREN, SOUTHARD, MILLS, TAYLOR of Virginia, and SMITH of South Carolina, were appointed the committee.

WEDNESDAY, January 22.

MR. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of John L. Wilson, and others, reported a bill to divide the State of South Carolina into two judicial districts. The bill was read and passed to the second reading.

MR. SMITH also presented the petition of Elihu Hall Bay, and others, praying for a confirmation of certain land titles in the State of Louisiana. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MR. LOWRIE, from the Committee of Finance, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Stephen T. Northam and others, of Rhode Island, (who pray the remission of part of the amount paid the Government, for a license to distil molasses, in consequence of an inundation by which a large quantity of the article was destroyed, and their distillery consequently suspended for a portion of the time for which they had taken out license;) and the report was read.

THURSDAY, January 23.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

In compliance with a resolution of December 12th, 1822, requesting that the President would cause to be laid before the Senate, a statement, exhibiting the amount, in aggregate, of goods, wares, and merchandise, exported from the United States to France, and imported from thence, in each year, from and after the year 1814 to the year 1820, discriminating, in the reports, between the articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, and those of foreign countries; and, also, stating the national char-

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

racter of the vessels in which such exports and imports have been made; I transmit a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, which contains the information desired.

JAMES MONROE.

JANUARY 22, 1823.

The Message and accompanying report were read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The following Message was also received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

In carrying fully into effect the intention of Congress in making an appropriation of five thousand dollars, by the act of the 14th April, 1820, for the survey of the Ohio and the Mississippi rivers, from the Rapids of the Ohio, at Louisville, to the Balize, for the purpose of facilitating and ascertaining the most practicable route of improving the navigation of these rivers, orders were given, through the proper department, to the Board of Engineers, to examine and survey the said rivers, with reference to those objects, and to report their opinion thereon; which they have done, and which report I now communicate for the information of Congress.

JAMES MONROE.

JANUARY 22, 1823.

The Message and accompanying report were read.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Daniel Merrill, praying compensation for his services during the Revolutionary war. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BARTON submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation to enable the President of the United States to extinguish the Indian title to the tract of country on the south side of Missouri river, between the western boundary of the State of Missouri and the Osage line, which runs from Fort Clark to the Arkansas, or to so much thereof as the tribes claiming it may be disposed to sell.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the principal mail from Washington, eastward, to be conveyed in steamboats, where such conveyance is practicable, for the same rates of postage as are allowed for such conveyance, by land.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, to which was referred the bill entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeably to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown," reported the same, without amendment, which was read.

The bill entitled "An act in addition to 'An act to continue in force 'An act to protect the commerce of the United States, and to punish the crime of piracy,' and, also, to make further provision for punishing the crime of piracy," was read a third time, and passed.

The bill entitled "An act concerning the disbursement of public money," was read a third time, as amended, and passed.

The engrossed bill granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land, was read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution instructing them to inquire into the expediency of providing for the final settlement of the militia claims of the State of Georgia for services rendered, under orders of the President of the United States, during the years 1792, '93, and '94; and, on motion by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, presented the memorial of John McAllister, of Alabama, praying the confirmation of his title to a tract of land.—Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Archibald F. Macneill, of North Carolina; and

Mr. MACON made the following motion:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of Archibald F. Macneill, be recommitted to the same committee, with instructions to inquire into the expediency of granting him time to pay the sum due the United States:

Which motion was rejected; and, in concurrence with the report, resolved, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the petition of Stephen T. Northam, and others, of Newport, Rhode Island; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved, that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

The bill to divide the State of South Carolina into two judicial districts, was read the second time.

Mr. EATON gave notice, that to-morrow he should ask leave to introduce a bill to regulate the collecting of debts in the District of Columbia.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to authorize the purchase of a number of the copies of the sixth volume of the Laws of the United States; and, the same having been amended, it was reported to the House accordingly; and, the amendment being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel Walker, and others; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory,' together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on Finance; and, the amendment being agreed to, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

SENATE.

Carver's Grant.

JANUARY, 1823.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to make perpetual an act passed the third day of March, 1817, entitled 'An act to continue in force an act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, passed third day of March, 1815, and for other purposes;'" and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to land, within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Wilcox; and, the bill having been amended by filling the blank with "400," it was reported to the House accordingly; and, the amendment being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of the legal representatives of James McClung, deceased; and, no amendment having been proposed thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to amend "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida," approved the 8th of May, 1822; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to repeal so much of an act, passed the 18th April, 1806, as limits the price of certain lands in the State of Tennessee. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan Territory, and for other purposes;" and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel Hodgdon; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel Buel; and the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri; and the further consideration thereof was postponed until Wednesday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel F. Hooker; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to enable the President of the United States to treat with the Chippewa Indians for the purchase of certain lands on the south side of Lake Superior, supposed to contain valuable mines of copper; and the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to authorize the President of the United States to cause the lead mine and salt spring lands to be exposed to public sale; and the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Wednesday next.

CARVER'S GRANT.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, made the following report, which was read, and ordered to be printed:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Harrison, agent for the heirs of Captain Jonathan Carver, praying for the recognition and confirmation of an Indian deed for a large tract of land near St. Anthony's Falls, on the Mississippi; and also the petition of the Rev. Samuel Peters, LL. D., who claims said tract of land as assignee of the heirs of said Captain Carver, and prays that he may be permitted to take possession of the same, report:

The petitioners state that Captain Jonathan Carver, in the year 1766, took a long tour among the Indian tribes, two hundred miles west of the falls of St. Anthony, on the Mississippi, and made important discoveries during his travels and residence of two years and five months with various Indian tribes, which he caused to be printed and published in London in 1773.

That, by his conciliatory manners, he gained the good will of the Indian tribes, and became the peacemaker between two large nations who were at war; and, to reward him for his wisdom and friendly interposition, the Sachems of the Naudowissies were pleased to grant, and accordingly gave to him and his heirs, a deed for a tract of land, therein specially described, dated at the Great Cave, May the 1st, 1767. That the chiefs of said tribe made him a chief of their tribe on the same day, and he then engaged to return and settle in said territory with his family and connexions. (An alleged copy of said deed is inserted in the first-mentioned petition.) That Captain Jonathan Carver afterwards returned to Boston, and sailed for London, where he arrived in the year 1769, and soon after laid his deed before the British Government, praying for the confirmation of it, and received for answer, that it should be confirmed as soon as the history of his travels was printed and published. But, in consequence of the misunderstanding which existed between Great Britain and America, the ratification of the deed was suspended. That Captain J. Carver died in London, January the 31st, 1780, leaving a numerous progeny; and, by the establishment of the independence of

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

America, the right to gratify Indian grants devolved upon the Government of the United States.

The Rev. Samuel Peters in his petition further states that Lefei, the present Emperor of the Sioux, and Nawdowissies, and Redwing, a Sachem, the heirs and successors of the two grand chiefs who signed the said deed to Captain Carver, have given satisfactory and positive proof that they allowed their ancestors' deed to be genuine, good, and valid, and that Captain Carver's heirs and assigns are the owners of said territory, and may occupy it free of all molestation.

The committee have examined and considered the claim thus exhibited by the petitioners, and remark, that the original deed is not produced, nor any competent legal evidence offered of its execution; nor is there any proof that the persons who it is alleged made the deed were the chiefs of said tribe, nor that (if chiefs) they had authority to grant and give away the land belonging to their tribe. The paper annexed to the petition as a copy of said deed has no subscribing witnesses, and it would seem impossible, at this remote period, to ascertain the important fact that the persons who signed the deed comprehended and understood the meaning and effect of their act.

The want of proof as to these facts would interpose in the way of the claimants insuperable difficulties. But, in the opinion of the committee, the claim is not such as the United States are under any obligation to allow, even if the deed were proved in legal form. The British Government, before the time when the alleged deed bears date, had deemed it prudent and necessary, for the preservation of peace with the Indian tribes under their sovereignty, protection, and dominion, to prevent British subjects from purchasing lands from the Indians; and this rule of policy was made known and enforced by the proclamation of the King of Great Britain of the 7th October, 1763, which contains an express prohibition. Captain Carver, aware of the law, and knowing that such a contract could not vest the legal title in him, applied to the British Government to ratify and confirm the Indian grant; and though it was competent for that Government then to confirm the grant, and vest the title of said land in him, yet, from some cause, that Government did not think proper to do so. The territory has since become the property of the United States; and an Indian grant not good against the British Government would appear to be not binding upon the United States' Government. What benefit the British Government derived from the services of Captain Carver, by his travels and residence among the Indians, that Government alone could determine, and alone could judge what remuneration those services deserved. One fact appears from the declaration of Mr. Peters in his statement in writing among the papers exhibited, namely, that the British Government did give Captain Carver the sum of one thousand three hundred and seventy-five pounds six shillings and eight pence sterling, &c. To the United States, however, Captain Carver rendered no service which could be assumed as an equitable ground for the support of the petitioners' claim.

The committee being of opinion that the United States are not bound in law or equity to confirm the said alleged Indian grant, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Then on motion, the Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

FRIDAY, January 24.

Mr. EATON asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to regulate the collecting of debts in the District of Columbia. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. BARBOUR gave notice, that, at the next sitting of the Senate, he should ask leave to introduce a bill providing suitable buildings for the accommodation of the Circuit Court of the United States for the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and the preservation of its records.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act in addition to the act, entitled 'An act for the prompt settlement of public accounts, and for the punishment of the crime of perjury,'" reported the same, without amendment.

Mr. EATON submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate, if any loans of money to any amount, and for what purpose the same, have been made, from the Treasury to any individuals, or banking institution, since the first day of January, 1818, and whether such loans, so made, have yet been repaid, or in any manner adequately secured, so that the Government will ultimately be satisfactorily reimbursed.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary of War, prepared in conformity with the fifth section of the "Act to amend the several acts for the establishment and regulation of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments," showing the expenditure of the moneys appropriated for the contingent expenses of the Military Establishment for the year 1822; and the report was read.

The PRESIDENT communicated the credentials of WILLIAM R. KING, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Alabama, for the term of six years, commencing on the fourth day of March next; which were read, and laid on file.

On motion, by Mr. VAN DYKE, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, containing reports made under an act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana, was ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of Samuel Q. Richardson, and others, praying compensation for property lost in the service of the United States. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. KELLY submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of dividing the State of Alabama into two judicial districts; and also into the expediency of removing the District Court of the United States, from Cahawba, to Huntsville.

Mr. SOUTHDARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, reported the same, with an amendment, which was read.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, gave notice that, at the next sitting of the Senate, he should ask leave to introduce a bill for the erection, in the burial ground at Washington, of a monument over the tomb of ELBRIDGE GERRY, deceased, late Vice President of the United States.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to continue in force the act, entitled "An act to provide for reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court," passed the 3d day of March, 1817. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 23d instant, for instructing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the expediency of extinguishing the Indian title to a certain tract of country on the south side of the Missouri river, and agreed thereto.

The Senate, also, resumed the consideration of the motion of the 23d instant, for instructing the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the mail to be conveyed in steamboats, and agreed thereto.

The bill to repeal so much of an act, passed the 18th April, 1806, as limits the price of certain lands in the State of Tennessee, was read the second time.

The Senate took up the bill to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDWARDS stated to the Senate, at some length, the reasons which rendered an additional judge necessary, to afford to all parts of that Territory the benefits of a court of justice.

Mr. KING, of New York, and Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, made some incidental remarks on the subject; after which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

On motion, by Mr. BARTON,

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Ebenezer Stevens, and others; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the benefit of George Shannon; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate adjourned, to Monday.

MONDAY, January 27.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, called up the memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, stating the pernicious consequences which had resulted to that State from the act of Congress of 1819, providing that foreign coin should cease to be current in the United States, and praying that the said act be repealed.—Referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. J. also submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing the public lands and private claims, in the State of Louisiana, to be immediately surveyed; and also to inquire into the propriety of granting patents for all claims to lands in the said State, which have been confirmed by the Government of the United States.

Mr. FINDLAY presented the memorial of the President and Directors of the Bank of the United States, praying certain amendments to their charter. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the erection, in the burial ground at Washington, of a monument over the tomb of ELBRIDGE GERRY, deceased, late Vice President of the United States; and the bill was read twice, by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARBOUR asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill providing for the accommodation of the circuit court of the United States for Washington county, in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of the records of said court; and the bill was read twice, by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, laid before the Senate resolutions of the General Assembly of Maryland, requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best exertions to procure such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as will give Congress power to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement, to be confined to great national purposes, with proper limitations; which were read, and laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Governor of the State of Maryland, transmitting a copy of the report of the commissioners appointed by the States of Maryland and Virginia to examine the affairs of the Potomac Company, and survey the Potomac river; which were read, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. KING, of New York, presented the petition of Augustus Porter, and others, inhabitants of New York, praying compensation for losses sustained during the late war with Great Britain. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

TUESDAY, January 28.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Michigan," reported the same, with an amendment; which was read.

Mr. DICKERSON presented the petition of Phebe Moore, administratrix of Stephen Moore, praying compensation for a vessel owned by him, taken possession of and used by the United States, and captured by the enemy during the late war, in consequence thereof. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the memorial of John R. Williams, and others, a committee of the freehold inhabitants of the county of Wayne, in the Territory of Michigan, representing the inexpediency of any alteration in their present local government. The memorial was read, and laid on the table.

JANUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES :

To the Senate of the United States :

I transmit, herewith, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, containing one from Captain John Rodgers, President of the Naval Board, accompanied by a description of the inclined plane, dock, and fixtures for hauling up ships, and an estimate of the cost and materials and workmanship necessary for the completion of a dock and wharves, proposed to be connected with the inclined plane constructed at the navy yard, Washington, and recommend the same to the attentive consideration of Congress.

It is confidently believed that this invention combines advantages so highly useful as to justify the appropriation required.

JAMES MONROE.

The Message and accompanying documents were read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill for the relief of John Buhler, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BARTON presented the petition of John Rush and Samuel Conway, praying compensation for Revolutionary services. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois," reported the same without amendment.

On motion of Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Henry Johnson, of Ohio, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to which the subjects were referred, reported a bill to authorize the building a lighthouse at Cape Romain, in South Carolina, and placing floating lights in Delaware bay. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

The engrossed bill to authorize the purchase of a number of copies of the sixth volume of the Laws of the United States, was read a third time, and passed.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Samuel Walker, and others, was read a third time, and passed.

The engrossed bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Wilcox was read a third time, and passed.

The engrossed bill for the relief of the legal representatives of James McClung was read a third time, and passed.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Samuel Hodgson was read a third time, and passed.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Samuel F. Hooker was read a third time, and passed.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Ebenezer

Stevens, and others, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan Territory, and for other purposes," was read a third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, from the committee to which was referred a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as it respects the election of President and Vice President of the United States, reported the following new draught as a substitute therefor :

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendment of the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths thereof, shall be a part of the said Constitution :

The Electors of a President and Vice President shall meet on the — day of — next, preceding the expiration of the time for which the existing President may have been appointed, vote for a President and Vice President, and make two lists of the persons voted for to fill each office, to be signed and certified by them ; one to be delivered, sealed, to the President of the United States, or, if there is no President, to the person exercising the powers of the said office, within — days thereafter, to be opened and examined by him ; and if it shall appear that no person has received the votes of a majority of the Electors appointed, the President of the United States, or the person exercising the powers of the said office, shall, forthwith, by proclamation and by notifications to the Executives of each State, publish the number of votes given to each person as President ; whereupon, the said Electors shall again meet on the — day of —, next succeeding their first meeting, and vote for one of the two persons as President, who shall have received the greatest number of votes for that office, at their first meeting ; or if it should happen that more persons than two shall have received the greatest number, and also an equal number of votes, the said Electors shall vote for one of them as President. The said Electors shall transmit the other list of votes for a President and Vice President, at their first meeting, and also the list of the votes for a President at their second meeting, if it should take place, to the Seat of Government of the United States, signed and certified, under seal, directed to the President of the Senate, who shall open the said lists, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives ; and if it shall appear that any person has been duly elected President of the United States, according to the Constitution, such person shall be the President ; if not, and it shall appear that any person shall have received the greatest number and also a majority of the votes of the said Electors, then the Senate and House of Representatives shall, immediately, by ballot, each member of both Houses giving one vote, proceed to elect a President from the persons duly voted for at the second meeting of the said Electors. A majority of all the members present at the said joint meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives, shall be necessary to a choice of the President of the United States, on the first ballot, after which a plurality of the said votes shall decide the election. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice President,

SENATE.

Georgia Militia Claims.

JANUARY, 1823.

shall be the Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person shall have such majority, then, from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice President, as provided for by the Constitution.

WEDNESDAY, January 29.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Mr. CÆSAR A. RODNEY, a member of the Senate from the State of Delaware, resigning his seat in the Senate, in consequence of his acceptance of the office of Minister Plenipotentiary to the Government of Buenos Ayres; which letter being read, it was, on motion of Mr. VAN DYKE, ordered that the President of the Senate transmit to the Executive of the State of Delaware information of the resignation of Mr. RODNEY.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual statement of payments made during the year 1822, in discharge of miscellaneous claims; of contracts relative to lighthouses, &c.; of purchases and contracts by collectors of the revenue during 1821; and the expenditures on account of sick and disabled seamen.

Mr. BARFON presented the petition of Taylor Berry, praying that he may be allowed to surrender his title to a tract of land, in Missouri, derived from the United States, but contested at law, and that he may enter an equal quantity of land, which will be free from litigation. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act for the better organization of the District Court of the United States within the State of Louisiana;" in which bill they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Harrison, agent for the heirs of Captain Jonathan Carver, praying for the recognition and confirmation of an Indian deed for a large tract of land near St. Anthony's Falls, on the Mississippi; and, also, the petition of the Rev. Samuel Peters, LL. D., who claims said tract of land as assignee of the heirs of said Captain Carver, and prays that he may be permitted to take possession of the same; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved, that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

TREASURY LOANS.

The Senate took up the following resolution, offered on Friday last by Mr. EATON of Tennessee:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate if any loans of money, to any amount, and for what purpose, have been made from the Treasury to any individuals or banking institution, since the 1st day of January, 1818, and whether such loans, so made, have yet been repaid, or in any manner adequately secured, so that the Government may and will ultimately be satisfactorily reimbursed.

Mr. EATON stated, at some length, the reasons which induced him to offer this resolution. Amongst the information given to the Senate, or to the Committee of the Senate, by individuals in Alexandria, touching the propriety of re-chartering a bank in that town, there were statements by a Mr Linn and a Mr. Morgan, alleging that loans to a large amount had been made by the Treasury Department to the Mechanics' Bank and the Franklin Bank of Alexandria, the first of which had lost its credit, and the latter was notoriously insolvent. These were substantially the facts on which Mr. E. was induced to offer the resolution. He knew of no law which authorized such loans, and presuming that the public money could not be loaned out without the authority of a law, he thought it due to the officer whose conduct was implicated by the above statements, as well as to his own fidelity to his trust, as the circumstances had come to his knowledge, to propose the inquiry—disclaiming, positively and repeatedly, being actuated in this, or any other act of his, in this body, by personal feelings or considerations.

Mr. LOWRIE, of Pennsylvania, suggested to the mover the propriety of extending the inquiry back to the year 1800, to ascertain what had been the practice of the Treasury in relation to its bank deposits and their transfer; for, although he would not dispute about terms, the proper designation of what were by Mr. E. called loans, was nothing more nor less than deposits, made from time to time by the Treasury in different banks, as its own convenience or other circumstances might require. He would prefer that the resolution should be so framed as that the practice of the Treasury, in regard to transfers of deposits, should be disclosed back to the year 1800.

Mr. EATON subsequently consented so to alter the resolution.

Messrs. SMITH of Maryland, ELLIOTT, HOLMES of Maine, and LLOYD of Maryland, each offered some remarks, in part, as to the supposed practice of the Treasury, in relation to such matters, but principally to express their regret that Mr. E. should have accompanied the resolution, which no one would have objected to, with an exhibition of the ex parte and perhaps sinister statements of individuals, and with any comments on them at this stage of inquiry, all calculated to make injurious impressions which might turn out to be unfounded.

Mr. MACON desiring, as the subject was brought up, of which, however, he was entirely ignorant, that the whole history of the practice of the Treasury in regard to this kind of business should be made known from the commencement of the Government, moved that the resolution be so amended as to extend the inquiry back to the 3d day of March, 1789. This modification was agreed to by the Senate, and then the resolution was adopted.

GEORGIA MILITIA CLAIMS.

The Senate took up the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the subject of the claims of the State of Georgia for militia services, rendered under orders of the President of the United States during the years 1792, '3, and '4, which report concludes with a resolution to instruct the Military Committee to report a bill appropriating $129,375 66, in full discharge of the militia claims of Georgia.

JANUARY, 1823.

Georgia Militia Claims.

SENATE.

On the question of agreeing to this resolution, a debate arose, which continued nearly three hours, in which Messrs. WARE, ELLIOTT, CHANDLER, RUGGLES, HOLMES, of Maine, LOWRIE, WILLIAMS of Tennessee, SMITH of Maryland, and BARTON, engaged—the two first named gentlemen entering into it most extensively in support of the claim.

Mr. WARE, of Georgia, delivered the following remarks:

The subject presented by the report of the Committee not only involves principles of primary importance, but is one of feeling and interest to that section of the country whence I come. The parties in interest, through the Legislature of Georgia, have memorialized Congress in strong but respectful language, and to you they confidently look for that justice, which, heretofore, has been withheld from them.

In venturing, sir, to urge upon the consideration of the Senate a recognition of the claim of Georgia, in behalf of a portion of her citizens, for militia services, rendered under circumstances of peculiar danger and peril, I should, but for the confidence I have in the justice and integrity of that claim, feel much embarrassment resulting from its ancient date. But believing that neither time, nor a protracted delay of justice, can impair the obligation imposed by duty and honor, and that it can only be necessary for an American Congress to be satisfied of the correctness of a claim, to insure the enactment of a law making provision for it, I am encouraged to make an effort in support of the appeal made by that State, which I have the honor in part to represent. In this attempt, I cannot be insensible of my own inability to render that justice to the subject which its character and merits emphatically require; and laboring, as I do, under the influence of much debility, produced by indisposition, I should most certainly decline an argument, but from a sense of imperious duty.

In the elucidation of the subject, I propose to consider how far the State of Georgia was entitled to the support and protection of the General Government in all cases of necessity. To show that, at the period of time to which the report refers, the necessity actually existed: That the President of the United States invested the Executive of Georgia with discretionary power and authority to call into service such portions of the militia as the exigency required: That, under the then existing circumstances, the Governor was authorized by the Constitution of the United States to draw into service such parties of the militia as, in his discretion and judgment, the safety of the State, and the inhabitants thereof, demanded; and that the services were actually performed. If, sir, these several grounds can be sustained, the mind must be irresistibly led to the conclusion that the claim is just, and ought to be paid.

In demonstrating the right to support and protection, it can scarcely be necessary to point the attention of the Senate to the Articles of Confederation, which declare, in so many words, "that 'no State shall engage in any war without the 'consent of Congress, unless such State be actually 'invaded, or shall have received advice of a certain resolution being formed by some nation of 'Indians to invade such State,' and that all charges and expenses incurred "for the common defence or general welfare, shall be defrayed out of a common Treasury." Still less necessary, perhaps, may it be considered for me to advert to the provision in the Constitution, giving to Congress the power of calling out the militia in all cases of insurrection, invasion, &c., and to the several laws passed by Congress, under the general Constitutional power, investing the President with full and plenary authority to call out the militia in all cases where the safety and security of a State rendered the exercise of such power necessary. These are axioms and principles with which the Senate must be familiar.

Considering Georgia, then, as a member of the Union, she was entitled to the support and protection of the General Government, whenever her rights or sovereignty were invaded, or likely to be, or her peace and tranquillity disturbed by a belligerent Power. It should, sir, be recollected that, at the period of time which gave birth to the claim under consideration, the frontiers of Georgia, nearly four hundred miles in extent, were bordered by a race of people whose ruling and predominant passion was war, and who readily embraced every opportunity to satiate a jealous and revengeful disposition with the blood of the innocent. Against those savages, who were numerous and warlike, the State, with a thin population and limited resources, had to defend herself. Being, however, a child of the Republic, and having contributed her full proportion in the achievement and establishment of the American Independence, she, of right, claimed that support and protection, due her as a member of the confederation. If, therefore, her situation was such as to require the protecting arm of the General Government to shield her from immediate or pending danger, the principle for which I am contending must be conceded.

Previously however to inquiring into the second division of the subject, to wit, that of necessity, permit me to ask, what are the peculiar circumstances under which this claim is presented, and under which an appeal is made to your magnanimity and justice? At a time when neither sex nor infancy afforded security against unprovoked massacre and slaughter, when the most harassing hostilities were carried on against the unprotected frontier settlements of Georgia, under practices of Indian barbarity and warfare, calculated to arouse all the feelings of hatred and vengeance, and the utmost abhorrence and detestation against the authors and perpetrators of such cruelty, the Executive, with a becoming vigilance and promptitude, and with a single eye to the public weal, communicated to the President the helpless and exposed situation of the frontier settlements, and the necessity of prompt and decisive measures. As a faithful sentinel he discharged his duty; and to his energy of character and celerity in movements, Georgia is indebted for the preservation of the lives of many of her citizens. And shall it now be contended, that, after that State had relinquished to the General Government a large portion of the rights of self-government and protection; after having yielded that allegiance which was to be considered the sure guarantee of life, liberty, and property; that her humble memorial is to be disregarded; that her militia are to go unrequited for important services performed under circumstances of distressing hardship, privation, and danger? No, sir, this cannot be! The principles of common and ordinary justice forbid it—the sacred charter which binds us together, and cements the bond of union and affection, declares against it; and I will not believe that this Senate, justly celebrated for its wisdom, justice, and magnanimity, will close the door against these much injured and much oppressed claimants. Too long have they been knocking at the door of justice; their patience has become nearly exhausted, and it is high time that you should hearken to their solicitations, and put a period to their sufferings.

But, sir, permit me to show more particularly the nature and character of the necessity which induced the Executive of Georgia to call on the President of the United States for assistance. To do this, it becomes necessary to bring to the view of the Senate the correspondence between the Government and the Secretary of War. Those parts of the correspondence which bear more immediately on this point, are the letters of the 22d of May, 1792, 29th April, 1793, and the 8th of May following.

The letters, addressed to the Secretary of War, clearly show the hostile disposition of the Creeks and Cherokees, and the havoc, carnage, and destruction, that marked their frequent incursions into the State. The unprotected situation of the frontiers invited aggression, and the predatory and sanguinary depredations of a dark and insidious enemy, whose track was to be traced by blood and desolation, cried aloud for vengeance. And, although those nations did not rise in the strength of their power, and penetrate the country en masse, yet numerous parties of the most daring and ferocious assailed us at the most vulnerable points. The Executive had not, therefore, to rely solely on the opinion of others, as to a hostile disposition but he had before him many overt acts, which left behind the melancholy evidence of rapacity and cruelty. I will not attempt to portray the heart-rending scenes of misery and distress, which the unhappy survivors of butchered friends and connexions were forced to witness. Nor indeed can it be important or necessary to glance at such painful occurrences, except for the purpose of showing the strong motives which influenced the Governor to appeal to the President for assistance. He informs the President, by the letter already referred to, that the Creeks and Cherokees are unfriendly and hostile; that murders and other wrongs had been committed by them; that there was but little expectation of avoiding a general war with them; that already blood had been spilt in every direction, and that such was the havoc and carnage making by them, that retaliation by open war became the only resort. Will stronger or more conclusive evidence, demonstrating the existence of necessity, be called for or expected? I presume that the evidence afforded by these letters will satisfy the most sceptical on this branch of the subject.

I am aware, sir, that there exists some diversity of opinion as to the third proposition, which I consider desirable, although not indispensably necessary to reconcile. That the President invested the Governor with a discretionary power to call into service such portions of the militia as he might deem expedient and necessary for defensive purposes, is fairly deducible from the letters of the Secretary of War to his Excellency. Although this inquiry may not be interesting to the Senate, yet I ask their indulgence, whilst I endeavor to lay before them the evidence by which I propose to establish the fact. By the letter of the Secretary of War to the Governor, of the 27th October, 1792, we find the following language: "That, if the information which you may receive, shall substantiate clearly any hostile designs of the Creeks against the frontiers of Georgia, you will be pleased to take the most effectual measures for the defence thereof as may be in your power, and which the occasion may require." The evidence contained in this letter derives strength and support from the letter of the Secretary of War, of the 10th of June, 1793, wherein he observes "that the State of Georgia being invaded, or in imminent danger thereof, the measures taken by your Excellency may be considered as indispensable. You are the judge of the degree of danger, and of its duration, and will undoubtedly proportion the defence to the exigencies." Contemporaneously with the date of this letter, the Secretary of War, considering the dangerous situation in which Georgia was placed, and the incursions to which she was exposed, writes to the Executive of South Carolina, and advises him that he is "directed by the President to request your Excellency that, in case the frontiers of Georgia should be seriously invaded by large bodies of hostile Indians, that you would, upon the request of the Governor of said State, direct such parties of militia of South Carolina to march to the assistance of Georgia, as the case may require; for the expenses of which the United States will be responsible."

Will it be pretended that the Treasury of the United States shall be open to the claims of the South Carolina militia, and forever barred against the claims of the Georgia militia, for similar services and for similar purposes? Why draw a line of demarkation, and exclude the demands of the one and not those of the other? I know of no geographical distinctions, in the rights of individuals or States, in our country, and it is adverse to the nature and principles of our Government that there should be. If, indeed, the cases be susceptible of a distinction, I would be inclined to make it in favor of that State which, by unpropitious circumstances, became the immediate theatre of war and rapine. But in principle, sir, there exists no difference nor the slightest shade of one; all such services should be disposed of according to one general and uniform rule, and the same measure of justice meted out to one, ought to be extended to the other. Such a course is demanded by the Constitution, laws, and policy, of our country and Government. That such has been the course in the case before you, may be accounted for on the ground of unavoidable delay in making out and forwarding the estimates of services, pay, and muster rolls, and to the circumstance of the Secretary of War having gone out of office before the accounts were settled, or any decision had thereon.

JANUARY, 1823.

Georgia Militia Claims.

SENATE.

I think proper to remark, that, on the receipt of the first estimates, the accountant required explanations relative to the claims, and afterwards a certificate from the Governor, that the militia had been called into service for the defensive protection of the frontiers. This requirement carries with it strong internal evidence that the Government considered itself bound to pay the claim, provided it had accrued for militia services performed in defence of the State; otherwise, such a requisition would have been idle and nugatory. This presumption is corroborated by the letter of the Secretary of War, of the 6th of August, 1795, to the Governor, wherein he states "that the large estimate of services, about which my predecessor doubted, I have looked into, and think they must be generally admitted;" and in the following September, assures the Governor "that money for paying the Georgia militia is preparing to be forwarded."

I have thus endeavored to show that the President did invest the Governor with full and plenary powers, to be exercised according to his discretion, in repelling the Indians and protecting the frontiers of the State; and that this discretion had not been used till the repeated outrages of the savages rendered it indispensably necessary.

But, sir, the claim to compensation would not be impaired, if the evidence derived from the letters of the Secretary of War, should be considered insufficient to prove the grant of a discretionary power; for, under the then existing state of things, the Governor was fully authorized, by the Constitution of the United States, to exercise such discretion as he considered necessary for the defensive protection of the State. By the fourth section of the fourth article of that instrument, the United States not only guaranties to every State a republican form of government, but also guaranties a protection against invasion; and, by the tenth section of the first article of the same instrument, it is expressly provided, "that no State shall engage in any war unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay." Now, sir, if the circumstances developed by the evidence are to be regarded, if the rays of light reflected by the correspondence are not shut out from our understanding, the mind must be perfectly satisfied that the Executive acted within the pale of the Constitution, in calling out the militia, and by that instrument was completely sheltered and protected. Having, therefore, acted in strict conformity to the Constitution, and, as I would respectfully contend, to the letter of instructions, I cannot perceive any just reason why the claim should not be paid.

I apprehend that the performance of the services will not be contested. The letters of the agent for supplying the troops in Georgia, of the 23d April, 1793, and the 30th of the same month and year, afford abundant evidence that he had caused rations to be issued; and it will not be denied that rations and pay have been heretofore considered inseparable; and most certainly, the soldier who is entitled to the one, claims the other as a matter of right. This fact being conceded, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that the claim is just, and should be paid.

The amount due for services is no longer a matter of speculative opinion. The estimates prepared and forwarded by the then acting agent of the War Department in Georgia, to the Secretary of War, and now on file, attest and prove the precise amount; and it is for the payment of that sum that the committee have made a report in favor of the claimants.

But, sir, I learn that I have to combat a prejudice resulting from the opinion of Mr. Attorney General Lincoln, on the construction of the compact or articles of cession made by Georgia to the United States in 1802, and who, on that occasion, acted as one of the United States' Commissioners.

It is with diffidence and profound respect, that I venture to impugn the opinion of a distinguished jurist on the legal import of words, and the correct and proper construction to be given to an instrument of writing. By that instrument, the State of Georgia "ceded to the United States all the right, title, and claim, which the said State has to the jurisdiction and soil of the lands situated within" certain boundaries, upon certain and express conditions. The United States, on her part, covenants and agrees "to pay at their Treasury one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the State of Georgia, as a consideration for the expenses incurred by the said State, in relation to the said territory." By the construction given, Mr. Lincoln considers that the militia claim of Georgia formed an item of the expenses which the one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was intended to cover and extinguish. The true and legitimate construction can only be made to apply to such expenses as had been incurred by Georgia as a State or Sovereignty, and those too as applicable to the territory ceded. The present claim is for services rendered in protecting the frontiers of the inhabited parts of the State—it is an individual claim for personal services, performed under proper authority, which it was not competent for the State to relinquish to the General Government, without making payment herself, or by virtue of the authority of the claimants. She has uniformly protested against all liability, and it will not be pretended that she was authorized to make a relinquishment of the claim. Such a presumption would be counteracted by the certificate of the Georgia Commissioners, who on a former occasion stated to a committee in the House of Representatives, that the militia claim was not embraced in the articles of cession. I trust, therefore, that, in this view of the subject, and especially after so great a lapse of time, gentlemen will not expect that the particular items swelling the amount of expenses to one million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, are at hand, and ready to be produced. This was a proper subject for the Commissioners, and not now properly inquirable into. But, sir, if it can afford any gratification to honorable gentlemen, I have it in my power to show, from the laws of Georgia, some data by which an imperfect judgment may be formed as to the expenses to which the State had been subjected. For a long series of years, that State had been driven to the necessity of frequently calling out parties of militia, in consequence of Indian hostilities, and the expenses incurred were doubtless heavy and burdensome. In the year 1787, the Indians, by their repeated acts of cruelty and barbarity, obliged the Legislature to pass a law authorizing the raising of two regiments, each to consist of seven hundred and fifty men. These regiments were raised for the purpose of suppressing Indian violences, and were to remain in service till peace and tranquillity were restored. Over and above the regular pay, each officer and soldier was to be entitled to a bounty land warrant, to be located on the unlocated territory of the State. The bounty to the officers was graduated according to rank, and to each militia soldier the quantity of six hundred and forty acres was allowed. On the return of peace, the bounty land warrants were issued, as well as audited certificates of the amount of pay due each officer and soldier. By a subsequent law, these bounty land warrants and audited certificates of outstanding evidences of debt, were made receivable in payment of fractions reserved to the State in the first land lottery.

Besides this, the State had been obliged to hold frequent treaties with the Indians, commencing as far back as the year 1773, for the purpose of restoring peace, fixing on temporary boundary lines, and demarking their hunting ground; and, having some little experience on the subject of Indian treaties, you can readily imagine that the expenses which the State had to sustain were not inconsiderable. The statute book of that State shows that twenty thousand dollars at one time, and fifteen thousand six hundred and sixty-six at another, were appropriated for the purpose of carrying one of those treaties into execution. I cannot believe that this inquiry is by any means important. I have gone into it solely for the purpose of satisfying some gentlemen who expressed to me a desire to receive some information relative to this part of the subject.

When Mr. W. had concluded—

Mr ELLIOTT, of Georgia, addressed the Chair as follows:

Before I make any observations in relation to the merits of the question under discussion, I will attempt to remove some unfounded prejudices which oppose themselves to an impartial investigation. That these militia claims were not finally adjusted under General WASHINGTON's administration, seems to have excited strong suspicions against them. It is true they were not paid by the Administration which directed the service. But it is evident, from the documents now in possession of the Senate, that, as far as any opinion was expressed upon them, by that Administration, it was in favor of their validity. In relation to this subject, the Secretary of War, in August, 1795, wrote thus to the agent of the War Department, then in Georgia: "The large estimate for services, about which my predecessor doubted, I have looked into, and will immediately further examine. From the complexion of these claims, connected with the Governor's certificate, which I received, enclosed in your letter of the 23d of June, I am inclined to think they must be generally admitted." And, in the following September, he assured the Governor, "that money for paying the Georgia militia" was "preparing to be forwarded." In the first of these communications, the probability of the admission of these claims is strongly intimated; while in the last, it would seem they were admitted. For the assurance of the Secretary that money for the payment of them was preparing to be forwarded, is a pretty clear admission, that the amount about to be forwarded was found to be due. Yet, sir, they were not paid! And it can be accounted for only on the grounds suggested by the agent of the War Department, in his report, on this subject. "That, from the peculiar circumstances of the Government at that time, the attention of the Secretary at War was wholly occupied on other objects, and he left the Department before any decision was made." But the omission to settle these claims under such circumstances, furnishes no legitimate conclusion against their validity.

Again, it is objected to these claims, by the honorable member from Maine, that, in point of fact, they do not exist; having been extinguished by the articles of cession, under which Georgia ceded to the United States the territory southward and westward of her present chartered limits. And in support of this position, a letter is introduced, written by Mr. Lincoln, one of the United States' Commissioners on that occasion. This letter was originally addressed to a committee of the House of Representatives, appointed in 1803, to examine these claims, and is printed with their report. It will be necessary to bring again to the notice of the Senate the material parts of this letter. After assuring the committee that he had no authority to determine the question put to him by their chairman, in relation to the claims submitted to their examination, and that he could only state to them his "private ideas and recollections," Mr. Lincoln thus proceeds:

"The expenses incurred by the State, for which the $1,250,000 is to be paid as a consideration, appears to me to be a description so extensive, by the mere force of the terms, as to include every species of expense which had been previously incurred by the same State having any relation to the ceded territory, exclusively, or to it in common with what now constitutes that State. I know of no principles of construction which can so limit the description of expenses, expressed in the treaty of cession, as to exclude therefrom any which were then considered, by either party, as chargeable on the United States for the past military defensive operations of Georgia. Although, in the sense of the convention, 'said territory' means the ceded territory, as distinguished from the remaining territory of the State, yet, at the time of incurring the said expenses, both territories were considered as undivided parcels of an entire whole. And, of course, any defensive operations in one part had relation to the other, as included in the whole, and were, in fact, thus an expense for the defence of both. Further, the $1,250,000 is expressly for expenses incurred. If expenses to this amount had not been incurred, at the time of making the cession, exclusively on account of the ceded territory, the presumption is strong that the allowance was not made merely in consequence of such expenses, but in consideration of those incurred on some common ground. Indeed, I have no recollection of any expenses exclusively on account of the ceded territory having been stated by the commissioners on the part of Georgia, while in treaty with them. In reference to your other queries, 'whether the commissioners considered the present claims satisfied by the convention,' and 'what in fact were the particular expenses referred to,' in the above construed passage, I can only state my own impressions."

JANUARY, 1823.

Georgia Militia Claims.

SENATE.

Mr. Lincoln then goes on to state some circumstances, out of which these impressions grew; but "not recollecting precisely the words which either party made use of on this occasion," he could not say that those impressions were correct.

Throughout the whole of this communication, Mr. Lincoln asserts nothing positively, but is impressed with a belief, from the extensiveness of the terms used in the treaty, viz: "as a consideration for the expenses incurred by said State in relation to said Territory," that the sum paid by the United States must have been in satisfaction of these among other claims against the State of Georgia. Now, the sum contracted to be paid to the State of Georgia, in the articles of cession, is expressly declared to be for "expenses incurred by said State, in relation to said Territory." But the State never acknowledged these militia services as a debt against her. No legislative act can be found, either on the statute books of the State, or on file, to authorize this service. Nor has the State, either directly or indirectly, ever assumed to pay these claims. These are the claims of individuals, for personal services rendered to the United States, and, not coming under the general phrase of "expenses incurred by said State, in relation to said Territory," could not have been provided for by the contracts of cession. Mr. Lincoln's whole reasoning, then, resting on the gratuitous assumption that this service is a debt of the State, is palpably erroneous, and necessarily conducts to a deceptive conclusion. But, in opposition to Mr. Lincoln's reasoning and impressions on the subject, we have the positive and explicit declaration of all of the commissioners on the part of Georgia. For, in the report to which Mr. Lincoln's letter is annexed, the committee say, "the commissioners on the part of Georgia sent also to the committee a certificate, under their hands, in which they explicitly declare that the militia services, which are the basis of the present application, were not at all contemplated as a part of the consideration expressed in the articles of cession." Can there now remain a doubt, in the mind of any honorable member, in relation to the facts at issue? Here are three gentlemen who assert positively against the mere impressions of a fourth! I take this to be conclusive against the supposition of the extinguishment of these claims, under the articles of cession. Having thus attempted to remove the prejudices which existed against these claims, I ask the attention of the Senate to a few remarks on their merits; and, that I may be the more distinctly understood, I submit two propositions, viz:

1st. Militia services are entitled to remuneration from the National Treasury, whenever they have been rendered in obedience to a call of the President of the United States.

2dly. They are equally entitled to compensation, when rendered under the authority of the Governor of a State, provided "such State is invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay."

The Constitution of the United States makes it the duty of the General Government "to provide for the common defence;" and powers commensurate to this object are liberally given in various parts of that instrument. Hence, Congress is authorized "to raise and support armies; to declare war; to provide and maintain a navy; and to provide for calling out the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions." But the Constitutional organ to apply this power, is the President of the United States. Accordingly, since the year 1789, by a succession of acts, have Congress fully empowered the President to call into service such portions of the militia, for the purpose of protecting the frontiers, and repelling Indian hostilities, as he should think necessary. And, in the act of the 2d May, it is expressly provided, "that, whenever the United States shall be invaded, or in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States, most convenient to the place of danger, or scene of action, as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion; and to issue his orders for that purpose, to such officer or officers of the militia as he shall think proper."

It was competent, then, for the President to direct the defence of Georgia, through the agency of the Governor, whenever he became convinced that the situation of the State required the measure. Of this necessity he was convinced, by the official representations he received from the Governor, and from the commandants of the Federal forces in Georgia, setting forth the houses which were destroyed, the property plundered, and the murders committed in various parts of the State.

These representations, leaving no room to doubt of the necessity of defensive measures, the President of the United States did, on the 27th October, 1792, commit the defence of Georgia to the judgment and discretion of the Governor of that State. [Here the Secretary's letter was read, giving this power.] In this communication, Mr. President, we find this unequivocal passage: "If the information which you may receive shall substantiate clearly any hostile designs of the Creeks against the frontiers of Georgia, you will be pleased to take the most effectual measures for the defence thereof as may be in your power, and which the occasion may require." Here the Governor is constituted not only the judge of the occasion for calling out the militia, but of the force to be employed. The whole militia force of the State is placed at his disposal for defensive purposes, should the occasion require its employment; and of this occasion he was to be the judge. Accordingly, in the due exercise of this discretion, various detachments of the militia were called into service for defensive purposes. These detachments were mustered into service, and commanded by Federal officers. They were supplied with arms, and received rations at the expense of the United States. And, as an indispensable evidence of their title to compensation, it was required of them that they should exhibit certificates from the Governor, setting forth their employment under his orders, and for defensive purposes. In the employment, then, of these militia, I cannot resist the conclusion, that the Governor of Georgia acted under the authority, and was the agent of the President; that, as such, the service was rendered to the United States, and that they are bound to make compensation.

But, this point having been minutely examined by my colleague, I will not fatigue the attention of the Senate by a further investigation of it, but pass to the consideration of the second proposition, viz: militia services are "entitled to compensation from the General Government, when rendered under the authority of the Governor of a State, provided such State is invaded, or is in such imminent danger, as will not admit of delay."

Although the Constitution has committed the defence of the country generally to the Federal Government, yet, among the reserved rights of the States, is the one to defend themselves under particular emergencies. Accordingly, we find, in the last clause of the tenth section of the first article of that instrument, these words: "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty on tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or, in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay."

Whenever, therefore, a State is invaded, or is in such imminent danger thereof as will not admit of delay, it may, constitutionally, defend itself. But, sir, what is the import of the phrase "invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay?" The verb to invade, from which invaded is derived, signifies to make a hostile entrance, to attack, to assail. The State, then, which is entered with hostile intentions, or is attacked, or assailed, is invaded, and, when seriously threatened with immediate hostility, is to be considered, in the language of the Constitution, in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay. And what was the actual situation of Georgia, at the period to which this inquiry is directed? On the 29th of April, 1793, the President was informed by the Governor that, "from the depositions of Benjamin Harrison and Francis Pugh, and the information of Joseph Dabb, there is little expectation of avoiding a general war with the Creek and Cherokee Indians. Blood has been spilt in every direction on the extended frontier of this State, and one man killed in Carolina." And on the 8th of May, he added, "such was the havoc and carnage by the savages in every direction on our frontiers, retaliation, by open war, became the only resort. That the horrid barbarities committed, (some recitals of which were enclosed,) had compelled him to cause the additional aid of six troops of horse to be drawn into service." And, on the 10th of June, in reply to this communication, the Secretary of War said to the Governor, "The State of Georgia being invaded, or in imminent danger thereof, the measures taken by your Excellency may be considered as indispensable. You are the judge of the degree of danger and of its duration, and will undoubtedly proportion the defence to the exigencies." The President, however, expresses his confidence that "as soon as the danger which has induced you to call out so large a body of troops shall have subsided, you will reduce the troops to the existing state of things, provided the safety of the frontiers will admit it." And, as if apprehensive that the militia of Georgia would not be equal to the impending crisis, this communication was accompanied by a letter to the Governor of South Carolina, directing him to aid in the defence of Georgia, should the Governor of that State request it, and that the United States would be responsible for the expenses. It is evident, then, both from the facts, as disclosed in this case, and from the President's opinion expressed upon them, that Georgia was not only in imminent danger of invasion at this period by the Indians, but was actually invaded. Consequently, the Governor was authorized to defend the State by calling out and employing the militia for that purpose, as well under the Constitution as by the opinion of the President, communicated to him on the existing state of things. It is true the President expressed a wish that the number of troops might be reduced; but added, immediately, "provided the safety of the frontiers will admit it." But, sir, the safety of the frontiers did not admit it; and I will proceed to show why the frontier continued to be so endangered as not to admit of a reduction of the troops. With a sparse population, Georgia had four hundred miles of territory to defend! Along this whole line were to be found the rude settlements of hostile savages! The Cherokees were a frank, a warlike, and an intrepid people. The Creeks were a cunning, insidious, and murderous tribe. With the former it might have been possible to maintain peace by conciliation; but force alone could guard you against the treachery and ferocity of the latter. Headed by McGillivray, an artful, vindictive, half-blood chief, who had sworn vengeance against Georgia, on account of the loss of his father's property, (which had been confiscated by the State for his adherence to the enemy during the war of the Revolution,) they had thoroughly imbibed his spirit, and were the fit instruments of his revenge. As early as the year 1789, this nation commenced unprovoked hostilities against the frontiers of Georgia; and, although a treaty was concluded with McGillivray, at New York, in 1790, whose sole object was the peace of that State, no sooner had the presents been exhausted, which were given on that occasion as the price of the treaty, than the war was renewed with increased malevolence. In this situation, sir, it was the obvious policy of Georgia to have embodied a competent military force, and, by a prompt offensive movement, carried the war into the enemy's country, and destroyed their towns and villages. This energy on the part of the State would either have insured a peace, or rendered the nation less powerful or arrogant in war. And to such an enterprise the militia of Georgia were fully competent; nay, sir, they were anxious for permission thus to chastise their savage invaders. But the State had it no longer in her power to make war or conclude peace, this being an attribute of the Federal Government, to which she had then recently given her assent. And, "from considerations of policy," at this critical period, relative to foreign Powers, and the pending treaty with the northern Indians, it was deemed advisable by the President to avoid offensive expeditions into the Creek country. In a war, all offensive movements, on the part of Georgia, against the Creek nation, were strictly inhibited by the General Government. The Governor, as was his duty, conformed to the orders of his Constitutional superior, and the ruthless invaders, whose hands were yet stained with the blood of those they had murdered, were thus sheltered from punishment the moment they had passed an imaginary line in a wilderness country! There, secure from pursuit, and left to enjoy undisturbed the fruits of their treachery, is it at all surprising the enemy should have continued the unequal contest, and thus made necessary corresponding measures of defence? Sir, they did continue it, and with murderous effect, throughout the period to which this inquiry is directed. So severe was the pressure, for months, upon the eastern part of the State, that the whole frontier was broken up, and the retiring females and their children could be protected from massacre only by being immured in forts and blockhouses. And, Mr. President, if the citizens of Georgia acquiesced in this course because it subserved the views and interests of the Union; if they patiently endured, for years, such a defensive war, in which their persons were harassed, their property was plundered, and many an hapless family butchered, because the policy of the General Government required the sacrifice, will you now refuse the price of that defence which your policy made necessary? Will you now say to the honest militiaman who has faithfully performed his duty, Although both the Constitution and the President of the United States did authorize the defence of Georgia, yet, as we believe the Governor might have performed the service with fewer men, you cannot be paid? No, sir, your policy made the service necessary. It has been faithfully, nay, painfully rendered, in obedience to the call of the constituted authorities; and the faith and the justice of the nation are pledged for the payment of the price.

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

When Mr. ELLIOTT had concluded, the question was taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to without a count.

THURSDAY, January 30.

THE PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting copies of the Digest of Manufactures, prepared and printed by order of a joint resolution of Congress of the last session.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, gave notice that, to-morrow, he should ask leave to introduce a bill to revive and continue in force the seventh section of an act, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana," approved on the 11th May, 1820, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, gave notice that, to-morrow, he should ask leave to introduce a bill making an appropriation for the gradual armament of the new fortresses of the United States.

The bill brought up yesterday, from the House of Representatives, for concurrence, was twice read by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill to regulate the collecting of debts in the District of Columbia, was read the second time, and referred to the same committee.

The bill to continue in force the act, entitled "An act to provide for reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court," passed the third day of March, 1817, was read the second time.

The bill to authorize the building a lighthouse at Cape Romain, in South Carolina, and placing floating lights in Delaware Bay, was read the second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of James Morrison, of Kentucky, and the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for Monday next.

Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, presented the memorial of Robert Young and Richard Bland Lee, Judges of the Orphans' Court of Alexandria and Washington counties, in the District of Columbia, praying a revision of the existing laws in relation to the powers and duties of those courts. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Samuel Buel; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to make perpetual an act passed the 3d day of March, 1817, entitled 'An act to continue in force an act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed 3d day of March, 1815, and for other purposes; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Wednesday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the lower rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeably to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown," together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on Roads and Canals; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate, on motion of Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the erection of a monument over the tomb of the late Vice President, Elbridge Gerry.

Mr. LLOYD submitted a few remarks on the circumstances which had delayed this act until the present time, and moved to make the appropriation of one thousand dollars, which was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, having been reported engrossed, it was read a third time, by unanimous consent, passed, and sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence.

The Senate took up the resolution offered yesterday by Mr. KELLY, of Alabama, which he modified to read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of dividing the State of Alabama into two judicial districts; and, also, into the expediency of providing by law for holding a district court of the United States at Huntsville.

Mr. KELLY offered a few remarks in explanation, referring to the geographical circumstances of the State, the remoteness of the great body of those who were sued by non-residents of the State, from the present seats of justice, the burdensome expenses this threw upon them, as the marshal charged his fees by mileage, &c., to show the propriety of the change he proposed.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Senate next proceeded to the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives in addition to the act providing for the prompt settlement of public accounts.

Mr. RUGGLES explained the object of the bill and its expediency, (being a general bill to authorize the equitable settlement of accounts in the office of the Third Auditor, in the absence of certain evidence now required by the forms of that office, instead of requiring the individual in each case to obtain the sanction of Congress for such settlement by a special law, as is and has been the practice heretofore.) He offered an amendment making the final reference, in case of disagreement, to the Second Comptroller instead of the Secretary of War, as proposed by the bill; which amendment was agreed to; and then

The bill was postponed until to-morrow.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

On motion of Mr. DICKERSON, the Senate took up (for the purpose of allowing Mr. D. to offer an amendment thereto) the resolution introduced by Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as regards the election of the President of the United States.

Mr. DICKERSON then submitted the following, as a substitute for a resolution of Mr. TAYLOR; which was read, and ordered to be printed.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of the said Constitution:

"That, for the purpose of choosing Representatives in the Congress of the United States, each State shall, by its Legislature, be divided into a number of districts, equal to the number of Representatives to which such State may be entitled. The districts shall be formed of contiguous territory, and contain, as nearly as may be, an equal number of persons entitled by the Constitution to be represented, or of persons qualified to vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. In each district, the persons qualified to vote shall choose one Representative.

"That, for the purpose of choosing Electors of President and Vice President of the United States, the persons qualified to vote for Representatives in each district shall choose one Elector; and, at the same time, the two additional Electors, to which each State is entitled, shall be chosen by the persons so qualified to vote, in such manner as the Legislature of the State shall direct. The Electors, when convened at the time and place prescribed by law for the purpose of voting for President and Vice President of the United States, shall have power, in case any of them shall fail to attend, to choose an Elector or Electors, in place of him or them so failing to attend. The division of States into districts, as hereby provided for, shall take place immediately after this amendment shall be adopted, and immediately after every future census and apportionment of Representatives under the same; and such districts shall not be altered until a subsequent census shall have been taken, and an apportionment of Representatives under it shall have been made.

JANUARY, 1823.

Louisiana Lands.

SENATE.

"That, when the lists of all persons voted for as President and Vice President, and the number of votes for each shall have been transmitted to the Seat of Government, as required by the Constitution, the Senate and House of Representatives shall form a joint meeting, in which the President of the Senate shall preside, who shall then open all the certificates, and the votes shall be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such a majority, then from the highest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President, the joint meeting shall immediately, by ballot, choose the President. A majority of the votes of all the members present shall be necessary to a choice on the first ballot, after which a plurality of votes only shall be necessary to a choice. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice President, shall be the Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; if no person have such majority, then he shall be chosen by the Senate as directed by the Constitution.

"That no person who has been twice elected President of the United States, shall again be eligible to that office."

LOUISIANA LANDS.

The Senate next took up the following resolution, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, on Monday last:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing the public lands and private claims in the State of Louisiana, to be immediately surveyed; and also to inquire into the propriety of granting patents for all claims to lands in the said State, which have been confirmed by the Government of the United States.

Mr. J. said that the treaty transferring to the United States the province of Louisiana, not only secures to the people of the ceded territory the enjoyment of their rights and property, but it imposes upon the Government of the United States the obligation to provide for the speedy adjustment of their land claims, and to encourage emigration to the country, by bringing the public lands into the market. He could not perceive the wisdom or justice of that policy which had induced the Government to cause the public lands in Alabama, Mississippi, and elsewhere, to be surveyed and sold, in preference to those in Louisiana. The territory which now composes the State of Alabama, and which, he said, was a wilderness a few years ago, had been surveyed and sold, and at this time contains a white population perhaps equal to that of Louisiana. And the public lands in Mississippi, Indiana, and Illinois, had been surveyed and offered for sale. He said, independently of the obligations imposed by the treaty, from the local situation of Louisiana, being a frontier, and being in many respects the most important section of the Union, and being more exposed than either of the other States, to external invasion and to internal commotion, it was certainly much more important to strengthen and to defend the country by a dense white population. The necessity of such a population was sensibly felt during the late war. Had the waste lands in Louisiana been settled at the time of the invasion of the country by the British troops, they would have contained a force nearly adequate to the defence of the State; and most of the militia employed from the upper country might have been dispensed with, and the great expense thereby incurred saved to the nation, and many of those who perished by the effects of the climate would have been preserved. He was sorry to say that, although the United States have had possession of Louisiana about seventeen years, neither the public lands nor private claims were yet surveyed, nor were all the claims even adjusted. There are many large claims in the country, conflicting with small ones, which had been suspended, and are not yet decided on. These are subjects of deep interest to the people of Louisiana, and they have a right to complain of the delays alluded to. Indeed, the policy which had been pursued in relation to this subject was pregnant with serious evils. The people were not only kept in suspense and uncertainty, in regard to their claims, but the influx of American population had been checked; agriculture had been discouraged, and the development of the resources of the State retarded. The people of Louisiana, he said, were deprived of the benefits of a very important act of Congress, which passed two years ago, granting them the right of pre-emption to their back possessions, for the want of surveyors to execute the surveys required by the act.

Mr. J. said, if the surveying in Louisiana has not progressed for the want of an adequate compensation to the surveyors, their fees should be augmented; but, if the delay in completing the work is owing to the neglect or incompetency of the surveyors employed, they should be dismissed and others appointed; or, if it is to be ascribed, as is suggested by some, to the want of funds to defray the expenses, the necessary appropriations to effect the object should be made. He said, at every session since he had taken his seat in the Senate, he had urged the importance of these subjects upon the consideration of the Government. Still no effectual step had been adopted calculated to bring the business to a close. He was not in the habit of complaining, but were he not to express freely the sentiments he entertained in relation to these subjects, so interesting to the State he had the honor in part to represent, he would be unmindful of the duty he owed his constituents.

Mr. J. remarked, in conclusion, that patents had not been granted by the Government for any claims in Louisiana; that the people are anxious to obtain that evidence of their titles which renders them secure; and, in his opinion, patents should have been issued as their claims were confirmed. He had assurances from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that the subject should now be attended to; but, if further legislative provision is required in relation to the subject, existing laws should be amended without delay.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, acquiesced in the pro-

SENATE.

Claim of George Shannon.

JANUARY, 1823.

priety of the inquiry but added a remark on the inapplicability of what Mr. J. had said in relation to the surveys in Alabama.

The resolution was then agreed to.

CLAIM OF GEORGE SHANNON.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the benefit of George Shannon.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, stated that the bill contained two sections. The first granted six hundred and forty acres of land, to be located in Arkansas; the second proposed an increase of pension from twelve to sixteen dollars per month, which would make it equal to that allowed to a Second Lieutenant. Mr. J. said he was well aware of the extreme difficulty which he had to encounter in attempting to rivet the attention of the Senate to an individual application. In this case, he was animated with hopes of success, as the measure proposed a reward for important public services. He was not unmindful that the members of this body had many duties to perform in the investigation of measures of a general tendency. And there was less disposition to entertain personal applications, because many were addressed to their benevolence and charity. But he was happy to inform the Senate that this was a direct appeal to their justice. It was not a call for that charity which induced the Congress of the United States to relieve the unfortunate sufferers at Caraccas, in consequence of an earthquake. The consideration upon which this claim is predicated has arisen from the performance of military service, and the loss of a limb while discharging those duties. Mr. Shannon was one of the few surviving companions of Lewis and Clarke, who explored the unknown regions of the West, from the settlements of St. Louis, over the Rocky mountains, to the mouth of the Columbia river, which empties into the Pacific ocean. This was not a demand as pay for these signal services. Like others, he had received his pay; and, however inadequate, he was contented to receive what the Government had given. He was not disposed to compare the little he had received with the toil and suffering which he had undergone—the privation and danger which he had encountered with his gallant companions. But, Mr. J. said, he would venture to assert that the expedition of Lewis and Clarke to the Pacific ocean was very little inferior to the greatest undertakings, either by land or by water, of which we had any historic account. Those regions were very familiar now to many individuals; but, twenty years ago, when this exploring party undertook to penetrate this vast wilderness, it was considered by all as presenting more than an equal chance, to this small band, never to return to the bosom of their native country. Independent of the natural difficulties which the undertaking presented, it was well known that those Western wilds were inhabited by innumerable hordes of savage men, which made it extremely improbable that so small a party should escape their fury. In fine, this hazardous enterprise was performed with a firmness of purpose and fidelity of conduct which gave to these brave men the highest claims to the gratitude of their country.

The claim of Mr. Shannon is founded on services subsequent to this perilous expedition. He was employed as one of that small party who undertook to escort, and safely conduct to his own nation, the Mandan Chief, who had visited the United States at the request of Lewis and Clarke. It was in the performance of this duty that he was wounded, which produced the amputation of his leg above the knee. Near the Arracara towns, on the river Mississippi, Lieutenant Prior, with his chosen band of about twenty persons, was attacked by three hundred Indian warriors. The resistance of this little party was desperate. The Indians were held in check, and our party made good their retreat. It was on this occasion that Mr. Shannon distinguished himself by his bravery; and it was upon this occasion he received the wound which in a great measure deprives him of locomotion. We demand nothing for the suffering which he experienced, but for the loss which he sustained. Without medical aid, he had to descend the Mississippi to Belle Fontaine, where the kindness of hospitality could be extended to him, and medical assistance procured. The anguish of his wound was borne with manly fortitude. It was a consolation to him that he was suffering for that country to which he was devoted, and that he suffered alone; for he was then without a family; and he was more willing to make all this sacrifice without demanding from the Government that compensation which we are bound in honor and in justice to award to him. But, since that period, he has formed connexions in life which have increased his duties to society and to himself. He has now to provide for a wife and an increasing family, who are dependent on him alone for the necessities and for the comforts of life. He spent the prime of his life in the service of his country—the period most favorable for intellectual improvement, and preparation for some profession to smooth the rugged path of life, and by devoting himself to some useful occupation to secure competence and independence. But of these opportunities he was deprived, while others were improving their faculties and qualifying themselves for some literary profession or manual occupation. Mr. Shannon not only spent three years of the most interesting period of human life in the service of his country, in exploring these Western regions, but, at the close of that service, he found himself a cripple, deprived of one of his members; his future prospects overshadowed with clouds; the pleasure of locomotion almost destroyed during the whole remainder of his life; disqualified for manual labor; laboring under all the disadvantages of the want of an early liberal education; and, to complete the circle of his misfortunes, he was without wealth and without money. With this dreary prospect before him, what was he to do? Ardent in his feelings; high-minded and honorable; without depending on the liberality or justice of his country for support, he determined to qualify himself for the practice of the law.

JANUARY, 1823.

Land Titles in Louisiana.

SENATE.

Without riches, without friends, without an early education, the resolution was a bold one. This determination required great exertion and considerable expense. He qualified himself, by a rapid course of study, for the labors of the bar, which is his only dependence for the support of himself and family. Although he has risen to eminence in his profession, yet such has been the liberality of his disposition, his services in the Legislature of Kentucky, and the little that is gained at a crowded bar, he has not been able to discharge or lessen those debts which he contracted while disabled in your service, and preparing to discharge the duties of his profession. Who would voluntarily sustain his loss? Who would be deprived of the pleasures of locomotion for the paltry consideration proposed by this bill? Who would be unwilling to see his country, rich in land and rich in money, extend this relief to a distinguished fellow-citizen, who had thus devoted himself to its interest? Connected with these sacrifices, Mr. J. said, he recollected of hearing Mr. Shannon, on a late memorable occasion, while addressing his enlightened constituents, whom he had represented with so much credit, declare that he could boast of no paternal inheritance, except that liberty and independence which we all enjoy, and for which his father had fought in the Revolutionary war. While we avoid every thing like extravagance or prodigality, he hoped Congress would pursue a liberal course towards those who had freely shed their blood, and who had lost their limbs in the service of their country. We have given many examples of that liberality and justice which disproved the charge of ingratitude against this Republic. We had provided for the Revolutionary hero; we had provided for the widows and the orphans of the late war; we had provided for the wounded officer and soldier; and, on this occasion, he hoped he did not ask in vain.

On motion, the bill was laid over until tomorrow.

LAND TITLES IN LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to land within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the United States, to institute proceedings in the courts of the United States to try the validity thereof.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, after some remarks on the strong claim which the holders of these titles had to be allowed to prove and settle their validity, &c., moved to strike out that clause of the bill, which proposes to except from this privilege all claims above — acres, (to be reserved for the future disposition of Congress,) and to substitute a provision excluding by name, and these only, the three great claims of the Baron Bastrop, the Marquis of Maison Rouge, and Houmas. He offered this amendment, not that he thought the claims specified less entitled to an early adjustment, but to disembarass this bill from the difficulty which these three large claims might present to its speedy passage, if included in it, and with the view of bringing them forward in a separate bill.

Mr. LOWRIE stated his objections to this amendment, and to legislating at this time for any but the smaller class of these claims.

Mr. BROWN, of Louisiana, followed in a speech of considerable length and much earnestness, in general support of the bill. He gave a historical view of the transfers of the country in question, the origin and nature of land claims there, under the different Governments, &c., and urged forcibly the expediency and the justice of permitting those holding claims not comprehended in the adjustments of the Boards of Commissioners to come forward, after so many years delay, and establish the validity of their titles in the courts of the United States, where, in fact, they must come sooner or later, as the genuine titles could never be invalidated or impaired by the power of Congress, or its delay.

The amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, was negatived; and, after some further discussion on details,

Mr. VAN DYKE (Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands) submitted a motion so to amend the bill as to comprehend all the unsettled land titles, large and small; which motion he supported by a number of remarks, to show that the legality of these titles could only be ascertained judicially; that it was not probable, after the experience which was had, that Congress would adjudicate them; that they must come into the courts eventually; and that it was due to the numerous citizens concerned, to the State in which the claims lay, &c., that no longer delay should be permitted.

Before the question was taken on this amendment, a motion was made by Mr. CHANDLER to postpone the bill to Monday, to give time for examining it; which motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, January 31.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the acts to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States, in the Revolutionary war;" and also a bill entitled "An act for the relief of James Morrison, of Kentucky;" in which bill they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The first of said bills was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Pensions. The other was also twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to establish a national armory on the Western waters. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the same committee, in pursuance of the resolution of the Senate, reported a bill directing the payment of the Georgia militia claims, for services rendered during the years 1792, 3, and '4. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, presented the petition of Edward Owings, praying payment of the arrears due to two soldiers, of whose claims he had become the purchaser, for a valuable consideration. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, laid before the Senate a document in support of the claim of Robert Shaw, who lost a horse in the service of the United States; which was read, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. VAN DYKE presented the memorial of Herkimer Sternberg and others, praying certain amendments to the patent laws. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, making an appropriation ($100,000 a year for ten years) for the gradual armament of the new fortresses of the United States. The bill was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate, a statement of the number and size of cannon, mortars, and howitzers, necessary to the armament of the fortresses of the United States, which have been erected since the first day of June, 1815, as well as those which have been directed to be built, and not yet completed; with an estimate of the sum necessary to defray the expense of purchasing such armament; also, an estimate of the sum necessary for purchasing such a quantity of shot and shells, of every description, as may be thought necessary for the fortresses before mentioned, designating the necessary armament for each fortress.

MONDAY, February 3.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report, by the Second Comptroller, showing the amount expended, and the balance remaining unexpended, of the appropriations for the service of the year 1822, on the 31st of December last; and the letter and report were read.

The PRESIDENT, also, communicated a report of the President and Directors of the Washington Canal Company, made in obedience to the provisions of their charter, containing a statement of their receipts and expenditures for the year ending on the 31st day of December last; and the report was read.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, presented the petition of John Mitchell, praying relief in the settlement of his accounts as agent for the exchange of prisoners of war, at Halifax, in the years 1812 and 1813. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the petition of Elijah Vansyckel, of the city of Philadelphia, made a report, accompanied by a resolution that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to revive and continue in force the seventh section of an act, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana," approved the 11th May, 1820, and for other purposes. The bill was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SOUTHARD gave notice that, to-morrow, he should ask leave to introduce a bill for the punishment of frauds committed on the Departments of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into the expediency of admitting the silver coins of Mexico as a currency in the United States, at their true value.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the credentials of JOHN CHANDLER, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Maine, for the term of six years, commencing with the fourth day of March next; which were read, and laid on file.

Mr. WARE presented the petition of James Pelot, praying an additional compensation for his services as assistant assessor. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill directing the payment of the Georgia militia claims for services during the years 1792, '3, and '4, was read the second time.

The bill to establish a national armory on the Western waters, was read a second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, in addition to the act for the prompt settlement of public accounts, and for the punishment of the crime of perjury; and some time was spent in discussing the provisions of the bill. In the course of the discussion—

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, moved to insert a clause providing that "the testimony of the party interested shall in no case be admitted; nor shall any other evidence be admitted, but according to the rules of evidence in the courts of law;" when the bill was postponed until to-morrow.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

Having lately received a memorial from the Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, on subjects very interesting to the inhabitants of that Territory, and also to the United States, which require legislative provision, I transmit the same to Congress, and recommend it to their consideration.

JAMES MONROE.

FEBRUARY 3, 1823.

The Message and accompanying memorial were read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of James Morrison, of Kentucky; and on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Friday next.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Importation of Merchandise.

SENATE.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the benefit of George Shannon; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, to-morrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeably to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown;" and, on motion, the bill was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to land within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes; and, on motion, the bill was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on the District of Columbia; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Wednesday next.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to enable the President of the United States to treat with the Chippewa Indians for the purchase of certain lands on the south side of Lake Superior, supposed to contain valuable mines of copper; and, on motion, the bill was laid on the table.

IMPORTATION OF MERCHANDISE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, from the House of Representatives, to amend the act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory.

Mr. SEYMOUR moved the adoption of the following additional sections to the bill:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, if any person or persons shall receive, conceal, or buy any goods, wares, or merchandise, knowing them to have been illegally imported into the United States, and liable to seizure by virtue of any act in relation to the revenue, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum double the amount or value of the goods, wares, or merchandise, so received, concealed, or purchased.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That, if any person shall forcibly resist, prevent, or impede, any officer of the customs, or their deputies, or any person assisting them in the execution of their duty, such person so offending shall for every such offence be fined in a sum not exceeding four hundred dollars.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the forty-sixth section of the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," passed the 2d day of March, 1799, be, and they hereby are, extended to the case of goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States from an adjacent territory.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force of this act shall be sued for, recovered, distributed, and accounted for, in the manner prescribed by an act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," passed on the 2d day of March, 1799.

These amendments were ordered to be printed, and the bill was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT COURT—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate then took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill providing for the accommodation of the Circuit Court of the United States for Washington county, in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of the records of said court. [This bill authorizes the President to cause to be purchased and completely finished a number of apartments in the new City Hall, now building in Washington, sufficient for the accommodation of the circuit court of the county, for grand and petit jury rooms, and for the offices of the clerk of the court and the marshal of the District; and, for effecting the object, appropriates — dollars.]

A good deal of debate followed on this bill, in which it was earnestly supported by Mr. BARBOUR, and was as earnestly opposed by Mr. MASON; it was opposed also by Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, and partially by Messrs. LOWRIE, CHANDLER, HOLMES of Maine, BROWN of Ohio, and WILLIAMS of Tennessee, who thought that if the bill did pass, the sum of $30,000 (which had been mentioned by Mr. BARBOUR as necessary) was a great deal too much.

Mr. BARBOUR, acquiescing in what appeared to be the sense of the Senate, reduced the sum he intended to propose, and moved to fill the blank with $20,000. This sum was negatived without a division.

The sum of $15,000 was then moved, and also rejected.

The sum of $10,000 was moved, and carried—yeas 16, nays 10; and

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time—yeas 14, nays 12.

The resolution offered by Mr. CHANDLER on Friday was taken up and agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, February 4.

The engrossed bill providing for the accommodation of the circuit court of Washington county, in the District of Columbia, was read a third time and passed—yeas 21.

Mr. BARTON presented the petition of Prospect K. Robbins, late a lieutenant in a company of United States' rangers, praying the payment of his account for a private servant and horse retained by him while in service; and the petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BARTON presented the petition of George Gatty, praying the confirmation of his title to a tract of land which he has inhabited and cultivated since the year 1809; and the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, presented the petition of Peter Cherry, who served in the Army of the United States, in the Revolutionary war, praying a pension, agreeably to the act of the 18th of March, 1818; and the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of Alfred Flournoy, praying the commutation of his monthly pension for an equivalent in land, for reasons stated in his petition; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the better organization of the district court of the United States within the State of Louisiana," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to regulate the collection of debts in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill to revive and to continue in force the second section of an act, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana, approved the eleventh May, 1820, and for other purposes," reported the same with an amendment; which was read.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion, submitted yesterday, in relation to the coins of Mexico, and agreed thereto.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana; and the bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Finance, on the petition of Elijah Van Syckel; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act in addition to an act, entitled 'An act for the prompt settlement of public accounts, and for the punishment of the crime of perjury,'" together with the amendments proposed thereto; and, on motion, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARBOUR gave notice that he should ask leave to bring in a resolution granting to the Washington Library a copy of the public documents, laws, and journals.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the select committee to which was referred the bill, together with the substitutes proposed thereto, for abolishing imprisonment for debt, reported a new bill, embracing a number of sections; which bill was read.

Mr. BARBOUR laid before the Senate an act of the British Parliament, passed June, 1822, to regulate trade between the British possessions in America and the West Indies; and other places in America and the West Indies; which act was, on motion of Mr. B., ordered to be printed.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Buel was discussed in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. SOUTHWARD, agreeably to notice given, having obtained leave, introduced a bill to punish frauds committed on the departments of the Government; which bill was twice read by general consent, and referred.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, the resolutions to amend the Constitution of the United States were made the order of the day for Thursday next.

The bill for the relief of George Shannon was again taken up; when Mr. NOBLE submitted, at some length, his objections to the bill and the justice of the claim of the petitioner. He was replied to by Mr. R. M. JOHNSON, of Kentucky; and, after some amendment, the question was taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, and was negatived without a division; and the bill, of course, rejected.

The bill to divide the State of South Carolina into two judicial districts was taken up in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, offered several amendments, which were agreed to, and the blanks were filled. In the course of the discussion of it, the clause which authorized an additional marshal was stricken out, on the motion of Mr. MACON. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Senate then took up the bill to repeal so much of the act of April 18, 1806, as limits the price of certain lands in the State of Tennessee. Considerable discussion took place on this bill, involving chiefly the merits of the controversy which formerly existed between North Carolina and Tennessee, respecting the location of lands within the latter, the act of cession, &c., in which discussion Messrs. EATON, MACON, WILLIAMS of Tennessee, STOKES, and KELLY, engaged. The bill was finally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri, passed through a Committee of the Whole, in which its expediency was explained by Mr. BARTON, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

WEDNESDAY, February 5.

Mr. BROWN, of Louisiana, presented the petition of John Nicholson, marshal of the United States for the district of Louisiana, stating that, in the year 1821, a number of Africans were captured by the United States' vessel of war the Hornet, and libelled in said district court; that while they remained in his custody, as the officer of the court, it became necessary to supply them with food, clothing, and medical attendance, for which he has never been paid; and praying the reimbursement of his expenses. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The following engrossed bills were severally read the third time, passed, and sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence.

A bill for the relief of Samuel Buel;

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Duties on Imports.

SENATE.

A bill to establish an additional Land Office in the State of Missouri;

A bill to divide the State of South Carolina into two judicial districts;

A bill to repeal so much of the act of April 18, 1806, as limits the price of certain lands in the State of Tennessee.

Agreeably to notice, Mr. BARBOUR asked leave, and introduced a joint resolution to deposite in the Library of the City of Washington a copy of the public documents, &c.

Mr. ELLIOTT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made an unfavorable report on the petition of James Lloyd, of Virginia; which was read.

Mr. LOWRIE gave notice that he should ask leave to bring in a resolution directing the printing of the Journals of Congress, from the fifth day of September, 1774, to the third of November, 1786.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of John Fitzgerald, who served in the Army of the United States in the Revolutionary war, praying a pension, agreeably to the act of March 3d, 1818; and the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the acts to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States during the Revolutionary war," reported the same, without amendment: and the bill was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Thursday, the 13th instant.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary for the Department of War, on the petition of Eleanor Lawrence. The report was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims, in the State of Louisiana, was read the second time.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary for the Department on the memorial of Benjamin Shain; and the report was read.

DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the other House, to make perpetual an act passed the 3d of March, 1817, entitled "An act to continue in force an act 'further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, passed the 3d of March, 1815, and for other purposes.'"

[The act of 1817, which this bill proposes to make perpetual, provides, in substance, that if any suit or prosecution be commenced in any State court against any officer of the United States, civil or military, for any thing done, or omitted to be done, or against any person aiding or assisting such officer, that the said officer shall have the right to remove, with certain legal forms, such suit or prosecution out of the State court into the circuit court of the United States, and that the State court shall proceed no further in the cause. There are other provisions in this act, but the above is the only contested one.]

On this bill a debate arose, which occupied the remainder of the day's session. Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, commenced the debate, by submitting, at much length, his objections to the bill. Messrs. HOLMES, of Maine, VAN BUREN, EATON, LOWRIE, MILLS, and MACON, joined in the debate—the two first named going more into the merits of the act in question, than the other gentlemen. The discussion turned principally on the question of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over causes originating in the State courts, the doctrines advanced, and the decisions made by the Supreme Court in questions of this character, &c. Finally, the bill was, on the motion of Mr. VAN BUREN, postponed to Monday next.

THURSDAY, February 6.

The PRESIDENT communicated to the Senate the annual report of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund; which was read.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Joseph S. McPherson; which was read.

The Senate took up the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, unfavorable to the petition of James Lloyd, and, after some explanatory remarks by Mr. BARBOUR and Mr. ELLIOTT, the report was laid on the table.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill supplemental to the act to authorize the appointment of commissioners to lay out a road (a continuation of the Cumberland road) from the Ohio to the Mississippi river. [This bill provides that the road shall be laid out so as to pass through Columbus, Indianapolis, and Vandalia, the seats of government of the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; that it shall be laid out in one year; that but one commissioner instead of three shall be appointed to perform the duty; and that a further sum of six thousand dollars shall be appropriated for the object.] The bill was read twice by general consent.

Mr. LOWRIE, agreeably to notice, introduced a joint resolution, directing the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to have a number of copies of the Journals of the old Congress printed, subject to the future order of Congress; which resolution was twice read and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, presented the memorial of the Legislature of Alabama, praying that the military works for the defence of the bay and harbor of Mobile may be completed. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. K. also presented the memorial of the said Legislature, praying a modification of the laws providing for the subdivision and sale of the public lands of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. K. also presented the resolution of the Legislature of said State, instructing their Senators, and requesting their Representatives, to endeavor to procure the passage of a law imposing a tonnage duty on all vessels coming into the ports of Mobile and Blakely. The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KELLY presented the memorial of the Legislature of the said State, praying the passage of a law requiring a treaty to be held with the Cherokee Indians, for the purchase of a portion of their territory lying within the limits of the State. The memorial was read, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Thos. Eastman, late agent of a contractor for furnishing the Army of the United States with provisions, praying reimbursement of his expenditures for storage. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. KELLY presented the memorial of Alfred Moore and Sterling Orgain, praying the payment of an account against the United States; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. EATON submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was read:

Resolved, That the 31st Rule for conducting business in the Senate be amended to read as follows:

"A nominating committee, to consist of five members, shall be chosen on the third day of each session, by ballot, and a majority of votes shall be necessary to a choice; the duty of which committee shall be, as soon as may be, to appoint, and report to the Senate for confirmation, the several committees authorized by the 30th rule for conducting business in the Senate. But when any subject or matter shall have been referred to a committee, any other subject or matter of similar nature may, on motion, be referred to such committee."

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeable to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown," together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on Roads and Canals; and the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next.

FRIDAY, February 7.

Mr. RUGGLES presented a petition from a number of citizens of the State of Ohio, praying Congress to pass a law granting an outfit for exploring the polar regions, under the conduct of Captain John Cleves Symmes; not only with a view of making new discoveries in geography, natural history, geology, and astronomy, or to verify the new theory of the earth, advanced by Captain Symmes; but also, with the view of opening new sources of trade and commerce. This petition was, on motion, ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KELLY presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, praying further relief to the purchasers of public lands in that State. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KELLY, also, presented the memorial of the said Legislature, praying that the sale of the public lands within the counties of Jackson and Decatur may be deferred, and that certain settlers may be entitled to the right of pre-emption.—Referred to the same committee.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Daniel Merrill, with the accompanying documents, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers. The report and resolution were read, and laid on the table.

Mr. NOBLE submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting by law the fee simple to William Conner, to lands, for his services to the United States, in assisting to procure the treaties with the several tribes of Indians, held at St. Mary's, in the month of October, 1818; and that the evidence of the services of William Conner, as given by two of the commissioners who held the treaties, Jonathan Jennings and Lewis Cass, be referred to the said committee.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of John Rush and Samuel Conway, praying compensation for Revolutionary services, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, praying a modification of the laws providing for the subdivision and sale of the public lands of the United States, made a report, which was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the same committee, to which was referred the Message of the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, of the 22d of February, 1822, requesting "the President of the United States to cause to be collected and communicated to the Senate, at the commencement of the next session of Congress, the best information which he may be able to obtain, relative to certain Indians, and the lands intended for their benefit, on the Muskingum, in the State of Ohio, granted under an act of Congress of June 1, 1796, to the Society of United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen, showing, as correctly as possible, the advance or decline of said Indians in numbers, morals, and intellectual endowments; whether the lands have inured to their sole benefit, and, if not, to whom, in whole or in part, have such benefits accrued," made a report; and, in concurrence therewith, the committee were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Lewis D. de Schweinitz, agent of the Society of United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen, expressing the earnest wish of the Society to be divested of the trust estate of certain lands on the Muskingum, in the State of Ohio, which were granted and conveyed to the said Society by the United States, by patent, bearing date the 24th day of February, 1798, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the said memorial. The report and resolution were read, and laid on the table, and ordered to be printed, together with the preceding report, for the use of the Senate.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of James Morrison, of Kentucky; and it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the same committee, on the petition of Joseph S. McPherson; and it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 6th instant, to amend the 31st rule for conducting business in the Senate; and it was laid on the table.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Taylor Berry. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to revive, and to continue in force, the seventh section of an act entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana," approved the eleventh May, 1820, and for other purposes, together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on Public Lands; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, on the subject of the armament of the fortresses of the United States; which was read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the same committee, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Eleanor Lawrence; and the bill was twice read, by unanimous consent.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on the District of Columbia; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Monday next.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit, herewith, a resolution of the Legislature, with an extract of a letter from the Governor of Georgia, and a memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, relative to the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands within the limits of these States, respectively.

17th CON. 2d SESS.—7

Believing the present time to be propitious for holding treaties for the attainment of cessions of land from the Indians within those States, I submit the subject to the consideration of Congress, that adequate appropriations for such treaties may be made, should Congress deem it expedient.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3, 1823.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act supplementary to, and to amend an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed 2d March, 1799, and for other purposes;" a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Abraham Snyder;" and also a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Hyde;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

COLONIAL TRADE.

The Senate took up for consideration the bill to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States and certain British colonial ports.

[This bill suspends our restrictive acts of 1818 and 1820, and embraces a number of provisions growing out of the repeal of the late restrictive laws of Great Britain, in regard to foreign intercourse and trade with her American possessions.]

Mr. BARBOUR (chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations) presented to the Senate, in a speech of considerable length, a number of details and facts connected with the subject of this bill; he took a historical view of the trade and intercourse of this country, while in its colonial state, with the mother country; traced the subject down, through all the embarrassments and difficulties which have subsequently occurred in our commercial intercourse with Great Britain and her colonies; the treaties formed on the subject; the causes and necessity of our late restrictions, forced on us by the close, selfish, and unreciprocal policy of Great Britain, from which she has at length receded, after finding that the counteracting measures adopted by the United States were firmly and tenaciously adhered to. Mr. B. also took this occasion to justify the agency which he had, as an auxiliary only, and not a principal, in producing and maintaining the retaliatory restrictive system of this country; this he did because the system had borne hard on the interest of some parts of the country, and it had been imputed to him as a fault that he had aided in adopting and adhering to this policy. He urged the success of the system in vindication of its wisdom, and dwelt some time on the beneficial effect (referring to the unanimity with which that system was adopted and adhered to by Congress) of united counsels in all questions between foreign nations and ourselves. When Mr. B. concluded, the bill was laid over to Monday.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the proposition made by Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, to amend the Constitution of the United States, in regard to the election of President of the United States, and the substitute offered thereto by Mr. DICKERSON, of New Jersey.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, rose, and addressed the Senate about an hour in support of his own proposition and in opposition to the substitute. He opposed the substitute, because, so far as it proposed an uniformity in the election of Electors, by districts, throughout the Union, it had a tendency to create an aristocracy of small States; to prevent an election of President by the Electors, and to throw the election of President into the House of Representatives, where the small States would have an undue weight, the effect of which might in time be to produce a revolution in our political system that would be fatal to the present equality assigned to the small States by the Constitution. Mr. T. laid down the position that the power of the Federal Government had increased, was increasing, and ought, at least, not to be extended; he argued against all measures which would have the effect to produce a national instead of a federated Government, and opposed the substitute because it would tend to produce that result. He depicted many of the evils which would naturally grow out of the election of President by the House of Representatives—the opportunity and the inducement which it would hold out to corruption; its bad effects on the general business of legislation, and the interests of the nation; the improper connexion it would create between an Executive thus elected, and those in the Legislature thus acted on. The election of the Executive by the Legislative branch, even if pure, he deprecated as an unnatural and illegitimate connexion of distinct powers and duties; his own amendment he thought would have the effect to keep the election of President where the framers of the Constitution designed it should be, and where it ought to be—that is, in the hands of the Electors elected by the people, and to prevent almost the possibility of an election ever becoming necessary by the members of Congress. All these, and many other arguments, Mr. T. pressed and illustrated with force and ingenuity. When he concluded—

Mr. DICKERSON observed, that he was not in possession at this moment of the facts and materials necessary to enable him to answer the ingenious and impressive speech of Mr. T. now, if it should be in his power to do so at all; for he confessed that the remarks of that gentleman had produced much impression on his mind, as they had no doubt done on others. He moved, for the purpose of allowing time for reflection and investigation, to postpone the subject to Tuesday; which motion was agreed to.

Adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, February 10.

Mr. MILLS presented the petition of Lieutenant Robert F. Stockton, late commander of the United States' schooner Alligator, stating that, in the discharge of his duty, he captured, and brought in for adjudication, two vessels, viz., the Jeune Eugene, and the Mariana Flora; that, in defending the legality of the captures, he has incurred great expense, for which he prays reimbursement; and that the United States may take such order for the defence of the snit in the case of the Mariana Flora, now before the Supreme Court, as may be deemed just and proper; and, on his motion, it was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, laid before the Senate a certificate, signed by W. H. Harrison, late Major General, commanding the Northwestern army, in relation to the claims of James Morrison, of Kentucky; which was read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Q. Richardson, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted. The report and resolution were read, and laid on the table.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of James Turner, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, gave notice that, tomorrow, he should ask leave to introduce a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in relation to internal improvement.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of Don Harpin de la Gautrais. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion in relation to William Conner, and agreed thereto.

The three bills brought up, on the 7th instant, from the House of Representatives, for concurrence, were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act supplementary to, and to amend, an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed the 2d March, 1799, and for other purposes," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and on motion by Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, it was referred to a select committee, to consist of five members, to consider and report thereon; and Messrs. LLOYD of Massachusetts, PARROTT, WILLIAMS of Mississippi, KING of New York, and SMITH of Maryland, were appointed the committee.

The bill for the relief of Taylor Berry was read the second time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill directing the payment of the Georgia militia claims, for services rendered during the years 1792, '3, and '4; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House; and, on the question, "Shall this bill be engrossed and read a third time?" it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 28, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Brown of

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Revolutionary Pensions.

SENATE.

Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Dickerson, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Noble, Parrott, Smith of Maryland, Smith of South Carolina, Stokes, Talbot, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, Williams of Mississippi, and Williams of Tennessee.

NAYS—Messrs. Boardman, Chandler, D'Wolf, Eaton, King of New York, Knight, Macon, Mills, Morrill, Ruggles, and Van Buren.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on the District of Columbia; and, on motion, the bill was laid on the table.

The Senate took up the bill to revive and continue in force the 7th section of the act of May, 1811, supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana; and after some discussion, and the adoption of an amendment proposed by the Committee of Public Lands, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Senate next resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives granting certain lands to the State of Ohio for the purpose of laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the Western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in Ohio, (through the Black Swamp,) agreeably to the provisions of the Indian treaty concluded at Brownstown.

When this bill was up on a former day, Mr. KING, of New York, contended that the lands which, it was asserted by the friends of the bill, were granted by the Indians to make this road, had not been granted for that purpose; but that the mile of land in width, on each side of the route agreed on for a road, was granted to the United States by the Indians for the formation of, and to promote settlements on, the line of the contemplated road, &c.

This opinion, and the arguments with which Mr. K. accompanied it, were to-day replied to by Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, at some length; after which the bill was laid over until to-morrow.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States and certain British colonial ports. Some discussion arose on the provisions of this bill, embracing principally questions of detail, in which Messrs. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, BARBOUR, SMITH, of Maryland, MILLS, and KING, of New York, participated; after which the bill was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate took up the bill to authorize the President of the United States to cause the Lead Mines and Salt Spring lands belonging to the United States to be exposed to public sale.

Mr. KING, of New York, doubted the expediency of ordering a sale of this important property of the nation, the extent of which was unknown, except so far as that it was known to be of great value; at least he was opposed to adopting any such measure without mature deliberation, and moved to lay the bill on the table for the present—which motion was agreed to.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in the recovery of debts, in the District of Columbia;" a bill, entitled "An act to extend the time allowed for the redemption of lands sold for direct tax, in certain cases;" and also a bill, entitled "An act vesting in the State of Virginia the right of the United States to all fines assessed for non-performance of militia duty, during the late war with Great Britain, within said State;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bills were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in the recovery of debts, in the District of Columbia," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill, entitled "An act to extend the time allowed for the redemption of land sold for direct tax, in certain cases," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill, entitled "An act vesting in the State of Virginia the right of the United States to all fines assessed for non-performance of militia duty, during the late war with Great Britain, within said State," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. KING, of New York, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate, as soon as may be, an estimate of the quantity of land in the State of Georgia to which the Indian title has been extinguished by the United States since the cession of a portion of the territory of Georgia to the United States, together with a statement of the cost of such extinguishment; and, also, an estimate of the quantity of land within said State, and by what tribes claimed, to which the Indian title still remains to be extinguished.

Mr. BENTON submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, provision is necessary to be made by law to enable the President of the United States to alter or modify the second article of the treaty of October 18, 1820, between the United States and the Choctaw tribe of Indians, so as to give effect to the said treaty without injustice to the white population settled in the Territory of Arkansas.

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, communicated the following letter from the Secretary of War, which was read, and ordered to be printed:

SENATE.

Proceedings.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Feb. 8, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you, in reply to your letter of the 6th instant, that, until the month of August, 1818, no particular account was kept of the number of applications for pensions, under the act of the 18th March, 1818. Since that time, however, a register of the claimants has been kept, from which it would appear, that 27,948 have applied for the benefits of that act, and since the passage of the act of May 1st, 1820, 2,039 have applied under both laws—18,880 claims have been admitted in all; 2,328 of which have been rejected, or dropt from the roll, under the act of the 1st May, 1820. On the 4th of September last, 12,331 were then on the pension list. The remaining 4,221 are either dead, or, from causes unknown to this Department, have failed to exhibit schedules of property. In 1818, the sum of $104,900 85, was paid to pensioners, under the act of that year; in 1819, $1,811,328 96; in 1820, the sum paid was only $1,373,849 41, the list of pensioners having been reduced by the operation of the act of the 1st May, 1820; in 1821, the sum of $1,200,000 was paid; and, in the year 1822, the sum of $1,833,936 30.

The apparent excess of expenditure in 1822, arises from the circumstance, that, in the preceding year, a deficiency was occasioned by a greater number having applied for pensions that year than was anticipated when the estimates were made: $451,836 of the expenditure of the last year was due the pensioners in the preceding year.

I would respectfully suggest to the committee, of which you are chairman, the propriety of limiting the commencement of the Revolutionary pensions, in all cases, to the time of completing the testimony, not only in original claims, but where persons have been continued on, or restored to, the pension roll. At present, the latter class receive their pay from the 4th March, 1820; and the prospect of receiving the amount of three years' stipend, at one time, opens a door to attempts at fraud, and is no small inducement for many to dispose of their property with a view of receiving pensions.

I have the honor to be, &c.

J. C. CALHOUN.

HON. JAMES NOBLE,
Chairman Com. Pensions.

TUESDAY, February 11.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act relating to the ransom of American captives of the late war,'" reported the same without amendment.

Mr. THOMAS presented the memorial of a number of the inhabitants of Illinois, praying relief may be extended to those purchasers of public lands who had paid for the same prior to the passage of the act of Congress for the relief of the purchasers of public lands.

Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, presented the memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Mississippi, praying a donation of public land for the benefit of the Natchez Hospital. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. LOWRIE presented the memorial of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, in relation to the act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage. The memorial was read, and referred to the select committee to which was referred, yesterday, the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to, and to amend, an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, passed the 2d March, 1799, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. THOMAS presented the resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, relative to the location and marking of the road from Wheeling to the Mississippi. The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. BENTON presented the petition of Daniel M. Boon, late a captain of rangers, praying reimbursement of his expenses for a servant and two horses. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BENTON also presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, praying the organization of a tribunal for the adjudication of unconfirmed claims, to lands, and that a duty may be imposed on imported lead. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN BUREN presented the memorial of D. Dunham, praying that certain privileges may be conferred on the steamship Robert Fulton. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the resolution directing the printing of the Journal of Congress, from the fifth day of September, 1774, to the third day of November, 1786, reported the same without amendment.

Agreeably to the notice yesterday given, Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, asked and obtained leave, and introduced the following joint resolution; which was read and passed to a second reading:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States; which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of the said Constitution:

That Congress shall have power to adopt and execute a system of internal improvements, confined to great national purposes.

The resolution was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill for the punishment of frauds committed on the Departments of the Government of the United States, reported the same without amendment.

The bill directing the payment of the Georgia militia claims for services rendered during the years 1792, '93, and '4, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill to revive and to continue in force the seventh section of an act, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana, approved the 11th May, 1820, and for other purposes," was read a third time, and passed.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

New England Mississippi Land Company.

SENATE.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to commute the pension of Lieutenant Alfred Flournoy; and the bill was read.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States, and certain British colonial ports; and after some further discussion of its details, and some amendment thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of James Turner, and, in concurrence therewith, resolved that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 10th instant, for requesting certain information in relation to the Indian title to lands within the State of Georgia, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 10th instant, for instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs in relation to a certain Indian treaty; and, on motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, it was laid on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Rees, of New York, one of the sureties of Joseph H. Rees, deceased, late assistant deputy paymaster general in the service of the United States," in which bill they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bill was read, and it passed to the second reading.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Eleanor Lawrence; and, an amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

NEW ENGLAND MISSISSIPPI LAND COMPANY.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred a petition of the Massachusetts Directors of the Association called the New England Mississippi Land Company, made a detailed report thereon, adverse to the prayer of the petition; which was read, and ordered to be printed.

The report is as follows:

That, by an act of Congress, dated March 31, 1814, entitled "An act providing for the indemnification of certain claimants of public land in the Mississippi Territory," it is enacted, that every person or persons claiming said land, who have exhibited their claim to the Secretary of State, "shall be allowed until the first Monday in January next, to deposit, in the office of the Secretary of State of the United States, a sufficient legal release of all such claim or claims, to the United States, and an assignment and transfer to the United States, of their right and claim to any sum of money," paid into the Treasury of the State of Georgia, as a consideration for the purchase of the land released, with a power to recover the same; "such release, assignment, transfer, and power, to take effect, on indemnification of such claimants being made, conformably to the provisions of this act."

And the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General of the United States, for the time being, were thereby constituted and appointed a Board of Commissioners, "and fully authorized and required to adjudge and determine upon the sufficiency of the release, and assignments, and powers, to be executed and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State; and also to adjudge, and finally to determine upon, all controversies arising from such claims so released as aforesaid, which may be found to conflict with, and be adverse to, each other; and, also, to adjudge and determine upon all such claims, under the aforesaid act, or pretended act, of the State of Georgia, as may be found to have accrued to the United States by operation of law."

By the act aforesaid, the President was authorized and required to cause to be issued, from the Treasury of the United States, to such claimants, respectively, certificates of stock, payable out of moneys arising from the sale of said public lands; and among other companies, to the person claiming in the name, or under the Georgia Mississippi Company, under the like terms and restrictions, a sum not exceeding, in the whole, one million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars:

"Provided, That any person having claims under either of said companies, and entitled to indemnity by virtue of this act, shall receive such indemnity only in proportion to the amount of such claim."

By an act of Congress, supplementary to the above, dated 23d January, 1815, the President was authorized, by and with the advice of the Senate, to appoint three fit and disinterested persons to be and act as commissioners, by virtue of said first-mentioned act, in the place of the public officers therein mentioned. The said persons were constituted and appointed a Board of Commissioners; which board was "declared to be intended to effect the same purposes and services as the said original board," and was thereby "authorized to execute all the powers granted to, and directed to perform all the duties enjoined upon, the said original Board of Commissioners, according to the intent and provisions of the act aforesaid."

In pursuance of the said last-mentioned act, Thomas Swan, Francis S. Key, and John Law, of the District of Columbia, were duly appointed commissioners to perform said service; and from the decree herewith exhibited, and from the case of Brown against Gilman, decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, and reported in 4th volume of Wheaton's Reports, it doth appear, that the Georgia Mississippi Company, mentioned in said act, sold and conveyed to certain persons in New England, all the land which they had acquired by said act, or pretended act, of the State of Georgia, estimated to contain eleven millions three hundred and eighty thousand acres, at and after the rate of ten cents per acre; two cents of which were paid in money, and the residue by notes of the respective purchasers, payable in successive years, with approved endorsers. The deed of conveyance, in due form of law, was made to the purchasers, and being placed in "escrow" for a short time, on payment of the money, and reception of notes, with endorsers satisfactory to the vendors, said deed was duly delivered to the purchasers, who formed the association above mentioned, and conveyed their respective shares in said land to the trustees of said New England Mississippi Land Company, who were authorized to issue negotiable certificates, or scrips, so called, declaring the possessor thereof to be entitled to the proceeds of the quantity of land therein mentioned. The said trustees of the New England Mississippi Land Company, and directors thereof, petitioners as aforesaid, in pursuance of said act of indemnification, made proper releases and assignments of all right and claim to said land, and money in the treasury of Georgia, to the United States, and deposited the same in the office of the Secretary of State, as required by said act, and presented a claim for indemnification for the whole of said land, amounting, by said act, to one million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

SENATE.

New England Mississippi Land Company.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

The Georgia Mississippi Company, above named, presented a claim to said commissioners for indemnifications to the amount of 957,600 acres, part of said land sold by them as aforesaid, equal to one hundred and thirty thousand four hundred and twenty-five dollars and twelve cents, (say $130,425 12,) in consequence of certain unpaid notes they possessed, given in part for the purchase of said land, amounting to ninety-five thousand seven hundred and sixty dollars, (say $95,760;) which claim of said Georgia Mississippi Company, was opposed by said New England Company, none of which members were indebted on said notes; the sale of said land by the said original purchasers or parties to said notes having been made soon after they acquired the title as above, their assignees being members of the company. The said commissioners, however, adjudged and decreed that the said Georgia Mississippi Land Company, as vendors of said land, (although no mortgage or special security was made or reserved thereon,) had a just right or lien upon said quantity of land, for which said unpaid notes were given; and the said commissioners accordingly did adjudge and assign, out of the said sum of $1,550,000, the sum of one hundred and thirty thousand four hundred and twenty-five dollars and twelve cents, (say $130,425 12,) to the said Georgia Mississippi Land Company; the largest portion of which, about three-fourths, as appears by the said decree of said commissioners, was adjudged to belong to the United States, who claimed under the said Georgia Mississippi Land Company, in virtue of shares therein surrendered to the State of Georgia, and by the act aforesaid reserved to the United States. And the United States, as appears by said decree, now retain from said original sum, as representing shares of said Georgia Mississippi Land Company, a larger sum than the said one hundred and thirty thousand four hundred and twenty-five dollars twelve cents, (say $130,425 12,) taken by said commissioners from the said New England Mississippi Land Company as aforesaid. It also appears by the report of said commissioners, herewith, that the said commissioners received as claims on said fund the certificates or scrip of divers persons, issued by the trustees of said New England Mississippi Land Company, to the amount of one-fourth part of the stock of said company, or thereabouts. Said directors urged to said commissioners that persons who held their certificates, and were thereby members of the company, ought to resort to the trustees or treasurer for their share or dividend, after the indemnification had been received by the treasurer; but the board considered that such certificate holder might well apply to them for payment or satisfaction of their scrip in said company, deducting the reasonable proportion of the expenses of the company. They also decreed that persons holding the scrip or certificates of said company, which were derived originally from the sales made by parties to said unpaid notes, had no claim whatever on said fund; and in a distribution thereof, assigned to such certificate holders whose claims they allowed as above, their proportion of the company's funds, unencumbered by certificates derived originally from the parties to said notes as aforesaid.

It further appears, from the said case of Brown and Gilman being a suit brought against said directors by the holder of one of said certificates which had issued from the title of the parties to said unpaid notes aforesaid, that the commissioners erred in pronouncing that there was any lien upon said land, in consequence of said unpaid notes; and the said directors were adjudged liable to pay the same certificates, which the commissioners had declared were not obligatory; and thus the said directors, the petitioners, who, by the proceedings of said commissioners, received only about three-fourths of the stock of the company, were held liable to pay, in the first instance, the whole sum of one hundred and thirty thousand four hundred and twenty-five dollars twelve cents, (say $130,425 12.)

It also appears that the commissioners were not informed of the laws of Georgia, which, similar to those of Massachusetts, do not allow any lien to the vendor of land without mortgage or special security; and the surviving commissioners (Messrs. Swann and Key) are now fully satisfied that the said award was erroneous.

On the above facts, the petitioners have prayed that the aforesaid sum, erroneously withheld from them by said commissioners, may be granted to them; and, if not, that they may be reinvested in their title to said nine hundred and fifty-seven thousand six hundred acres (say 957,600 acres) of land, for which they have received no indemnification, by an act declaring that the said release executed by them to the United States, shall be inoperative as respects said quantity of land; and that the deeds and evidence of title, which in virtue of said act have been deposited by said commissioners in said office of the Secretary of State, may be restored to them, or attested copies granted, allowing the same to have the force of originals in courts of the United States.

The committee are satisfied that the whole of the said sum of $1,550,000 ought in strictness to have been awarded to said directors of the New England Mississippi Land Company by said commissioners; but they apprehend that the above prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted, for the following reasons, viz:

The prayer of the petitioners, if granted, must be satisfied out of the moneys awarded by the commissioners to the Georgia Mississippi Land Company, and to the United States, as assignees of such of the Georgia Mississippi Land Company as had surrendered under the act of Georgia.

The reference to the commissioners was, as has already been stated, "to adjudge, and finally determine upon, all controversies arising from such claims, so released as aforesaid, which may be found to conflict with, and to be adverse to, each other; and, also, to adjudge, and determine upon, all such claims, under the aforesaid act, or pretended act, as may be found to have accrued to the United States by operation of law." The contemplated compensation, which was to extinguish a disputed claim, was made by the United States for the sake of peace; the submission was voluntarily entered into by the parties, with full knowledge of the powers of the commissioners, the circumstances of their selection, the conclusiveness of their award, and their liability to err. If the mistake had been in favor of those who claim the fund, those who hold it would have been without redress. All that the United States were responsible for, was an honest discharge of their duties by the commissioners. That such has been the case, is not controverted; and, that being admitted, the committee are of opinion that the petitioners have no reason to complain, if the award is suffered to remain as binding upon them, as it necessarily was upon their adversaries.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

Secondly. Independently of these considerations, the trustees of the New England Mississippi Land Company are not, in the opinion of the committee, entitled to the relief they ask. They have lost their legal rights by the error of the commissioners, under the circumstances which have been stated; and their application now is to the equity of the Government, which can only be to relieve them from injustice. What is their equity? They ask money for lands for which they have never paid. They ask it at the expense of those who have. If, through the improvidence of those from whom they purchased, they, before the submission and award, could, on strict legal principles, entitle themselves to what they now ask, it was their good fortune; but, having lost that legal advantage without fraud, they are without cause of complaint that it is not restored to them; for they have lost nothing to which they were in conscience entitled.

Thirdly. If the loss had fallen on those of the New England Mississippi Land Company who had not paid, or their immediate assignees, it is conceded that this application would be without merit. That it has fallen on others, is on account of the terms of the original Association, and the manner of transacting their business, authorized by the trustees and those they represent; and can furnish no ground of claim against those who had no agency in that matter, and who are, at least, equally innocent.

Fourthly. If the grounds relied on by the committee for refusing the direct relief prayed for, are well grounded, they are equally valid against the prayer for the surrender of the release.

INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. NOBLE moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing by law the sale of the tract of land reserved to the Wea tribe of Indians by the second article of the treaty held at St. Mary's, on the 2d day of October, 1818, and which tract of land was ceded to the United States by the said tribe of Indians by virtue of the treaty held at Vincennes on the 11th day of August, 1820.

Mr. NOBLE, in offering the resolution, said that, by virtue of the treaty with the Wea tribe of Indians, held at St. Mary's in the month of October, 1818, and by the second article of the treaty, the Wea Indians reserved to themselves a tract of land in the State of Indiana, at the mouth of Racoon creek, seven miles in extent, and bordering on the Wabash river, &c.; that the same tribe of Indians, by a treaty held at Vincennes on the 11th day of August, 1820, ceded to the United States the tract of land which they reserved by the second article of the treaty held at St. Mary's in October, 1818. That he had recently understood that the tract of land was included in the county of Parke, and included the centre of the county; and that the citizens of that county had labored for years under great inconveniences for the want of the land being sold by the United States, and an opportunity (which could only be afforded by a sale of the lands) to fix their permanent county seat. Since he had heard of the difficulties which the citizens of Parke county labored under, in relation to their county seat, he applied to the Secretary of the Treasury, and found clearly that an act of Congress would be necessary to authorize the sale of the tract of land referred to in the resolution, though by the existing laws the land could be surveyed. He further added, that the land was valuable, and he hoped that provision would be made by law to authorize the sale of it; and that he was confident the interest of the United States would be promoted, and the citizens of Parke county relieved from their present embarrassment.

Mr. NOBLE then moved the Senate to consider the resolution; which motion was agreed to, and the subject was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, according to his motion.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the proposition of Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, to amend the Constitution of the United States, in regard to the election of President of the United States, together with the substitute proposed therefor by Mr. DICKERSON, of New Jersey.

Mr. DICKERSON said, the subject under consideration was one of great importance, and merited all the attention which Congress could bestow upon it. I am sensible, said he, that I must fail in any attempt to do justice to the propositions I have submitted to the Senate, especially when I must meet the opposition of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. TAYLOR,) a veteran in Constitutional disquisitions, whose opinions on subjects connected with our Constitution, even when, unsupported by reasoning or facts, have nearly acquired the weight of conclusive arguments.

In one thing, the gentleman from Virginia and I agree: that the present Constitutional mode of choosing a President of the United States, is inadequate to the purpose, and highly dangerous to the Union. We agree, that an amendment to the Constitution, in this particular, is absolutely necessary; but we differ as to the remedy to be applied.

I shall endeavor to show, that so much of that gentleman's proposition as differs from the amendment I have proposed, is inexpedient, and even dangerous; that is, so much as respects the examination of the Electoral votes by the President of the United States—and their reference a second time to the Electors. By the Constitution, the Electors are to give their votes for President and Vice President, throughout the Union, on the same day. When the votes are counted before the Senate and House of Representatives, in case of no election by the Electors, the House of Representatives is to proceed immediately to choose the President. No more time is allowed by law, for the different steps of the Presidential election, after the choice of Electors, than is absolutely necessary to afford the remote States the opportunity of giving their votes. These provisions were intended to prevent intrigue and combination; and they are wisely calculated to produce that effect. All which, however, would be completely counteracted by adopting the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia.

By this plan, the votes of the Electors are to be returned to the President of the United States; to be opened and examined by him; and, if it shall appear that no person has received a majority of the Electoral votes, he shall make proclamation of the fact: give notice of it to all the State Executives, and publish the number of votes given to each person as President; whereupon, the Electors shall again be convened, and again vote. It is evident, that the Electors must be chosen at a much earlier period than is now required, for there must be time to send on the Electoral votes from the most remote States, to the President, and to send messengers to those States, in case of failure to send on the votes. There must be time for examining the votes by the President; returning them to the State Executives; re-assembling the Electors for a second vote. All these operations give room for intrigue, and are attended with danger.

The votes of the Electors are to be sent on to the President, who may be a candidate himself; or, if not, he may be disposed to nominate his successor. He shall open and examine the votes; and, if it shall appear that no person has a majority of the whole number, he shall make proclamation. He, therefore, must decide upon the legality of votes—which are to be counted, and which not—the power to examine and count the votes, and to decide if any one has a majority of the whole, implies the power to reject those which ought not to be counted. Such a power is vested in the body now authorized to examine and count the Electoral votes. But are we prepared to vest such a power in any individual, however exalted his station or his virtues? But, suppose the President should avail himself of the assistance of his Cabinet, as in other cases, where he has important duties to perform, would the case be much altered for the better? I will suppose this part of the gentleman's amendment already adopted, and that some eighteen or twenty months to come are already past; that the Electoral votes are transmitted to the President; that his Cabinet is assembled, and busily engaged in opening and examining these votes. The assemblage would present an interesting groupe, worthy of the pencil of Hogarth; I will suppose the gentleman from Virginia to be an invisible spectator of this novel scene—and, I think, he would be convinced, that, although his proposition might be considered as an alteration, it could not be considered as an amendment to the Constitution.

In 1808 the Electors of Massachusetts were chosen by the joint vote of the two houses of the Legislature; but the resolution for going into joint meeting required the assent of the Governor, which he refused to give.

It happened that the vote of Massachusetts made no difference as to the result of the election; the votes were received and counted; but, had the election turned upon the votes of Massachusetts, they might have been rejected. We will suppose the same thing to happen under the proposed amendment: the votes are returned to the President, who, with or without his Cabinet, discovers that, by counting the votes of Massachusetts, the candidate A has a majority of all the voters; but he rejects the vote of Massachusetts, and no one has a majority of the whole. On the second vote of the Electors, returned to the President of the Senate, B has a majority of all the votes, but the House of Representatives are of opinion that the vote of Massachusetts ought not to have been rejected by the President. Here would be a scene of utter confusion, in which the two Houses would be involved, from which the gentleman from Virginia would find it very difficult to extricate them. A variety of other cases might be put equally perplexing, and equally dangerous. But more danger might be apprehended from another quarter. From the moment the President should determine that the Electors throughout the States must be reassembled, there would commence a scene of intrigue and corruption at each of the four-and-twenty Electoral colleges, such as I hope never will be witnessed in this country. Whenever the electoral votes are opened and counted, it should be by that body alone which is to decide upon the votes, and, in case of no election, to proceed immediately, without separating to choose the President.

The propositions which I have submitted consist of three parts, which may be taken distinctly. The first is the system for districting the States for the choice of Electors and Representatives in Congress, in the form in which it has repeatedly passed in this body. The second is, for submitting the choice of a President, in case of no election by the Electors, to a joint meeting of both Houses of Congress. The third, for limiting the period to which the same person may be eligible to the office of President.

The first is an attempt to bring back, by a Constitutional regulation, the States to a good rule, which they adopted at the commencement of our present form of Government. For the three first Presidential elections, all, or nearly all, the States chose their Electors in single districts, but were induced to swerve from this rule by the instigation of ambitious individuals. Some of the States having adopted the plan of choosing their Electors by general ticket, others were obliged to adopt the same rule in self-defence. In the year 1800, Virginia followed an example which she condemned. But, in doing this, she thought it due to her own character to declare her motives; this is done in the preamble to the act for choosing Electors in general ticket, in which the Legislature say:

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

"Whereas, until some uniform mode for choosing a President and Vice President of the United States shall be prescribed by an amendment to the Constitution, it may happen, under the law of this Commonwealth for appointing Electors for that purpose, that a choice may take place contrary to the will of a majority of the United States, and also contrary to the will of a majority of the people of the State, which would be inconsistent with the true intent and meaning of the Constitution of the United States; and although this Commonwealth is willing to accede to any reasonable and proper amendment of the said Constitution to remedy the evil, yet, forasmuch as it ought, in the mean time, to be counteracted by every Constitutional regulation within the power of the Legislature, until it shall be so removed: Be it enacted," &c.

As early as the year 1802 this abandonment of principle excited alarm, and the Legislatures of Vermont and New York instructed their Senators and Representatives to use their endeavors in procuring such an amendment to the Constitution as is now submitted to the Senate. These instructions are on your journals of that year. Most of the States have given similar instructions—some of them repeatedly. The amendment has passed the Senate repeatedly by the Constitutional majority of two-thirds, but as yet has not received that attention from the House of Representatives that its importance merits. The time, perhaps, is not far distant when we shall all repent that the opportunity of adopting this amendment has passed by unimproved.

However calmly we may look upon the periodical returns of our Presidential elections, they are calculated to excite alarm in the minds of those who examine critically into the provisions of our Constitution, upon this subject. It is, beyond comparison, the most dangerous operation under our system of Government. A failure in this is fatal to our liberties. While the head of our Government remains sound, one and indivisible, our system will bear the most violent concussions without danger of dissolution. Do the Judges of the Supreme Court transcend their power, Congress can apply the remedy. Should it be discovered that the Constitution gives to the Supreme Court more power than is consistent with the republican principles of our institutions—this can be tolerated till a remedy can be found in an amendment to the Constitution. Do the States resist the legitimate power of the United States' Courts, or such requisitions of our Government as are warranted by law and our Constitution—patience and forbearance, without resort to force, will afford the remedy. The tendency to cohesion is so strong, while there remains one individual centre of attraction, that the offending States return to a sense of duty—and, although separated for a time by the angry passions or the ambition of turbulent individuals, they return to their ranks, and coalesce in a way to give additional strength to the Union. Even our little attempts at civil war, have resulted in giving additional strength to the arm of Government.

A failure to elect a Chief Magistrate admits of no remedy. No compromise can take place between the friends of the candidate, who knows he has with him a majority of the people and the physical strength of the country, and the friends of the candidate, who, by fraud or by force, by taking advantage of some fault in our Constitution, has placed himself in the Presidential Chair, and availed himself of the advantages of that situation. Civil war is inevitable. The general extent of the Union; the new States we have added to the Confederation, which, under other circumstances, would, by extending the base, give stability to our political fabric, would have a tendency to keep the discordant parts in their proper places, in this case, would have a contrary effect. The centre of attraction being destroyed by division, the parts, by their own weight, would be precipitated to dissolution.

It is of the utmost importance to our safety, that the most exact, precise, and explicit Constitutional regulations, should exist, with respect to every step in the election of a President, and with respect to the exercise and limitation of his power, and yet in nothing is the Constitution so loose, vague, and undefined. A constable of a borough is appointed to office by rules more explicit, more uniform, less subject to change and abuse, than are the regulations for choosing a Chief Magistrate for ten millions of people.

It is universally allowed, and has never been denied, that all the successive steps, in the different States, for electing a President, should be uniform and simultaneous; as, otherwise, the most extensive intrigues may be put into successful practice; and yet we are bewildered in considering the variety of ways in which the details of these elections are conducted; Electors chosen in single districts; double, treble, gerrymandering, irregular districts; general ticket; by the State Legislatures; by concurrent vote; by joint meeting, with or without the assent of the Governors; frequently changing, according to the varying dictates of ambition, passion, or caprice.

The most important point is, that the President should be elected by a majority, and not a minority, of the people. No one should hold that important appointment who has not with him the physical strength of the country. If he have it, all is safe, for the power that has created can protect and defend.

If he have it not, his holding the office is an outrage upon the principles of our Government. It is unsafe for himself and for the country. Shall a strong majority patiently submit to a weak minority, who, taking advantage of the faults in our Constitution, have succeeded in placing their man in the Presidential chair? To presume this, betrays but a slight knowledge of the American character, or, indeed, of the human character.

I will prove that under the present system a little more than one-quarter of the citizens of the United States can, by possibility, elect a President against the residue, consisting of nearly three-fourths; while the mode proposed will afford the nearest possible approach to a fair expression of the public will, unless, indeed, we resort to a vote by the people at large.

Most of the States now choose their Electors by general ticket, or appoint them by their Legislatures; and all probably will before the next election. As this will afford the parties an opportunity of calculating their strength to a nicety, it will put into operation the most extensive and dangerous intrigues by which a minority may elect a President.

It is evident that, by choosing Electors by general ticket, or by State Legislatures, the minorities in the States respectively, are completely suppressed.

The whole number of Electors is 261

A majority - - - - 131

1. Vermont has	-	-	-	7
2. New York	-	-	-	36
3. New Jersey	-	-	-	8
4. Pennsylvania	-	-	-	28
5. Virginia	-	-	-	24
6. North Carolina	-	-	-	15
7. Kentucky	-	-	-	14

132

A bare majority in the legislatures of these seven States could completely control the Presidential election against the residue of the Union. By this arrangement, the voice of nearly one half of the citizens of those States would be suppressed. But, if those States in which the political parties thus nearly balance each other should be divided into 132 districts, each choosing one Elector, the result would be as fair an expression of the will of those States as could possibly be obtained without resorting to a general vote by the people. The majorities which, under the one plan, would control seven States, would, under the other, do no more than control seven districts, leaving the other 125 districts, upon a calculation of probabilities, to be equally divided between the parties.

If we suppose those States about equally divided between the parties choosing their Electors in districts, the result would probably be that the Electors of the one side would be to those of the other as - - - - 66 to 66

If the parties should be to each other as 2 to 1, their Electors would be as - - - - 88 to 44

If as 3 to 1, as - - - - 99 to 33

If as 4 to 1, as - - - - 106 to 26 nearly.

If as 5 to 1, as - - - - 110 to 22

If as 10 to 1, as - - - - 121 to 11 nearly.

So that one party in these States, with a bare majority over the other, say 10 to 9, could give a more decisive vote for their candidate at a Presidential election under the present system than the same party could do under the district system, even if their numbers were to those of the other as 10 to 1.

When the States abandoned the principle of choosing Electors in single districts, and adopted that of general ticket, they established a system of classification, for the purpose of suppressing minorities. It would be tedious to calculate the effect of this system upon twenty-four States, varying so much as they do in amount of population. But I will endeavor to elucidate the principle by a familiar example. I will suppose this Senate to be composed of forty-five attending members; the question to be decided, the present one, requiring two-thirds to carry it in the affirmative. It is ascertained that, by taking the votes per capita, it would be carried in the affirmative, 30 being for, and 15 against, it. Let the Senate be divided into three classes of 15 each, each class to give one vote. The different combinations which might be formed would be the following:

1	{	10	10	10	affirmative.
		5	5	5	negative.
2	{	10	9	11	a.
		5	6	4	n.
3	{	10	8	12	a.
		5	7	3	n.
4	{	9	9	12	a.
		6	6	3	n.
5	{	9	8	13	a.
		6	7	2	n.
6	{	8	8	14	a.
		7	7	1	n.

These six combinations give unanimous votes in the affirmative.

1	{	6	9	15	affirmative.
		9	6	0	negative.
2	{	5	10	15	a.
		10	5	0	n.
3	{	4	11	15	a.
		11	4	0	n.
4	{	3	12	10	a.
		12	3	0	n.

These four combinations give majorities in the affirmative as 2 to 1, or as if taken per capita; and, by gaining a single vote from the affirmative to the negative, the question might be carried in the negative as 2 to 1—

1	{	7	7	15	affirmative.
		8	8	0	negative;

that is, the question would be in the affirmative as 29 to 16, taken per capita. By this classification it would be carried in the negative as 2 to 1.

Let the Senate be divided into five classes of nine each—six combinations will give unanimous majorities in the affirmative. Six will give majorities in the affirmative as 3 to 2; one, a majority in the affirmative as 4 to 1, and one, a majority in the negative as 3 to 2.

Let the Senate be divided into nine classes of five each; the range of votes will be from unanimous in the affirmative to 5 to 4 in the negative.

Let the Senate be divided into fifteen classes of three each, the combinations will be one in the affirmative unanimously.

One in the affirmative as	-	-	14 to 1
One in the affirmative as	-	-	13 to 2
One in the affirmative as	-	-	12 to 3
One in the affirmative as	-	-	11 to 4
Six in the affirmative as	-	-	2 to 1
One in the affirmative as	-	-	3 to 2
And one in the affirmative as	-	-	8 to 7

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

No possible combination under this classification will give a vote in the negative. Six of the combinations give the same vote as if taken per capita; and three others give nearly the same result. Any gentleman may perceive, from an examination of the tables which I submit, and from which I make these deductions, that, as you increase the number of classes, you in the same ratio increase the probabilities of coming at such a vote as would be given per capita. • And as voting for Electors by single districts is the extent to which the classes can be increased, so it will afford the nearest approach to an expression of the public will, such as would be given by a general vote of the people at large.

The Chief Magistrate of the Union should be an officer strictly national. The President of the United States should be pre-eminently the man of the people. No fear of consolidation should ever induce us to adopt principles calculated to give us Presidents of a different character. If all the States had one uniform population; one uniform qualification of voters; one uniform mode of voting, without doubt the most safe, equitable, and republican mode of choosing a Chief Magistrate to administer the Government for all would be by the general suffrage of all entitled to vote, in which all the States, large and small, would have their relative and proper weight.

By the proposed district system, we avoid the difficulties of a vote by the people at large, which, indeed, are insuperable; and, by the most simple operation, arrive, as nearly as possible, at the same result. A President thus chosen, would be a national officer; would be the man of the people. If, under the provision of our Constitution, that each State shall appoint its Electors in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct, the Legislatures, instead of directing the mode, shall take the appointment into their own hands, they exercise a power not delegated to them; and this for the purpose of suppressing minorities. If the States choose their Electors by general ticket, the process in most cases is more absurd, and results in the same abuse of the rights of a portion of the people. In small States, where the voters may be supposed to know something of the characters of the candidates, the absurdity of the regulation is not so apparent. But in a large State like New York, with a population of a million and a half of people, scattered over a territory of forty-eight thousand square miles, an election by general ticket for Electors or Representatives must be a mere mockery of what we are pleased to call the sacred right of suffrage.

If the whole thirty-six Electors of that State could be selected from among the distinguished individuals who regulate the affairs of the State at Albany, or from the important personages who figure in the daily papers at the city of New York, the voters would have some rule by which to regulate their course. But this cannot be; the Electors must be taken from the different sections of the State, to be regulated by population and territory, that each portion may be gratified with its proper share of power. The consequence would be, that the voters would know something of three or four of the thirty-six candidates to be voted for; as for the rest, they must vote in the dark—upon trust. The voter must have his direction from the great man of the town; the great man of the town from the great man of the county, and the great man of the county from the great man of the State; and these great men would, in fact, manage the whole concern, while the good natured people would believe that they were cherishing the principles of republican liberty by exercising the sacred right of suffrage.

So far as regards the election of a President, our Government has already assumed the form of an aristocracy. And what is to prevent the same result in the election of Representatives to Congress?

It is said that it is less important that the voter should know the character of the Elector for whom he votes than that of the Representative, because the Elector has but a single act to perform. But, suppose the Elector betrays his constituents in this single act; there would be something worse than a total failure; there would not simply be a vote thrown into the opposite scale. It would be different with regard to a Representative; for, although the voters may be deceived with regard to his character and qualifications, yet it can hardly be conceived that there should be a total failure. As it respects the Elector, his vote must be directly for, or directly against, the interest of his constituents; with respect to the Representative there may be intermediate points. There is, in fact, less reason against a choice of Representatives than of Electors by general ticket.

Already many of the small States choose their representatives by general ticket. In the large States representatives are still chosen in districts; but those districts are often formed in such a way as to suppress, as far as possible, the voice of the minorities, by regulations altogether inconsistent with the principles of republican government. This is an abuse of no ordinary magnitude; but it is not to stop here. Abuses unchecked proceed to the extreme.

Do we flatter ourselves that party violence is at an end; that we are permanently to remain all Republicans, all Federalists? If we do, we deceive ourselves. The same array of parties which for many years distracted our country may not again take place; but, if not the same, certainly a different one, probably more virulent, more sectional, more geographical, more clannish, more inveterate, more dangerous. The process is going on rapidly, even within the walls of this Capitol, that must produce this effect. No one can doubt that parties must necessarily exist in this Government. And although at times they may be split up into small factions, yet the general tendency is to divide into two great interests, the one holding the powers and emoluments of Government, the other struggling to obtain them. The dominant parties in the small States will, as they do, elect their representatives by general ticket, who, although they will represent the whole numbers of both parties, will represent the wishes and interests of but one. If the minorities could remain without any representation as to their numbers, they would be satisfied; but this boon is not granted to them. They are compelled to be represented by those they consider their political enemies and oppressors.

The dominant parties in the small States will thus array in Congress a force much beyond their legitimate strength. And can this be tolerated by the large States during the storm and tempest of party? Will they, with divided forces, meet the solid columns of the small States? It is impossible. One abuse leads to and sometimes justifies another. When we retaliate, we frequently adopt the measure we condemn from necessity; and this, in times of party violence, will be considered a sufficient excuse for a departure from principle. Such was the excuse of Virginia in departing from her original rule of choosing Electors by districts. And if she shall, in self-defence, adopt a law for electing her representatives by general ticket, we shall probably find her offering her reason for so doing in language such as she used on a former occasion.

The maximum of abuse, under our present system, will be, that the Electors will be appointed by the Legislatures of the States, and the representatives chosen by general ticket. This will be an usurpation on the part of the dominant parties of all the power within their reach, and a total suppression of the voice of the minorities in the States, respectively. The complete control of our elections will necessarily fall into the hands of a few bold, ambitious, persevering intriguers; and our boasted elective franchise will be merged in a hated aristocracy.

Perhaps this circumstance is calculated to make but little impression on those who now form the dominant parties in the United States. It is the folly of majorities to think that they can permanently retain their power. If they would reflect, that, by endeavoring to retain too much power, they may lose all; if they would, while in power, adopt such laws and regulations as they would willingly submit to when that power shall have passed into other hands, they would display a degree of wisdom which they have never yet exhibited, and which, I fear, they never will. If such was the disposition of majorities, I should have but little fear for the success of the present measure.

It is objected to the district system, that it will increase the number of candidates for the Presidency, and, of consequence, increase the chances of throwing the final choice of the President into the House of Representatives. The honorable gentleman from Virginia takes this for granted, but makes no attempt to prove it. All experience proves the contrary. It is true, that, as you increase the number of sections to vote, you increase the number of candidates that can by possibility be voted for. But we ought to calculate the probabilities, not the possibilities, of scattering votes. The more numerous the voters, the more likely to fall into the ranks of the two most prominent candidates. This is peculiarly the case, where the numbers are such as to bid defiance to the powers of calculation and intrigue. All Italy would elect a Pope with less difficulty, and with a less proportion of scattering votes, than would be found in a conclave of Cardinals performing the same duty.

In the State of New York, the scattering votes, on an election for Governor, are not as one to a thousand given to the two prominent candidates, while their House of Representatives spend days in choosing a Speaker.

We have seen the Legislature of Pennsylvania voting from day to day, and from session to session, in order to choose a Senator, while two candidates are supported for the Governmental chair with scarcely a scattering vote; and yet, by possibility, they might have voted for one hundred thousand candidates.

When calculation and intrigue can operate, scattering votes are produced. We have seen nineteen ballots given in our Chamber of Representatives, before a Speaker could be elected—nearly as many for a Chaplain, and I know not how many for an Assistant Doorkeeper.

If we choose Electors by the State Legislatures, there will be twenty-four Electoral colleges, and, of course, there may be twenty-four candidates voted for. If the States be divided into two hundred and sixty-one districts, two hundred and sixty-one candidates may receive votes. If the election should be by the people at large, about two millions of candidates might receive votes; and yet I will venture to say, that, under the latter mode, there would be a smaller proportion of scattering votes than under any other.

In a variety of circumstances, there would be a greater tendency to throw the final election of a President into the House of Representatives, under the present, than under the proposed system.

Suppose it to be ascertained by the great men of New York, Virginia, and Massachusetts, that, calculating upon the known disposition of the State Legislatures, the four States, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee, having sixty-eight Electors, would vote for the New York candidate A. That the six States, Maine, Connecticut, New Jersey, Ohio, South Carolina, and Georgia, having sixty-one Electors, would vote for the Virginia candidate B; and the eleven States, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Delaware, Maryland, Alabama, Louisiana, Indiana, Illinois, Mississippi, and Missouri, having fifty-seven Electors, would vote for the Massachusetts candidate C. New York having thirty-six Electors, Virginia twenty-four, and Massachusetts fifteen—in all seventy-five. Suppose, under such perplexing circumstances, the great men of these States, being the heads of the three parties, should meet to settle the affairs of the nation by way of compromise—would they easily come to an agreement, so as to prevent scattering votes?

Unless New York, Virginia, and Massachusetts, should unite in the same candidate, there could be no election by Electors. But, New York having in favor of her candidate the greatest number of Electors, would not yield to the other States. Virginia could not hope for success, either by Electors or in the House of Representatives. The States, therefore, in favor of her candidates, would divide their forces between the other two candidates—but, if they should all vote for A, it would not secure his election—while, if one of those States, with Virginia, as Connecticut or New Jersey, should be in favor of C, it would be decisive in the House of Representatives; and thus thirteen States, having eighty Electors, would defeat the residue of the Union, having one hundred and eighty-one Electors. Under these circumstances, Massachusetts would not yield to New York, and the final decision could hardly fail to rest with the House of Representatives. But would there not be a similar tendency, if the Electors were chosen in districts? There would not in the same degree. The candidate having the greatest number of districts, would probably have the greatest number of States. There would be fewer States interested in defeating the election by Electors. A candidate having but one-third of the Electors could not have a majority of the States. Four States could not give sixty-eight votes for the same candidate. The votes of New York, Virginia, and Massachusetts, would be so divided, as to diminish the power of intrigue and combination. It is evident that the power of calculating the means by which the effect so much dreaded may be produced, will frequently lead to that very result. And will it be pretended that any State would lose her favorite candidate, rather than throw the final election into the House of Representatives? Not one.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

It is further objected to the district system, that it has a tendency to diminish the power of the great States. But this objection is without the slightest foundation.

When we speak of the power of States, we mean their relative power. It is true that, by the district system, a great State may be divided into parts, but the small adjoining States would probably be divided into the similar parts—their relative power would still be the same, as it was before the division. The whole vote of New York is to that of New Jersey, as thirty-six to eight. Suppose these States to be divided into two or more similar parts, those parts would bear to each other the same ratio of thirty-six to eight. But they may be divided into parts not similar, and to the disadvantage of the large State. The chance, however, is equal, that the disadvantage shall be on the part of the small State.

Suppose the vote for President to be by the people at large, if such a mode were practicable—would not each State have precisely its proper weight? Has any State the ambition to wish for more? And is not the proposed amendment the nearest possible approach to a system of general suffrage; and of course the nearest possible approach to a just distribution of power among the States? So far from diminishing the power of the great States, the proposed system would add to their strength.

The large States are more exposed to be distracted by faction and party spirit, than the small, because the objects to be contended for by the ambitious, are greater in the former than the latter.

If, to the objects which necessarily belong to large States, calculated to call forth the most violent party feelings, we add that of giving to the dominant parties the complete control of the Electoral vote—we greatly increase the cause of violence and fury between the parties.

The State of New York gives thirty-six votes upon a Presidential Election—nearly a seventh part of the whole. The difference whether she gives all her votes to the one or the other candidate, is not merely a difference of thirty-six, but of seventy-two. Suppose the parties in that State to be nearly balanced, as has often happened, and may again. The gain or loss of a single county, containing not half of the population of an election district, would turn the scale one way or the other, and give to the successful party the entire vote of the State. Then what bounds could be set to the exertions, the intrigue, corruption, violence, and fury of the contending parties, for the ascendancy? The agitation excited by one Presidential election would not subside before the approach of another. A struggle which, under the present system, might gain the entire vote of the State, would, under the district system, gain no more than one or two districts. The object, therefore, not being worth the contest, the struggle would not be made. Taking from the State majorities this dangerous power, would operate as a sedative—would allay the violence of party, which distracts, and truly impairs the strength of the great States.

Pennsylvania is nearly as much agitated on Presidential elections as New York. Virginia has been somewhat quiescent while we have selected our Presidents from among her sons; when we cease to do that, she will also become restive.

Although the district system would not have a tendency to diminish the power of the great States, it would have a tendency to diminish the power of the great men of the great States. But for that consideration the proposed amendment would long since have been adopted. A man, or a few men, possessing the power of wielding the entire vote of such a State as New York, Pennsylvania, or Virginia, would not be easily persuaded to part with that power. It would be a sacrifice to principle hardly to be expected in these times.

The second proposition which I have submitted, will, if adopted, give to a joint meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives the power to count the votes of the Electors, and, of consequence, the power to decide what votes are and what are not to be counted. To decide whether any candidate has a majority of all the votes; and if no one have such majority, to proceed, immediately, by ballot, to choose a President. Upon this subject I advance with great diffidence. It is untrodden, perhaps untenable ground. The principle of choosing officers, by joint meetings of State Legislatures, is as old as our Government; but its application to the election of a President, is new, or appeared so to the committee to whom I first submitted this proposition. I hesitate, because a great Constitutional question requires more consideration than I have been able to bestow upon this; and because I cannot place entire confidence in my own opinion, until I find it corroborated by the decision of those, to whose talents and long experience we look for aid on questions of great importance and difficulty.

I think, however, the proposition ought to be submitted to the States for their consideration; for, unless, after the fullest investigation, it shall appear beneficial to the Union, it can never receive the concurrence of three-fourths of the States.

The district system may, and ought to be adopted, whether the present proposition shall, or shall not, succeed; but the last without the first would be utterly inadmissible; for, if the joint meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives should be empowered to elect a President under any circumstances, while the Representatives may be chosen by general ticket, the abuse of power would probably be as great as it could be, under the present system of voting by States.

This, it is true, would meet the wishes of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, who is very anxious that the States should preserve their Federal character in electing a President in the last resort, but is not willing they should preserve their Federal character of equality in such election—a principle, however, which I trust will never be abandoned. When the States speak in their Federal character, they speak as equals; when in their national character, their voice or vote is as their numbers respectively. Destroy this principle and the Union is dissolved. The States of Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, and Kentucky, have one hundred and thirty-two Senators and Representatives, a majority of the whole; the majorities of these in the States, respectively, amount to seventy-two. If the majority from each State is to govern the vote of the State, that is, if four votes from Vermont, being in favor of A, the whole seven are to be counted for A; and nineteen votes from New York, being in favor of A, the whole thirty-six are to be counted for A, and so of the rest; it is evident that the President might be elected by seventy-two Senators and Representatives against those of the residue of the Union, amounting to one hundred and eighty-nine. But to extinguish the voice of the Senators and Representatives in this manner, would be deemed an outrage upon the rights of minorities, not to be tolerated. And yet, nearly the same effect is produced if the Representatives of those States are chosen by general ticket, and would be precisely the same if we consider the Senators as Representatives, and chosen in the same way. If the majority in Vermont could elect four and the minority three, the majority of New York nineteen, and the minority seventeen, and so of the rest, is it of any importance to those minorities whether the voice of their Representatives, after they have been permitted to send them on to the Seat of Government, shall thus be suppressed, or whether they shall be prevented from sending Representatives, by a total suppression of their voice, in the first instance, by a general ticket? In each case the abuse of power is the same; in each case the invasion of the Federal principle of our Government is the same. A moment's reflection must lead to the conclusion that the power of electing a President will never be given to this joint meeting, unless the representative members of it shall be elected in single districts. A joint meeting thus composed would represent, as nearly as possible, the power and will of the people of the United States, in their Federal and national character. This body would be, as nearly as possible, analogous to the whole body of Electors to be chosen under the proposed system. The two Houses, in such case, voting as the Electors vote, per capita, would probably enjoy the confidence of the people in as high a degree as the Electors themselves, and might be expected to decide as the Electors would do, if they were assembled at the Seat of Government for that purpose.

This would be a more safe mode than any yet proposed of electing a President; certainly a much more safe mode than that of election in the House of Representatives, by States, in which thirty-one Representatives could elect a President against one hundred and eighty-two.

1. New Hampshire has Representatives 6,	maj.	4
2. Rhode Island	-	2
3. Connecticut	-	4
4. Vermont	-	3
5. New Jersey	-	4
6. Delaware	-	1
7. Georgia	-	4
8. Alabama	-	2
9. Mississippi	-	1
10. Louisiana	-	2
11. Indiana	-	2
12. Illinois	-	1
13. Missouri	-	1

Majority of all the States - - 45 31

Thirty-one Representatives, being majorities of the Representatives of thirteen States, could elect a President.

This, it must be confessed, is a dangerous power on the part of the small States; more dangerous to themselves than to the large States. A resort to the House of Representatives, on such an election, must be dreaded by all. We have had but one instance of it; that filled the country with alarm. Dangerous, however, as this power may be, it is not much more so than the power of combination under the present system, by which the bare majorities in seven States can control the Presidential election against the rest of the Union. This circumstance excites no uneasiness in the mind of the honorable gentleman, because this abuse can only be put into practice by the large States. He even thinks those States should have this power, that, by an understanding and arrangement with each other, they may always prevent the election of a President from devolving upon the House of Representatives.

The opportunities of suppressing minorities, and procuring the election of a President against the will of a majority of the people of the United States, may occur every four years, while the circumstance of reference to the House of Representatives has happened but once in five and thirty years, and which we all pray may never happen again; and which would not then have happened but for the law of Virginia repealing the district system in that State. But for that law, Mr. Adams and Mr. Pinckney would have had a majority of all the votes, and Rhode Island had taken care to give one more vote for Mr. Adams than Mr. Pinckney.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

The small States will consider the adoption of that proposition as a relinquishment of a portion of their power. But to give up a power which cannot be exercised with safety, is not yielding an important point. A portion of this power was yielded up by the small States when they agreed to the amendment for designating the Electors of President and Vice President. This should not be forgotten. The advantage now possessed by the small States against the large, of choosing a President in the last resort, is not at all greater than that possessed by the large States, in choosing Electors. In both cases the power is calculated to defeat the will of a majority of the people of the United States. The safety of the Union demands a mutual concession of these powers. I believe it is the only ground upon which those who fear an abuse of power in the small, and those who fear the same thing from the large States, can ever meet. But, to presume that this concession will be made on the part of the small States alone, after what they have done, is presuming upon what never will and never ought to take place.

I have now arrived at my last proposition, that no person, having been twice elected President of the United States, shall be again eligible to that office. This, I think, must succeed, even if the other two shall fail. In favor of this, we have a strong expression of the public will, from the earliest period of our Government.

In the Federal Convention, Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, submitted a proposition that the President should not be eligible a second time; the term of service then proposed was seven years. This proposition was afterwards adopted, eight States being in favor of it, one against it, and one divided. The proposition of Mr. Patterson, of New Jersey, contained a similar provision.

August 6th, 1787, a committee of the Convention reported a draught of the constitution, with this provision; but one month after, another committee reported amendments to that draught, in which this provision was omitted. A plan of a constitution had been previously submitted by a delegate from New York, proposing to have a chief executive during good behaviour, or for life, which would have been an elective monarchy. The plan adopted by the Convention was a middle course, between the two projects. But the friends to a President for life, or elective monarch, calculated that they should ultimately succeed—that the President would be elected from term to term for life, and that this would gradually grow into the principle they wished to establish. All history, except our own, will justify this conclusion.

That no limitation was placed to the term of service of the President, gave great dissatisfaction at the time. In the amendments proposed by Virginia at the time of ratifying the Constitution, we find this: No person shall be capable of being President of the United States for more than eight years in sixteen.

North Carolina proposed the same amendment.

New York proposed that no person should be eligible to the office of President of the United States a third time.

Our Chief Magistrates have shown a disposition to yield to this principle—they have, by their example, given it something like the force of law—a law, however, which would not impose the slightest barrier to the views of an ambitious President, who might be persuaded by his friends that the public interest would suffer by his retiring from office.

Our Presidents, although they have clearly evinced a determination to retire from office after eight years' service, yet have not retired until they had arrived at the age of sixty-four or sixty-five, at which age, it is to be hoped, ambition begins to subside. Younger Chief Magistrates would not easily perceive* that the precedent of retiring at the end of eight years could exactly apply to their cases. They would rather conclude that the precedent would warrant them in retaining the office until they should arrive at the age of sixty-four or sixty-five.

In many of the States the periods to which their Governors can be elected are limited by their constitutions; and it should be so in all; yet the President, with his immense patronage, and with the command of the Army of the United States, is left without such a salutary limitation. The broad road to monarchy is left open by those who formed our Constitution, by neglect or by design.

Any person is eligible to the office of President, who is a natural born citizen, or citizen at the time of adopting the Constitution—thirty-five years old, and a resident of the United States fourteen years before the election.

A General at the head of our Army may be a candidate for the Presidency.

In Rome, the Consular power was divided between two, each a check upon the other; the term of service limited to one year; no one could be elected Consul under the age of forty-two; and no one could sue for the Consulship, unless personally present, and in a private capacity. This last regulation was one of great importance, and while strictly observed secured the liberties of that Republic. But Pompey, unfortunately for himself and his country, consented to a law, by which Julius Cæsar was permitted to sue for the Consulship, while absent and at the head of a powerful army. And Cicero lent the aid of his eloquence in favor of this law. Pompey was among the first to feel the effects of his folly. He endeavored, when too late, to counteract the measure he had adopted. He was overwhelmed and destroyed, and the liberties of his country forever lost.

Although I would not adopt all the maxims of Roman jealousy, I would adopt some of them; that especially, which should limit the power of the first officer in the Government.

A proposition for establishing an elective monarchy was submitted to the Federal Convention, without meeting with any marked reprobation. Too much of the same spirit, I fear, still remains, which ought to be counteracted—ought to be suppressed, before some accident shall give new vigor and impulse to its dangerous tendencies.

When Mr. D. had concluded—

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, rose, and adverted to the difficulties which stood in the way of any amendment whatever of the Constitution—having first to be approved by two-thirds of both Houses of Congress, then by the Legislatures of two-thirds of the States, amounting to eighteen in number; but notwithstanding these discouraging obstacles he observed that there was a defect in the Constitution not heretofore touched on or pointed out by any of the gentlemen who had spoken on the subject, which might be productive hereafter, if not remedied, of the greatest mischief; he referred to the want of some rule in the Constitution to provide for the occurrence of a contested election for the office of President of the United States. The Constitution had pointed out a mode of election, in case a majority of the electoral votes were not given to any one person—this mode was an election by the House of Representatives; but, suppose circumstances should arise in this last resort, which should create a disputed and an unsettled election, we should, in such a case, said Mr. H., be at sea in a tempest, without chart or compass, and this defect may prove to be a rock, if not removed, on which the liberties of this country may be wrecked. Under this impression, discouraging as was the prospect of the adoption of any amendment, he was induced to offer one, which he would take another opportunity of discussing, as well as the other propositions on the same subject before the Senate. Mr. H. then submitted the following as an amendment to the original resolution:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring therein, That the following amendment of the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths thereof, shall be valid as part of said Constitution:

Questions of the validity of the election of President, or of the proceedings therein, shall be determined by the members of both Houses in joint meeting. The President of the Senate shall preside, and a majority of the members of each House shall constitute a quorum in such meeting. The rules of proceeding therein shall be prescribed by law; but no alteration of those rules shall have effect until two years after it shall have been made.

Questions of the validity of the election of Vice President, or of the proceedings therein, shall be determined by the Senate. The rules of proceeding therein shall be prescribed by the Senate; but no alteration of those rules shall have effect until two years after it shall have been made.

This proposition was ordered to be printed; and the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, February 12.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the Message of the President of the United States, transmitting a resolution of the Legislature, with an extract of a letter from the Governor of Georgia, relative to the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands within the limits of said State, made a report, which was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the same committee, to which was referred the Message of the President of the United States, transmitting a memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, relative to the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands within the limits of the said State, made a report, which was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, praying that a law may be passed, requiring a treaty to be held with the Cherokee nation of Indians, for the purchase of so much of their territory included within the limits of the State as lies west of Wellstown Valley, east of the boundary lines of the counties of Morgan, Blount, and St. Clair, and south of the Tennessee river, made a report, which was read; and, in concurrence with their request, the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, praying Congress "to take into consideration the case of such persons as became purchasers of public lands after the time of issuing the Mississippi stock, and who had made full payment prior to the passage of the relief law, and to allow them the deduction of thirty-seven and an half per cent. allowed to those who were in arrears to Government, or to make them such other allowance as they may be entitled to in right and justice," made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the prayer of the memorial ought not to be granted.

Mr. LANMAN presented the petition of John Wheelwright, praying a divorce. The petition was read, and referred, together with the accompanying documents, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States and certain British colonial ports, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill for the relief of Eleanor Lawrence was read a third time, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill, entitled "An act to divide the State of South Carolina into two judicial districts," with amendments, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Mechanics' Bank—Alexandria

SENATE.

MECHANICS' BANK OF ALEXANDRIA.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill to renew and extend (to the year 1836) the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria.

On this bill an earnest debate took place, which occupied the Senate until past four o'clock, embracing almost entirely an investigation and discussion of facts relating to the management and condition of the institution.

The extension of the charter was opposed by Messrs. EATON, TAYLOR, of Virginia, and LLOYD, of Massachusetts, on various grounds, but chiefly for the reasons that it had not, at its formation, a solid capital, that it was now in a condition, nearly, if not quite insolvent; that thus situated it would be an injury to the community to extend its capacity to issue notes—that there was no necessity for more banks in the District, but if there was, they ought to be solid and solvent, &c.

Mr. SOUTHARD and Mr. BARBOUR, (members of the committee to which an examination into the circumstances of the bank and the charges alleged against it had been referred) replied repeatedly and at considerable length, to the objections which had been urged to the bill—controversing the facts alleged against it, and the reasons as to the expediency of renewing the charter—arguing that this bank was in as good a condition as the others, which had been rechartered, that justice and equity demanded that this institution should receive the same measure of favor as the others, &c., &c.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, had been opposed to renewing this charter, but an examination of the facts and an attention to the debate had changed his mind, as he found that this bank had more specie in its vaults, than the whole amount of its notes in circulation and its deposits, united, and therefore, it was, he thought, in a better condition than any other bank he knew of now or had ever known in the United States. He spoke at some length and repeatedly.

Mr. D'WOLF made also some remarks, the purport of which was, that he deemed banks an evil, and that he believed the only mode of working a cure, was to charter all that asked it; it would thus be shown to the community that the Legislature did not grant charters as a mark of confidence or credit in those institutions, but merely to enable them to plead, sue, &c., and the public, would, therefore, give them no more credit than they deserved, &c. Messrs. VAN DYKE, CHANDLER, and HOLMES, of Maine, made some incidental remarks.

The Senate rejected a motion to recommit the bill, to inquire further into certain facts—ayes 16, noes 19; and rejected a motion to adjourn; but, an unsuccessful motion being afterwards made by Mr. EATON, to amend the bill, before the question was taken on its third reading, about half-past four o'clock, the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, February 13.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Robert 17th CON. 2d SESS.—8

Abbott, made a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the heirs of Johnston Blakely. The report and bill were read, and the bill passed to the second reading.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the memorial of William Gamble, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on the Militia, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to provide for clothing the militia when called into the service of the United States," reported the same, without amendment.

Mr. SEYMOUR presented the petition of John Rogers, a Cherokee chief, praying the payment of his demands against the United States. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, presented the petition of James D. Draughan, legal representative of Robert H. Draughan, deceased, praying that a quantity of staves, obtained from a quarter section of land since forfeited to the United States for non-payment, may be exempted from seizure and forfeiture. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BARBOUR called up the memorial of sundry justices of the peace and inhabitants of the District of Columbia, heretofore presented, against any alteration in the laws for the collection of debts in said District; and, on motion, it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of a number of the inhabitants of the State of Illinois, praying that relief may be extended to those purchasers of public lands who had paid for the same prior to the passage of the act of Congress by which the price of public lands was reduced, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the prayer of the memorialists ought not to be granted.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, praying Congress "to take into consideration the case of such persons as became purchasers of public lands after the time of issuing the Mississippi stock, and who had made full payment prior to the passage of the relief law; and to allow them the deduction of thirty-seven and a half per cent. allowed to those who were in arrears to Government, or to make them such other allowance as they may be entitled to in right and justice;" and, in concurrence therewith, resolved, that the prayer of the memorial ought not to be granted.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act to divide the State of South Carolina into two judicial districts." Whereupon, Resolved, That they concur in the said amendments, with the following amendment:

Strike out "Lawrence," and insert Lawrens.

SENATE.

Amendment to the Constitution.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

On motion, by Mr. SEYMOUR, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory,'" together with the amendments proposed thereto; and, on his motion, the bill, together with the proposed amendments, were referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of Don Harpin de la Gautrais was read the second time.

The bill to commute the pension of Lieutenant Alfred Flournoy was read the second time.

The resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in relation to internal improvement, was read the second time.

The bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Abraham Snyder;" the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Hyde;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Rees, of New York, one of the sureties of Joseph H. Rees, deceased, late assistant deputy paymaster general in the service of the United States," were severally read the second time; and, on motion, they were respectively referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which had been recommended the bill, in addition to the "Act for the prompt settlement of public accounts," and for the punishment of the crime of perjury, reported the same with sundry amendments; which were ordered to be printed.

MECHANICS' BANK OF ALEXANDRIA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria.

Mr. EATON (having since yesterday received some additional information on the subject) spoke again at considerable length against the bill. Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, also made some further remarks against its passage. Messrs. BARBOUR and SOUTHARD severally advocated the bill at much should vote for the bill.

length, replying to Messrs. EATON and TAYLOR. Mr. LOWRIE also assigned the reasons why he

The question being finally taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed, and read a third time, it was decided in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Chandler, D'Wolf, Elliott, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, Morrill, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Smith of South Carolina, Southard, Stokes, Thomas, Ware, and Williams of Tennessee—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Dickerson, Eaton, Findlay, Gaillard, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, and Williams of Mississippi—16.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the resolution of Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to the election of President of the United States, together with the amendments offered thereto by Mr. DICKERSON and Mr. HOLMES, of Maine.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, rose and addressed the Chair as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: This building which we occupy is a fit emblem of the Government under which we live. At one end is the Chamber of the House of Representatives, resembling that branch of the Government. Its strength, splendor, and magnificence, indicate the union and sovereignty of the people. It is placed in the South, implying heat, and intimating thereby that it is to be expected from this branch of the Government. The opposite wing is an emblem of the Senate. It is in the North, implying coolness, deliberation, and wisdom. The exterior construction is strong, firm, and apparently permanent. But the interior is encroached upon, and undermined by the room occupied by the Judiciary; the fabric begins to crack and give way, and there is some danger of its overthrow. God grant that this may not be strictly emblematic of the Senate, the representatives of the sovereignty of the States. Between these, connecting and yet towering above them, is the Centre Building, impressive emblem of Executive power. Its imposing structure, immense form, lofty turrets, and magnificent dome, conspire to diminish and sink the wings in the beholder's eye. From the East is to project a splendid portico, showing that the Executive will extend in that direction far beyond the reach of the Legislature, in directing our Navy upon the ocean, and in our negotiations with foreign Powers. The whole body of the building projects far to the West, intimating that, at some far distant day, the Executive arm will be almost exclusively felt by the colonies, tribes, people, and nations, which will occupy and inhabit those immense and immeasurable regions. But the Centre Building is yet in an unfinished state. This indicates that Executive influence and grandeur is still progressing; and, as I shall attempt to show, that the amendment under consideration is necessary to direct, correct, regulate, and restrain it.

My proposition to amend the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. DICKERSON) contains a provision not embraced by either of the amendments under consideration. These propose to modify the election of President, in the first and last resort. This makes provision for a contested election. The Constitution, as it is, has provided for the case of no election by the people, transferring it to the House of Representatives, to be determined by States; but it has never contemplated the case of a contested election of President or Vice President. My amendment is connected with, but not repugnant to, either of the other propositions. In discussing it, however, I shall deem it necessary, in expressing my preference for the proposition of the honorable member from New Jersey, to suggest some objections to that of the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. TAYLOR.)

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

His plan, in substance, is this: In case of no election, the President is to send back to the Electoral Colleges the two highest candidates that they may designate, and, if they fail in this, the Senate and House of Representatives are to elect from such candidates. An objection which strikes me with considerable force, is the agency of the President himself in this business. The votes are to be returned to him, and he is to open, count, and proclaim them. In case of no choice, he is to notify the fact, designate the two highest members on the lists, and call upon the Electors to decide between them. Every second term he is probably a candidate for re-election. He determines, in the first instance, whether there is a choice or not. It would not be surprising, if questionable votes should be returned. Indeed it would be singular if this should not, in many instances, be the case. The qualification of the Electors, the correctness of their proceedings, the certainty or genuineness of the returned lists, will often present questions for investigation and decision. And in whom is this discretion to be vested? In a tribunal intelligent and capable, but by no means impartial. Such is the frailty and treachery of the human heart, that very few can be found qualified to decide in their own cases, even in the most trifling concerns. How much greater the danger, then, when so much is at stake! If Kings and Emperors reach the throne by trampling on the rights, and wading through the blood of their people, what must be the temptation to become the chief of a free people! The object is imposing, impressive, and sublime; and the temptation to achieve it tends strongly to lure the aspirant from the line of honesty, and the path of the Constitution. He to decide whether an election is made, and who is chosen! Should he pronounce no choice, when there is one in fact, the Electors are made to vote again, and what tribunal is to determine whether the first or second list is to be received? But, if he declares an election when none has been made, where is your remedy then?

Unfortunately, the Constitution has made no provision to settle the question of a contested election of President. The votes are to be returned to the President of the Senate, are to be opened in the presence of both Houses, and the votes are to be counted. The person having a majority, is to be declared the President. But who is to preside in this joint meeting? By whom are the votes to be counted and declared? and if the counting or declaration should be contested, how is it to be determined? Perhaps no three gentlemen who hear me, would agree in their answers to these questions. The honorable gentleman, nevertheless, proposes to increase the probability of the recurrence of these cases, without prescribing a remedy—and to leave it in part for the President to determine upon his own election.

But, a reference again to the Electors, would be fraught with other inconveniences. The office of an Elector is finished, by making the election. He has no further responsibility, and he retires and mingles with the mass of the community. He holds no other trust from the people, which he might lose from a fraudulent or corrupt vote. The Constitution has wisely provided that all the Electors shall meet on the same day; and the law, with equal wisdom, has fixed the day as soon as possible after their appointment. It was intended to exclude the possibility of approach. But, adopt this amendment—the failure upon the first trial, and the vote which each Elector gave, will be instantly known in every corner of the United States. Before, or when, they shall re-assemble, the attempts at management will begin; with what probability of success, let those who judge of human nature, as it is, determine. There is even less danger, should the election come to the House of Representatives. Your Representatives then become your Electors. But this is not their only office. They have other duties, higher trusts, and further responsibilities. Should one be successfully approached, detection is more probable, and its effects would be to blast all his political prospects. Dangerous as I deem an election by the House of Representatives, I should fear it less than this second struggle before the Electors.

But, sir, I object further to the principle of the honorable gentleman's amendment. He proposes to diminish the relative powers of the small States, in the last resort, without an equivalent. These have now a vote equal to the largest, if the election comes into the House. The proposed second trial reduces the probability to a mere possibility; but, should the case ever occur, the voices of the smaller States are even then to be swallowed up in a general voice of the convention of both Houses.

The amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. DICKERSON) gives this equivalent. By districting the several States, for the choice of Electors, he increases the power of the small States in the original, and reduces it in the final vote. As the case now is, the large and small States may be considered as large and small electoral districts. Were you to have no parties, it would be of little importance. But these you must have. The election of President will always be contested. There will be two or more candidates, and consequently, their adherents will constitute two or more parties. A large State may throw her whole electoral ticket for one candidate, by the merest majority. The three large States lying contiguous, might combine, to produce the same effect on a larger scale. Eighty-eight electoral votes might be given, by such a combination, against the will of nearly one-half the population of these States, whose voice would not be heard at all in the election. A combination of this sort, and to such an extent, among the small States, is impossible. Their influence is, therefore, diminished, for the want of an unity of action; and the large States are constantly succeeding, at their prejudice and expense.

The truth is, that the large States, in their zeal to accomplish their object, have perverted the Constitution. The Electors were to be appointed in such manner as the Legislature of the State should direct. This direction was to be given by the Legislature, as other legislative acts. The framers of the Constitution never could have imagined that, because the State Legislatures have the right to direct it to be done, they would have claimed the right to do it themselves. The votes from Massachusetts, therefore, mentioned by the honorable gentleman from New Jersey, might have been the subject of contest had they affected the result. The case was this: The members of the Legislature wished to appoint the Electors themselves, but no act or resolve had been passed for this purpose, and, as parties were nearly equal, none could be passed without the consent of the Governor. It was known that the Governor considered this appointment, by the Legislature, as unconstitutional. To surmount this difficulty, the two Houses directed themselves, and appointed the Electors.

In addition to this usurpation of the large States, the operation of the Constitution has been constantly against the small. Two Electors were given to each State over its number of Representatives, to preserve, in some measure, its federative equality in the election of President. When the Constitution was adopted, this federal voice bore a proportion to the popular voice of twenty-six to sixty-five. It now bears a proportion of only forty-eight to two hundred and sixty-one. So that, while the federal voice has not yet doubled, the popular voice has more than quadrupled.

This is not all. The relative strength of the small States is constantly diminishing, both in the original and final vote.

At the adoption of the Constitution the number of Electors was ninety-one, of which Rhode Island and Delaware had each three, or one-thirtieth of the whole vote, and one-thirteenth in case the election came to the House. Now, notwithstanding the representation of Rhode Island is doubled, their relative influence stands thus: Rhode Island one sixty-fifth, and Delaware one eighty-fifth, in the original, and each one twenty-fourth in the final election. While New York, which originally stood at one-eleventh, has since arisen to one-seventh of the electoral votes. There is, moreover, another advantage which obtains in the large States, by which that of two additional Electors is greatly diminished. In the apportionment of Representatives, it is to be among the several States. After fixing the ratio, and dividing them among the several States, a surplus or fraction is left in each. A compromise of these fractions was once attempted; that is, if the fractions in two or more adjacent States would amount to the requisite number for a Representative, such a Representative might be assigned by Congress, at its discretion, to one of those States. The bill was rejected by President Washington, on the ground of its unconstitutionality, and every State is, consequently, obliged to lose its own fraction. This fraction is as likely to be large in a small as in a large State. I will illustrate this by a single example: All the New England States, except Massachusetts, with New Jersey and Delaware, are entitled to thirty-three Representatives, and New York alone to thirty-four. The fraction, in those seven States, would entitle them to four additional Representatives; or their aggregate population would entitle them to thirty-seven; so that, although these States gain, by the federative principle, twelve Electors over New York, they, at the same time, lose four by this operation of the fractions.

A unity of action will always operate in favor of the large States. The members of the local government, the officers of the United States combined with other leading and influential men, might present a general ticket to the people, which it would be impossible to resist, and which would entirely silence a large and respectable minority. In the small States this influence is necessarily divided. Local prejudices and attachments, State pride, a thousand personal and other considerations, would prevent this unity of action.

The influence of a large State over a small one is not dissimilar to that of a rich and intelligent man over his poorer neighbors. From dependence or interest, it usually happens that the weak are induced to yield to the will of the strong. The wealth, liberality, and inducements to ambition in a large State, lure into it men of talents, popularity, and influence. These create a power which is felt with effect in the neighboring States.

The large States can, moreover, act in concert with much effect. Three large States in the midst of the rest, might easily combine an influence which it would be difficult to resist. And when it is considered that these might give their united weight, by mere tyrannic majorities, against large, intelligent, virtuous, republican minorities, it becomes us to look round us for a remedy. That of the honorable gentlemen from New Jersey is, perhaps, the best. This gives you a President by the voice of the nation. The minority in each State is heard as well as the majority; and, although State influence cannot, in this case, be effectually controlled, it is in a great measure diminished.

The honorable gentleman from Virginia spoke allegorically of great men and a great white house. Let me view the States under a different figure. Thirteen families commenced the settlement of a village or town; four of these were rich and powerful, and their plantations were large and valuable, and they had many servants and members of their families. Others held their lots in different places, some large and some small. One of these four, whose situation was most to the South, was remarkable for his intelligence and policy. He was descended from illustrious parents of whom he inclined to boast. He managed his affairs with great prudence and skill, taught his servants and his household how to be useful at home, and popular in the village, and never forgot to boast of their qualifications among his neighbors. Two of the great estates lay adjoining his; although these families were rich and powerful, yet their contentions and contumacy of their servants had in some measure impaired their influence in the village. The most northerly great man had once his full share of control; but he was too perplexed and disturbed by family strife, and a truant son had demanded his patrimony and received it. These things combined, had diminished his influence and reduced him to a common standing with the rest of his neighbors. At length these great men began to play into each other's hand. He of the South, would take care to prepare one of his own servants for the most honorable employments in the village. To pacify his most powerful neighbor, he would propose to him that he should furnish a servant of the second grade. New families came in and occupied the vacant grounds reserved for them, and the number was increased to twenty-four. These being strangers, and having occasion for all their resources to commence in the cultivation of their farms, had little influence, and left the general concern to be managed by these powerful and distinguished families. It soon resulted that the poor and the new families, for want of concert, intelligence, and resources, were obliged to give up all control and submit to the will and dictation of wealth and power.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

SENATE.

But, as much as I could complain of the power of the large States, in the original election, I find great fault with that of the small States, in the House of Representatives, in the last resort. This amendment gives a remedy in both cases. At the time the Constitution was adopted there were but two which might be denominated small States. Now there are eight; three which give, each, five Electors, and three Representatives; one, four Electors and two Representatives; and the other four, three Electors and one Representative each; making, in these eight States, thirty-one Electors, of 260; and fifteen Representatives, of 212. Yet, as two-thirds of the States constitute a quorum in the election of President, these eight States, being one-half of the two-thirds, might, with their fifteen Representatives, prevent an election.

A course of measures might be adopted, which, in most cases, would bring the election into the House. A State has some favorite, whom it would not be difficult to convince that he was fit for the Presidency. He is first to be honored with a State nomination. Other States follow the example, and adhere tenaciously to their own favorites. The people of the States become pledged, and will pledge their Electors. Local attachments grow every day stronger, and these become more fixed by zeal and irritation. The small States foment and encourage this division. The middling States are indifferent; no one candidate obtains a majority, and the election goes into the House. Here, a scene will be presented, disgusting and alarming. Twenty-four votes, thirteen necessary to a choice, and Illinois with one—balancing New York with thirty-four Representatives. The election might devolve on a single State, having a single representative. Such a trust, to rest in a single individual, would be felt and assailed by the candidates and their friends. If the trust should not be abused, its execution would be attended with distrust, suspicion, and jealousy; the public would be irritated, dissatisfied, and distracted, and the Administration thus created would be without energy, concert, or confidence.

The proposed amendment, however, avoids that danger. It takes away the inducements to carry the election into the House, because, the last election is in coincidence with the first, and the relative voice of the States is the same.

But, without the amendment which I have had the honor to propose, that of the honorable gentleman from New Jersey is still deficient. He has provided for the original, and, in case of failure, the ultimate election. But he makes no provision for a decision of the question, whether an election has or has not been made. The Constitutional qualifications of the candidate—Is he a citizen of the United States? of the requisite age? were the Electors ineligible by holding offices under the United States? did they meet on a day different from the rest, or from the one prescribed? are these returned lists genuine, or are they altered or forged? These are questions which will, at some period, be agitated, and which the Constitution provides no tribunal to determine. My amendment goes to constitute such a tribunal, to consist of the Senate and House in joint meeting. The President of the Senate is made the presiding officer, the rules of proceeding are to be prescribed by law, but no alteration of them is to take effect until two years after it is made.

To require that the rules of proceeding in a contested election should be prescribed by an act of Congress, and not be altered until two years, is giving the exposition of those rules to a different Congress from that which made them, and prevents an unlimited exercise of discretion in determining the case of a favorite candidate. At the last election, the votes of Missouri were returned, though Missouri had not, in fact, been admitted into the Union. Upon counting the votes, a question was made, and discussion attempted, whether these votes should be counted. But we soon discovered the awkwardness of our situation. No officer to govern the debate, no rules of proceeding, nor of decision, confusion was about to commence: and the Senate, to avoid it, rose up, and, in a very dignified manner, returned to their own chamber. Had these votes of Missouri determined the election, it is impossible to conjecture what would have ensued. An event which has happened, and which is so likely to happen, should be provided for. Ambitious schemes and angry passions will be found to operate in a contest of such magnitude. The patronage and power of this office have, and perhaps always will, create a struggle. State pretensions, State nominations, local jealousies, will be encouraged to effect the designs of particular candidates. It is, I fear, the rock on which the Republic is one day to be wrecked. In due time, in good weather, we should define its position and extent, and point out its dangers. When the tempest comes, this will be too late.

When Mr. H. had concluded, the resolution and amendments were postponed to Monday next; and the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, February 14.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Abraham Snyder;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Hyde," were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and they were respectively referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, presented the petition of a number of merchants, masters of vessels, and others, praying the erection of a lighthouse at the southern extremity of Cape Cod. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

Mr. BENTON submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation to enable the President of the United States to take and retain possession of the territories of the United States, on the Northwest coast of America.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the recovery of debts in the District of Columbia," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, from the committee to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to, and to amend, an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed 2d March, 1799, and for other purposes," reported the same, with amendments, which were read; and, on motion by Mr. LLOYD, the amendments were ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate, and the bill and amendments postponed to and made the order of the day for Monday next.

On motion, by Mr. BENTON, the Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 10th instant, for instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs, in relation to a certain Indian treaty, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of a number of the inhabitants of the State of Illinois, praying that relief may be extended to those purchasers of public lands who had paid for the same prior to the passage of the act of Congress by which the price of public lands was reduced; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved, that the prayer of the memorialists ought not to be granted.

The bill for the relief of the heirs of Johnston Blakeley was read the second time.

On motion, by Mr. EATON, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to amend an act, entitled "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida," approved the 8th of May, 1822, and, the same having been amended, it was reported to the House; and the amendment being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill to extend the charter of the Mechanics'

Bank of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, was read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of Joseph Forrest; and the further consideration thereof was postponed to and made the order of the day for Monday next.

The following Messages were received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, of February 3d, requesting a statement of the number and size of cannon, mortars, and howitzers, necessary for the armament of the fortifications already built, and intended to be built, with an estimate of the sum necessary for their construction, I transmit a report from the Secretary of War, prepared in execution of instructions given him to that effect.

JAMES MONROE.

FEBRUARY 10, 1823.

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, of the 11th of this month, requesting the President to cause to be communicated to the Senate an estimate of the amount of land in the State of Georgia to which the Indian title has been extinguished by the United States, since the cession of a portion of the territory of Georgia to the United States, with a statement of the cost of such extinguishment; and also an estimate of the amount of land within the said State to which the Indian title still remains to be extinguished, and by what tribes claimed, I transmit a report from the Secretary of War, which contains the information desired.

JAMES MONROE.

FEBRUARY 14, 1823.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURTS.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, rose to offer a resolution. He said he had been anxious to present to the Senate a proposition to enjoin upon the Judicial Committee a thorough examination into the organization of the courts of the United States, and to report such a change as would cure the evils resulting from the present system. He thought it was the duty of Congress to take up the subject and give it a complete examination, and adopt some modifications which he was convinced ought to be made. But this session was a short one, and not the most favorable to the discharge of this duty. He thought that Congress should turn their attention to the jurisdiction, as well as to the organization of the Federal Judiciary. The defining and limiting the jurisdiction of the courts depended upon a construction of the Federal Constitution, and required no other materials than those possessed by every member. But the organization of the courts was a matter of policy and expediency, and should be changed as time and experience might suggest. In order, therefore, that this subject might be before Congress at an early period of the next session, with all the facts which could be obtained in addition to those in the possession of members, he had been induced to offer to the House a resolution which might furnish some useful information on the subject as to the organization of the courts. At present, one half of the territory of the United States, if not half of the population, was under a district system, and the other half under a district and circuit system combined—and the circuit judges compose the Supreme Court of the United States. It was apparent from this system, that, in the selection of these judges we should consult, as much if not more, bodily powers than mental and legal acquirements; for the Judges of the Supreme Court can only remain at this place something like forty days annually, during which time, with the most indefatigable industry, more than one hundred cases cannot be disposed of, while they represent ten million of people, and twenty-four independent States, and the dockets in every part of the Union swelling and increasing in magnitude. The Western country had in part only the benefits of the circuit system. He thought that the system should be uniform; that every part of the United States should have circuit courts, or confined to district, and enable the Supreme Court to remain in session at this point such a period as will be more adequate to the discharge of their duties as Judges of the Supreme Court. His object was to produce uniformity, efficiency, and impartiality in respect to every portion of the community. Mr. J. concluded by offering the following resolution:

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Lead Mines and Salt Springs.

SENATE.

Resolved, That the Judges of the Supreme Court be requested to report, jointly, to this body, as early in the next session of Congress as may be convenient, such facts and observations as their experience and reflections may suggest, relative to the present organization of the courts of the United States, pointing out its defects and inconveniences, if any, and suggesting such changes and modifications as will, in their opinion, combine most efficiency and economy in the administration of justice.

LEAD MINES AND SALT SPRINGS.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill to repeal the several acts reserving from public sale the lead mines and salt springs belonging to the United States, and to authorize the President of the United States to cause the lead mines and the salt springs, and the lands contiguous thereto, to be exposed to public sale.

Mr. BENTON rose, and in support of the bill delivered himself to the following effect:

The Senate is now to deliberate upon a subject of great national importance. The mines and salines of Upper Louisiana still belong to the nation. They are great in extent and rich in value. They are found scattered in detached districts over a line of six hundred miles; from the left bank of the Arkansas to the neighborhood of the Falls of St. Anthony. The State of Missouri, in the centre of this line, is their chief seat. Salines are found in every part of the State, but chiefly in the part known under the name of the "Boon's Lick country." Here the salt water runs off from the surface of the earth in a thousand streams. Large creeks, on which mills are built, are sensibly impregnated with it; and over an extent of four or five counties, on both sides of the Missouri, in a country of unrivalled fertility, scarcely a mile square could be found in which saline indications are not visible to the daily passenger.

The lead district is located in a different part of the State, on the waters of the Merrimac, Gasconade, and St. Francis, and what was formerly the county of St. Genevieve, now divided into several counties, of which Washington is the centre, and the chief seat of the mines.

The great indications of mineral wealth in this district attracted the attention of enterprising men more than a century ago. The celebrated "Mississippi Scheme" was bottomed upon the mines of Upper Louisiana; but the precious, not the valuable metals were the object of pursuit to the projectors of that scheme. It was the middle of the last century before the lead mines were worked, and the experience of seventy years has since shown that a large district of country abounds with this mineral, the ore exceedingly rich, yielding eighty-two per cent., and the metal so much finer than the English as to command a cent more on the pound in the white and red lead factories. In 1803, the province of Louisiana was ceded to the United States, and the fame of her mineral wealth prodigiously enhanced, in public estimation, the value of the acquisition. Congress proceeded upon the idea that these mines were too valuable to be owned by individuals; that they ought to be reserved as national property; and a system of reservation and Government monopoly was adopted, and has been persevered in ever since. The surveyors of the public lands were instructed to note on their maps all indications of mines and salines; portions of contiguous land were directed to be reserved convenient to each; the officers of the land department were forbid to sell them; the boards of commissioners for confirming Spanish titles were interdicted from deciding a claim which covered lead or salt; and, to complete this system of monopoly, an odious law of retroactive operation was passed, to vacate the sales of land made by the Government itself, in the event of afterwards finding lead or salt upon it, and fixing on the purchasers, by the aid of some inquisitorial process, the successful charge of previous knowledge and fraudulent concealment.

The National Government, by these acts, having concentrated in its own hands the possession of the mines and salines, undertook, in the year 1807, to reap the fruit of its able policy. For this purpose, the luminous idea was adopted of converting itself into a national landlord, the miners into national tenants, and deriving a national revenue from salt-water boilers and lead-ore diggers. This system was adopted in 1807. Fifteen years have since elapsed, and certainly fifteen years of annual experience is sufficient to test the vice or the virtue of all money-making schemes. What, then, has been the fruit of this monopolising and leasing system? Have any leases been taken? Yes, many. Has any lead been dug? Yes, many millions of pounds weight. Have any rents been paid? No, not a dollar—not one cent. But, perhaps it may be thought that valuable improvements have been made, the benefit of which will inure to the Republic, and compensate it for the loss of rents. I answer, none. No improvement can be made at salines, except by sinking wells or boring holes some hundred feet to the strata of salt or streams of strong water which lie below, neither of which has been done at a public saline. No improvement can be made at a mine, except by sinking shafts, opening galleries, providing ventilators and hydraulic engines, and constructing permanent furnaces; not one of which things has been done at a public mine, or ever will be done by a tenant or lessee for years. The spirit of tenantry is every where the same; it is a spirit adverse to improvement, always leaning towards the injury of the property in possession, and always holding back from the payment of rent. This spirit has had its full range in the mineral lands of the United States, where no improvement has been made, no rent paid, and great injury done in the destruction of timber, and in ravaging the ground in search of minerals. Not only no improvement has been made, but not even a mine discovered even twenty feet below the surface of the ground. Of the fifty or sixty public mines enumerated in the report from the War Department, not one was known as a mine at this time. They were nothing but superficial diggings, exhausted and abandoned in a few weeks or months after the first discovery. The veins and masses of ore which approach the surface have alone been touched. Miners call this "picking at the eyes of the mine," while the body of it lies at the distance of some hundred, or some thousand, feet below. In fine, the fruit of this whole system has been injury to the national property, loss to the national treasury, and a recourse to foreign Powers to supply us with the articles of which God in his providence has given to us more than he has given to them.

SENATE.

Lead Mines and Salt Springs.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Mr. B. appealed to the Senate to say whether it was not time to change this system. His own mind was made up, and had been during the seven years that he had lived in Missouri, and witnessed the evils which he had faintly sketched. He was against the leasing system. He knew that it might be improved, but, with all the improvements that could be grafted upon it, he held it to be wrong in its first principles, and fraught with evil in all the ramifications of its practice. To continue it will be to perpetuate the relation of landlord and tenant throughout the vast extent of the mineral districts of the Republic; that landlord being the Federal Government, and holding its domains and body of tenantry within the limits of a sovereign State. I deny such a power to the Federal Government. I take my stand upon the words of the Constitution, upon the left hand of the venerable Senator from Virginia, (Mr. TAYLOR,) and deny to the Federal Government a power to hold lands in any State, except upon grants made, in cases enumerated, and for purposes specified, in the Constitution. I speak of permanent ownership, not of the transient trustee-possession, which is necessary to a fair distribution of the property, and which is recognised in the compacts with the new States by an agreement not to tax the public land "before it is sold, and for five years thereafter." I deny to the Federal Government the capacity to hold a body of tenantry within the limits of any State. The monarchies of Europe have their serfs and vassals, but the genius of the Republic disclaims the tenure and the spirit of vassalage, and calls for freemen, owners of the soil, masters of their own castles, and free from the influence of a foreign sovereign.

But if a doubt can be entertained of the right of the Federal Government to hold lands and tenants in the bosoms of the States, none can exist as to the evils of such a practice. Even if confined to minerals and salines, the mischief must be great. In the first place, large districts of country must be locked up from the people, fenced in with prohibitory laws, and protected from waste, like the forest lands in Europe. The soil and timber on the reserved tracts must be placed under the guardianship of penal statutes; Federal officers must be appointed to stand over the miners, and watch their hands, and search their pockets, and detect all attempts to carry off the ores before "the lord has received his tithe." Other laws must be made to compel the payment of rent; the odious remedy by "distress," must be introduced, and this splendid Federal Government, created by our fathers for great national purposes, must be seen descending from its high estate, and going down to the level of a petty landlord, impounding the cattle of his miserable tenant, to force out of his hands the arrearages of his rent. But what is the effect to the States in which these things shall be done? Population retarded, the improvement of the country delayed, large bodies of land held free of taxation, and their elections more or less influenced by the presence of men holding their leases at the will of the Federal Government. All this is bad enough, but the worst is yet to be named. The foundation of the whole is monopoly, odious in itself, and aggravated in this instance from the nature of the articles monopolized. God placed lead and salt in Missouri for the use of the people who go there to live; he gave them a surplus of both to sell to their neighbors; but, by the intervention of a foreign Government, the people are denied the benefit of the use and the profits of supplying their neighbors.

But it is not only lead and salt which will be monopolized under the continuance of this system, but a great variety of other minerals and fossils, and large tracts of farming land to supply them with wood. The base metals have an affinity to each other, and are generally found in company. The lead districts in the Mendip Hills and Derbyshire, in England, abound with zinc, iron, coal, mineral waters, plumbago, every one of which, and many others, are found in the mineral districts of Missouri.* All these must be * Geological researches have discovered in Missouri, besides the articles above named, chalks, red and white; ochres, red, white, and yellow; fuller's earth; potter's clay; a plastic white clay, snow white;

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Lead Mines and Salt Springs.

SENATE.

lost to the inhabitants, if the leasing system is perpetuated. And what is the advantage proposed to the Federal Government in return for so many evils? Revenue! yes, money for the Treasury is the object proposed. But who can entertain a serious idea of drawing any thing, worth a nation's notice, from such a source? We have already had fifteen years' experience, and shall we wait for fifteen more? Shall the experience of other nations be lost upon us? Of all the money-making projects that ever entered the head of a nation, that of mining is held to be the most chimerical. So says Adam Smith. He even places national mining below lotteries, and so do I. And if compelled to choose between them, I would certainly direct our Minister of the Treasury to repair to Benjamin O. Tyler's Grand National Temple of Fortune on Pennsylvania Avenue, (especially if furnished with tickets selected by the truly fortunate dreamer of Richmond,) in preference to resting his hopes for future revenue on a second "Mississippi Scheme" among the mines of Upper Louisiana.

I trust that enough has been said to show the bad policy of leasing. Shall we then adopt the alternative proposed by the bill, and deliver up the mines and salines of the Republic to the pursuit of individual industry, to the activity of individual enterprise, to the care of individual interest, guided and sustained by the skill and capital of those who may choose to hold them? I maintain it to be our true policy to do so, and that the Government will find its indemnity in the price which will be paid for them, and in the increased wealth of its citizens, which is, in fact, the wealth of the Government itself. Besides, without a freehold in the soil, the experience of all countries proves that the riches of the mineral kingdom can never be discovered or brought into action. A lessee for years cannot incur the expenses of sinking shafts, connecting them by galleries, opening ventilators, constructing hydraulic machines, and building permanent furnaces. And, without these labors, the mineral riches which lay some hundred feet in the bowels of the earth, can never be discovered. All this is now proved on the mineral lands of the United States in Missouri. Fifty or sixty mines have been opened, exhausted, and abandoned. Yes, in the space of a few months, a mine is exhausted, while in England, mines are now worked which were opened two thousand years ago. The reason is obvious. The English miner, having the freehold of the soil, husbands and improves his property, and follows the vein downwards, even to the distance of two thousand feet. The American lessee can only take what he finds near the surface of the ground. He cannot pierce the rock, in pursuit of the descending veins which lead to the great beds of ore below. He can only "pick out the eyes of the mine," without touching its body; nor is it possible to tell where nature has deposited her hidden treasures, except by opening the earth to the places where they lie. Neither the eye of Science, nor the conjuror's rod, can detect a mine at any given distance below the surface of the earth. All over the world mineral wealth has been discovered either by accident, or by the persevering labor of the owner of the soil. It is needless to multiply examples to prove the assertion. Every Senator's reading will furnish him with a multitude. Two only will I mention—the discoveries of the great copper mine in Anglesea and the salt mine in Cheshire. The former, though the richest in the world, and furnishing, at this day, more copper than all the mines of Europe put together, and seated in the bosom of a country settled for several thousand years, was only discovered about fifty years ago; the latter only discovered at the beginning of the last century, though known as a saline to the Roman soldiers when Britain was a province of the Roman empire. This vast salt mine is only one hundred and twenty feet below the surface of the earth, and then commences in strata sixty feet thick, and yet was never discovered till the earth was penetrated by the owner of the soil. If situated in the United States on public lands, it would never be found at all, for the lessee for years could do nothing but boil the water which flowed from the saline, or was dipped out of a well a few feet deep. He could not have gone even one hundred and twenty feet deep into the earth. But change the tenure, create a fee simple in the soil, and what may not be found in a country like Missouri, where a thousand salines present themselves—where a thousand springs and branches, and even a river, (la mine,) turning mills, are impregnated with salt, indicating such mines and fountains of salt below, as neither England, nor any other country upon earth, can be supposed to contain. The same may be supposed of the lead districts, and may not tin and copper also be found in the mineral districts of Missouri? The theory of mineralogy authorizes the belief; for these, too, belong to the family of base metals, and are often found in company of lead.

The example of England presents itself to us. In the early ages her base metals were considered as too precious for the people, and were reserved as Crown property. Her mines were leased out; and the great tin mines of Cornwall brought the imposing sum of one hundred marks per annum, and the rest in proportion. In the reign of Philip and Mary this policy was changed. The mineral kingdom, by an act of Parliament, ceased to be a monopoly in the hands of the Crown. It was delivered up to the skill, and capital, and industry of individuals, and the result has been, that the iron, lead, copper, tin, coal, and salt, of England, have carried the wealth and power of the British empire to a height to which the mines of Peru and Mexico could never have exalted her. And let us follow her example, not the example of her dark ages, but of that enlightened period which has made, of a small island in the sea, one of the richest and most powerful empires upon the face of the globe.

plaster of Paris; flint; manganese; granular quartz; sulphur; saltpetre; several varieties of marble, including porphyry and alabaster; precious stones, cornelian and jasper; antimony; alum.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

When Mr. B. had concluded—

Messrs. DICKERSON, LOWRIE, SMITH, of Maryland, BARTON, VAN BUREN, TAYLOR, of Virginia, HOLMES, of Maine, BROWN, of Ohio, KING, of New York, and JOHNSON, of Kentucky, followed Mr. BENTON, with their respective views of the expediency or in expediency of this measure, and continued the debate until past three o'clock. In the end the bill was, at the request of a member, laid over to Monday.

MONDAY, February 17.

Mr. LOWRIE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the memorial of Lewis A. Petray and Just Viel, made a report, accompanied by a resolution that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. The report and resolution were read, and, on his motion, they, together with accompanying documents, were ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, presented the petition of John S. Stiles, executor of George Stiles, deceased, late of Baltimore, praying a fair construction of the law, entitled "An act for the relief of sundry merchants of the city of Baltimore," approved the 26th April, 1822. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH also presented the petition of Francis V. Riviere, of the city of New York, attorney of Benjamin Desobry, of the said city, merchant, praying to be allowed and paid the drawback of duties on a quantity of coffee exported to Hamburg, in January, 1822, which he is unable to obtain, in consequence of failing to execute the bond, required by law, in due time, which he was prevented from doing by sickness. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill for the relief of Edward Evat. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. LANMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to divorce John Wheelwright, and Caroline Eliza Wheelwright, his wife. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

On motion by Mr. BARTON, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Prospect K. Robbins, and also the petition of Daniel M. Boon, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary of War, made in pursuance of an act concerning arsenals and armories, passed 2d of April, 1794, containing a statement of the expenditures at the national armories, and of the arms made and repaired therein during the year 1822; and the report was read.

On motion by Mr. TALBOT, the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of James Morrison, of Kentucky; and, on his motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, Wednesday next.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to extend the time allowed for the redemption of lands sold for direct taxes, in certain cases," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory,'" together with the amendments proposed thereto, reported the same, with a further amendment; which was read.

On motion, the Message from the President of the United States, of the 14th instant, communicating information in relation to the Indian title to lands within the State of Georgia, was ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims, in the State of Louisiana; and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, presented the memorial of Elias Earle and Banister Stone, praying that further proceedings may be suspended, on a suit instituted against them, for an alleged balance due the United States. The memorial was read, and laid on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that they have passed a bill entitled "An act for the relief of Henry Lee, one of the sureties of John Ricard, late paymaster in the service of the United States;" and, also, a bill, entitled "An act to alter the times of holding the district court of the United States for the district of Vermont;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said two bills were read, and passed to the second reading.

The bill to amend an act, entitled "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the territory of Florida," approved the 18th of May, 1822, was read a third time; and, on motion, recommitment to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, gave notice that, to-morrow, he should ask leave to introduce a bill to alter the time of holding the district court of the United States for the district of Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT communicated a representation of Joseph M. Hernandez, delegate from the Territory of Florida, stating the reasons which render it expedient to pass, during the present session, "An act amending, and supplementary to, the act for ascertaining claims and titles to lands in Florida, and for the survey and disposal of the public lands in the Territory of Florida." The representation was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Northwest Coast of America.

SENATE.

Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie, to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeable to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown;" and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, tomorrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to make perpetual an act, passed the 3d day of March, 1817, entitled 'An act to continue in force an act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed 3d day of March, 1815, and for other purposes;" and, on motion it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois; and, on motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Michigan," together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on Public Lands; and, the amendment having been agreed to, the bill was reported to the House, amended accordingly; and, the same being concurred in, the amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time, as amended.

The Senate took up the bill from the House of Representatives supplementary to, and to amend, the act of 1799, to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, together with the amendments recommended by the select committee. These amendments were explained by Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, and were agreed to, and the bill then, having been gone through, was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. SOUTHARD presented the memorial of a number of the citizens of Washington City, praying certain amendments to the charter of said city; which petition was read, and referred.

RELIEF OF JOSEPH FORREST.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Joseph Forrest. [This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Joseph Forrest the sum of four thousand dollars, being the value of a vessel lost by the said Forrest, while carrying a donation of provisions from the Congress of the United States to the distressed inhabitants of Caraccas, in the year eighteen hundred and twelve, at the time they suffered by the great earthquake.]

A debate arose on the merits of this claim, which occupied the Senate an hour or two. The claim was supported zealously by Messrs. RUGGLES and LLOYD, of Maryland, and was as decidedly opposed by Messrs. SMITH, of South Carolina, and LANMAN; after which, the question being put on ordering the bill to be read a third time, it was decided in the negative, 19 to 17.

The bill was of course rejected.

NORTHWEST COAST OF AMERICA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 14th instant, in relation to the territories of the United States on the Northwest Coast of America, and the same having been amended by substituting the Committee on "Foreign Relations," was agreed to, as amended.

The remarks of Mr. BENTON were as follows:

Mr. BENTON, (mover of the resolution,) said it was due to the Senate to state the reason which had induced him to offer it. This was, to prevent the country in question from falling into the hands of another Power. He knew that the public mind was tranquil upon this point; but he believed that this tranquillity arose, not from an indifference to the loss of the Columbia river, and the great country drained by its waters, but from a belief that our title to it was undisputed, and the possession open to our citizens whenever the Government would permit them to enter upon it. The contrary of all this, Mr. B. held to be the fact, and he would undertake to show to the Senate—

First. That our claim of sovereignty is disputed by England.

Second. That England is now the party in possession.

Third. That she resists the possession of the United States.

Fourth. That the party in possession in 1828, will have the right of possession, under the law of nations, until the question of sovereignty shall be decided by war or negotiation.

In supporting these positions, Mr. B. said, that he would rely, for his proofs, upon two sources only; first, the document communicated to Congress by the President, on the 17th April, 1822; second, the London treaty of October 20th, 1818. The document would be found in vol. 8, of the State Papers, No. 112, and the treaty in vol. 6, of the Laws of the United States, page 607.

1. That the sovereignty of the Columbia river is claimed by England. Mr. B. premised, as matter of historical notoriety, that an American settlement, Astoria, existed at the mouth of the Columbia, at the commencement of the late war; that it was captured by a British sloop-of-war, in 1813, converted into a military post, and called Fort George; and that, by the first article of the Ghent treaty, a mutual restitution was stipulated, of all places taken from either party by the other, in the progress of the war.

In virtue of this stipulation, the American Government, in the year 1815, determined to "reoccupy" the post on the Columbia river, and the Secretary of State, Mr. Monroe, on the 15th of July, of that year, communicated that intention to the British Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, and "requested a letter" from him, to facilitate the restitution. Mr. Baker refused the letter, and assigned for his reason, that he had no instructions upon the subject, from the British Government. He set up no title, on the part of Great Britain, and the Government of the United States, apprehending no opposition, despatched the sloop-of-war Ontario to the mouth of the Columbia, to reoccupy the post. Two years afterwards, a Minister Plen-ipotentary, Mr. Bagot, arrives from England, calls personally on the Secretary of State, Mr. Adams, inquires into the destination of the Ontario, and being informed that one object of her voyage was "to establish a settlement on the Columbia river," he complains of this intention as injurious to the "rights and interests" of His Britannic Majesty, and, on the 27th of November, two days after his personal interview, he addressed an official note to the Secretary of State, "requesting an explanation" of the views of the American Government with respect to the settlement, denying that the restitution of Astoria could be claimed under the Ghent treaty, and declaring that "the territory in question had early been taken possession of in His Majesty's name, and had since been considered as forming part of His Majesty's dominions."

What answer was given by the American Government, to this high-toned communication, is to me unknown, said Mr. B. I draw my information from the papers communicated in the document No. 112, and no answer is there to be found. Certain it is that the Ontario returned from the Pacific ocean without getting possession of the post on the Columbia.

The next paper upon this subject is from the same side of the question, to the same effect, and of still higher authority, coming from Lord Castlereagh himself, and given in person to Mr. Rush, the American Minister in London. Mr. Rush communicates it to Mr. Adams on the 14th of February, 1818. He states that "His Lordship mentioned the affair of the establishment at the Columbia river;" expressed his "regret" at the steps taken by the United States, to repossess itself of the territory in question, "Great Britain having a claim of dominion over it;" and that Mr. Bagot had sent in "a remonstrance" upon the occasion, to which no answer had been made at the last dates. For settling the question of title between the two Powers, Lord Castlereagh proposed that a reference should be made of it to the arbitration of some friendly sovereign, and admitted that the United States was entitled to restitution of possession under the first article of the Ghent treaty.

This despatch from Mr. Rush draws out the American Secretary. On the 20th of May following, Mr. Adams writes to Mr. Rush, instructing him to decline the proposed arbitration, and to express to Lord Castlereagh the unwillingness of the United States to include this subject among the objects of "serious discussion," because of "the minuteness of the present interests" of either party involved in it.

This, said Mr. B. is the end of the published correspondence on this point. The next place in which the British claim shows itself, is in the London treaty of October, 1818.

The first article of that treaty secures to American fishermen the liberty of curing fish on the unsettled coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador.

The second determines a portion of the boundary between the United States and His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, to wit: from the Lake of the Woods to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and fixes it upon the parallel of the 49th degree of north latitude.

The third applies to the country drained by the Columbia river, and is in these words:

"It is agreed that any country which may be claimed by either party, on the Northwest coast of America, westward of the Stoney Mountains, shall, together with its harbors, bays, and creeks, and the navigation of all rivers within the same, be free and open for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of the present convention, to the vessels, citizens, and subjects, of the two Powers; it being well understood that this agreement is not to be construed to the prejudice of any claim which either of the two high contracting parties may have to any part of the said country; nor shall it be taken to affect the claims of any other Power or State to any part of the said country; the only object of the high contracting parties, in that respect, being to prevent disputes and differences amongst themselves."

Mr. B. said that this was the last, and the highest, piece of evidence which he intended to submit in support of his assertion that Great Britain now claimed the sovereignty of the Columbia river. He had traced that claim from its first appearance above the horizon of diplomatic discussion to its safe lodgment in the bosom of a treaty; and surely no claim had ever grown up with such surprising rapidity. When Louisiana was purchased from Spain, in 1803, it was not heard of; when Lewis and Clarke took possession of the country, in 1806, it was not heard of; when Astoria was founded, in 1810, it was still unheard of; at Ghent, in 1814, no one mentioned it; in 1815, the British Chargé d'Affaires at Washington City, knows nothing about it. It is only in November, 1817, that a British Minister first avows it; in May, 1818, that an American Secretary considers it too "minute" to be classed among objects of "serious discussion;" and in October of the same year that it obtains foot-hold in a solemn treaty, there to remain, the fruitful source of future negotiation, and perhaps of war.

Mr. B. proceeded to his second point: That England now has the possession of the country in question.

He apprehended that a transaction, in which Mr. Prevost acted as the agent of the United States, had misled the public mind on this subject. The facts are, that a British ship of war called at Lima, in the Fall of 1818, took up Mr. Prevost, carried him to Astoria (Fort George) on the 1st day of October, and brought him away on the 6th. While there, Mr. Prevost, under the authority of the American Government, signed a receipt for the delivery of Fort George, and accepted a remonstrance from the British against the delivery "until the final decision of the right of sovereignty to the country between the two Governments." The possession of the fort was not changed, nor intended to be changed, by any thing that Mr. Prevost did. He could not man the fort himself, and had not a single soldier or sailor to do it for him. The ceremony of lowering the British flag, and hoisting the American, was a piece of form, arranged beforehand, for the purpose of satisfying the words of the Ghent Treaty by a nominal restitution, while the post itself remained with the English in the same manner as if Mr. Prevost had never made his visit. No attempt has since been made by the American Government to realize the possession, and Fort George remains to this day in the hands of the British.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Northwest Coast of America.

SENATE.

The third point: That England resists the possession of the United States.

This has been already proved, in showing that the British Minister, Mr. Bagot, in 1817, "remonstrated" against the occupation of the country by the sloop of war Ontario, and in the notorious fact that the Ontario did not succeed in the object of her voyage. In 1818, it is shown by Mr. Prevost, that it was still the intention of the American Government to settle the country, which we all know has not been done. His words are these: "The principal object of the President, in sending me thus far, was to obtain such information of the place, its access, and its commercial importance, as might enable him to submit to the consideration of Congress, measures for the protection and extension of the establishment." The report of Mr. Prevost was most favorable on all these points, but no plan, for the purpose mentioned by him, has been submitted to Congress by the Executive; and, since that period, the present British Minister in Washington, Mr. Canning, in two several interviews with the Secretary of State, in reference to the bill depending in the House of Representatives, for the occupation of the Columbia river, "suggested that Great Britain had claims on the Northwest coast of America, with which he conceived that such occupation, on the part of the United States, would conflict; and requested to be informed what were the intentions of the Government of the United States in this respect."

This, said Mr. B., is resistance, and resistance in the most imposing form. It is direct from the Minister of England to the American Secretary of State. It is face to face; not once only, but on two distinct and separate occasions. It goes the whole length of unqualified opposition; renewing the "claim" of Great Britain, warning the Republic of a "conflict," and calling upon the Executive to declare its "intentions." What further the Minister would have said or done, if the Executive had avowed a disposition to occupy the Columbia, cannot be known, as no such avowal was made; but enough is known to prove that the Minister of England has virtually attempted to arrest the progress of a legislative act in the Congress of the United States—an attempt which, if I am not greatly mistaken in the temper of the American people, will accelerate the measure it was intended to impede.

The fourth point: That the party in possession, in the year 1828, will have the right of possession until the question of title is decided by war or negotiation.

This consequence, said Mr. B., results from the terms of the third article of the Treaty of London.

That article has been read. The reading of it will have dissipated two errors which had obtained a wide spread in the public mind—first, that the English recognised the forty-ninth degree of latitude as the boundary between the United States and Great Britain, from the Lake of the Woods to the Pacific ocean; and, second, that the United States granted to her the use of the Columbia river, and the trade of its inhabitants, for the period of ten years. The facts are, that the boundary is only fixed to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and the sovereignty of each is considered as equal to all the country beyond. Neither surrenders any part of its own claim; the treaty is not to be construed to the disadvantage of the title of either; by consequence, neither is considered as having accepted a privilege from the other; but each retains possession, by virtue of his own claim to sovereignty, and each agrees to tolerate the possession of the other for ten years. It results, of course, from this stipulation, that the party in possession, at the end of the ten years, will have the right of possession till the question of title shall be decided. It requires no Vattel to tell us this. The principle is the same, in national and in municipal law. When the title is disputed, the party in possession of the disputed property has the right to keep it till the question of title is decided by a court of justice, when the dispute is between individuals; and by arms or negotiation, if between nations. In the case before the Senate, the United States have a right of possession under the Ghent treaty, and a right of entry under the treaty of 1818; but the latter is already half run out, and the former must be considered as abandoned, if not renewed and effectually asserted.

Mr. B. made further remarks upon the third article of the London treaty. He had heard it said that an able diplomatist never signed a treaty without having first deposited in it the seed of a new contestation. If so, the negotiators of this article have shown themselves eminently able. They have not only sowed the seed of a new contest with England, but with all the Powers who may choose to contend with us for the Northwest coast of America. They have inserted a saving clause in behalf of all other "claims" of all other "States and Powers" to the same district of country. When I saw this gratuitous and extraordinary reservation, I could not avoid casting my eyes to the foot of the treaty, and searching among the signatures for the names of Nesselrode and Capo D'Istria; not seeing their names there, I nevertheless believe that I see the finger of Russia in the treaty itself; and in a reservation so vague and so foreign to the interest of the Republic, every one may see the policy of England, securing to herself the means of strengthening her own pretensions by joining to them the "claims" of all other "Powers and States."

Mr. B. found other provisions, to him unaccountable, in this treaty. The "fishing privilege" is yielded to us, without an equivalent, which, at Ghent, could not be obtained, except to balance the navigation of the Mississippi; and he found the sovereignty of the Columbia a concession not even asked for at Ghent, more than half surrendered to Great Britain and her associate pretenders, and this, too, without the shadow of an equivalent to the United States; unless, indeed, by a sub silentio agreement, the sovereignty of the Columbia was substituted for the navigation of the Mississippi, as the price of the important privilege of taking and curing fish on the desert shores of Labrador and Newfoundland.

Mr. B. would not pursue this subject any further. He flattered himself that he had made good all the points which he had taken before the Senate, and that it was now apparent that the Republic, partly through its own remissness, partly from the concessions of our Ministers in London, but chiefly from the bold pretensions of England, is in imminent danger of losing all its territory beyond the Rocky Mountains. The evils of such a loss to us, and the advantage of such an acquisition to her, are too obvious to be here insisted upon. Every one can see that the mouth of the Columbia, in the hands of England, would be immediately converted into a grand naval station, for the protection of her trade and navigation in the Pacific Ocean, and for the destruction of the commerce of all other Powers. Not an American ship will be able to show itself beyond Cape Horn, but with the permission of the English.

The direct intercourse between Asia and the valley of the Mississippi would be intercepted. The fur trade of the Rocky Mountains would fall into the hands of British subjects, and with it the entire command of all the Indians of the West and North, to be turned loose upon the frontiers of Missouri and Arkansas, and Illinois and Michigan, upon the first renewal of hostilities between the United States of America and the King of Great Britain.

TUESDAY, February 18.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to alter the time of holding the district court of the United States, for the district of Kentucky; and the bill was twice read by unanimous consent.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Morrison, of Kentucky," reported the same without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, praying that the sale of public lands within the counties of Jackson and Decatur may be deferred, and that certain settlers may be entitled to the right of pre-emption; and, also, the memorial of the said Legislature, praying further relief to the purchasers of public lands in that State, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of Elihu Hall Bay, for himself and on behalf of Theodore Gaillard and Charles Roberts, of the State of South Carolina, made a report, which was read.

The PRESIDENT communicated the credentials of MARLON DICKERSON, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, for the term of six years, commencing on the fourth day of March next, which were read, and laid on file.

On motion, by Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of a number of the inhabitants of Illinois, praying relief may be extended to those purchasers of public lands who had paid for the same prior to the passage of the act of Congress for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of Anne Dubord, wife of Joseph Antonio De Reano, of the city of New Orleans, made a report, accompanied by a resolution that the petitioner have leave to withdraw her petition.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which the subject was referred, by a resolution of the Senate, reported a bill extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office. The bill was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the same committee, to which was recommended the bill to amend an act, entitled "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida," approved the 8th of May, 1822, reported the same without amendment.

The bill for the relief of Edward Evat was read the second time.

The bill to divorce John Wheelwright and Caroline Eliza Wheelwright, his wife, was read the second time.

The bill entitled "An act to alter the times of holding the district court of the United States, for the district of Vermont," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill entitled "An act for the relief of Henry Lee, one of the sureties of John Ricaud, late paymaster in the service of the United States," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill for the relief of John Buhler was read a third time, and passed.

The amendments to the bill entitled "An act supplementary to, and to amend, an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed 2d March, 1799, and to repeal an act supplementary thereto, passed 20th April, 1818, and for other purposes," having been reported by the committee correctly engrossed, the bill was read a third time as amended, and passed.

The amendment to the bill entitled "An act to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Michigan," having been reported by the committee correctly engrossed, the bill was read a third time as amended, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAN BUREN, it was

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Lead Mines and Salt Springs.

SENATE.

Resolved, That the Senate will, to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, proceed to the choice of a President pro tempore.

[Though nothing was said by Mr. VAN BUREN on offering the above resolution, it was known that the Vice President had withdrawn from the Chair of the Senate for the remainder of the session, being about to return home.]

The Senate took up the resolution offered by Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, on Friday last; and, after some discussion, having been modified, on the motion of Mr. MILLS, to read as follows, it was agreed to, viz:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of collecting and digesting in one bill all the acts of Congress relative to the courts of the United States, and the administration of justice therein; and to report a mode of effecting that object, and also of effecting such changes, modifications, and additions, as will, in their opinion, combine most efficiency, promptitude, and economy, in the administration of justice.

Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, presented the petition of Jeremiah Downs, late a captain of mounted volunteer riflemen, praying the reimbursement of his expenses in supplying the company under his command with hay and fodder. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York;" in which bill they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bill was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate, of the 17th of January, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be laid before the Senate, at the commencement of the next session of Congress, the plan of the fortification contemplated to be erected at St. Mary's river, within the Potomac, with an estimate of the sum necessary to complete the same, and the number of cannon and mortars intended for the works; and, also, that he be requested to cause a survey to be made of the Patuxent river, to ascertain a proper site for a fortification, and to lay the same before the Senate, with a plan of the same, the number of guns and mortars which may be requisite, and an estimate of the sum that will be necessary to erect and complete the works.

The Senate took up the report of the Committee on Claims unfavorable to the petition of Lieutenant Joseph S. McPherson, of the Navy, who prays, for the reasons set forth, that Congress will pass an act authorizing the settlement of his accounts, without requiring of him certain vouchers which have been lost.

Mr. FINDLAY laid before the Senate some papers and facts on the subject of this case, not submitted to the committee. He also made some remarks favorable to the petitioner, and concluded by a motion to recommit the report, with the papers he had introduced, which motion was agreed to.

The resolution introduced by Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in regard to the election of President of the United States, being the next subject in order, was taken up; when

Mr. LOWRIE moved that the resolution be laid on the table, and his motion was agreed to without opposition.

LEAD MINES AND SALT SPRINGS.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill to authorize the President of the United States to offer at public sale the salt springs and lead mines of the United States, and the public land contiguous thereto.

Mr. DICKERSON moved to strike out the first section of the bill, and to insert a substitute, providing, in substance, that the President of the United States be authorized to appoint some fit person, skilled in mineralogy, for the space of three years, for the purpose of examining and reporting, from time to time, on the mines and minerals of the States of Missouri and Illinois, and Territory of Michigan; and allowing him a salary therefor.

Mr. DICKERSON supported this proposition, and opposed the original bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Louisiana, advocated, at some length, and Mr. MACON briefly, the expediency of selling the mine lands. Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, made some remarks against the bill, and Mr. TALBOT likewise, in its present shape.

The bill was then laid on the table; and the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, February 19.

At 12 o'clock to-day, the Secretary of the Senate called the Senate to order; and, having stated that the hour had arrived at which the Senate had resolved to proceed to the election of President pro tempore, he requested the members to prepare their ballots for that purpose.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to ballot for a President pro tem., and the result was as follows:

For JOHN GAILLARD, of South Carolina	32
For JAMES BARBOUR, of Virginia	6
Scattering	6

So Mr. GAILLARD was elected President of the Senate pro tempore; and, having taken the Chair, made his acknowledgments to the Senate, as follows:

GENTLEMEN: On taking the station with which you have honored me, I must be permitted to tender you my acknowledgments for so flattering an evidence of the continuance of your confidence and favor. Were my capacity to fill this place commensurate with your kindness, or equal to the gratitude I feel, I might then reasonably expect to merit your approbation, which would be the highest reward I could obtain, and the most gratifying compensation for the cares and solici-

SENATE.

Claim of James Morrison.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

tude which must ever be attendant on the situation to which I am called. Forbidden, however, by a thorough conviction of my deficiencies in many essential respects, to hope for so favorable a result, I must again throw myself for encouragement and support on your known liberality, and on the experience I have had of your former indulgence, and they will, I trust, sustain me in the attempt I shall make to discharge the duties devolving on me with fidelity and impartiality; being fully persuaded that I shall thereby furnish the most satisfactory testimony that can be offered of my high respect for this body, as well as of my esteem and personal regard for the individuals composing it.

On motion of Mr. MILLS, the Secretary was directed to wait on the President of the United States, and acquaint him with the election of Mr. GAILLARD as President of the Senate, in the absence of the VICE PRESIDENT of the United States, and also to inform the House of Representatives thereof.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, to provide for the settlement of the accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York, reported the same, without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Samuel F. Hooker, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year 1823;" a bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy of the United States, for the year 1823;" and, also, a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Polly L. Campbell, widow of Colonel John B. Campbell, deceased, late of the eleventh regiment of the United States infantry;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. STOKES, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill for clearing, repairing, and improving certain roads, for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of the United States' mail; and the bill was twice read.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, reported a bill to authorize the Recorder of Land Titles in the State of Missouri, to examine into the number and state of the unconfirmed French and Spanish land claims, in the State of Missouri, and to report the same to the Congress, at their next session; and the bill was twice read, by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of an appropriation sufficient to complete the barracks, and other buildings, commenced at Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana, for the accommodation of the troops of the United States at that place.

CLAIM OF JAMES MORRISON.

The Senate then took up the report of the Committee of Claims adverse to the claim of Colonel James Morrison, of Kentucky, a deputy Quartermaster General during the late war with Great Britain, who petitions for an allowance of ten thousand dollars, in the settlement of his accounts, which sum was lent by his assistant or agent, Thomas H. Pindall, to Colonel Buford, deputy Commissary, for the public service, but not returned, and with which sum Colonel Morrison is charged, and now asks to be credited.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, moved to amend the resolution reported by the committee so as to reverse it and make it favorable to the petitioner, and followed his motion with a speech of some length in support of the claim.

An earnest debate ensued on this question, which occupied the Senate until nearly four o'clock, in which the various facts, and numerous papers, adduced in support of the claim, were minutely examined and elaborately commented on, pro and con. Messrs. JOHNSON of Kentucky, BROWN of Louisiana, VAN BUREN, TALBOT, SMITH of Maryland, BENTON, and HOLMES of Maine, supported the allowance of the claim; and Messrs. RUGGLES, VAN DYKE, CHANDLER, and LANMAN, opposed it. Mr. BARTON also spoke against its allowance, not on its merits, but because he thought it in the first instance a more proper question for a court of justice between Messrs. Morrison and Buford.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, it was decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, D'Wolf, Edwards, Elliot, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Parrott, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Stokes, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, Van Buren, Ware, and Williams of Tennessee—24.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barton, Boardman, Chandler, Dickerson, Eaton, Gaillard, King of Alabama, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Morrill, Palmer, Ruggles, Smith of South Carolina, Taylor of Virginia, and Van Dyke—19.

The Committee of Claims was then, on the motion of Mr. TALBOT, instructed to bring in a bill for the relief of the petitioner; and the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, February 20.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate:

The Convention of Navigation and Commerce between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of France and Navarre, concluded and signed at Washington, on the 24th of June, 1822, with the first separate article thereto annexed, having been ratified by the two parties, and the ratifications of the same having been duly exchanged, copies of it, and of the separate article referred to, are now communicated to the two Houses of Congress, to the end that the necessary measures for carrying it into execution

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

on the part of the United States, may be adopted by the Legislature.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18, 1823.

The Message and accompanying papers were read.

The PRESIDENT communicated a document which was intended to have accompanied the Message of the President of the United States, of the 3d of January, 1823, transmitting a detailed statement of the expenses of building each vessel of war; and, on motion, it was ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. RUGGLES,

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation to enable the President of the United States to take such measures as may be necessary for purchasing the right, title, and interest, which certain Indians have in and to three several tracts of land, of four thousand acres each, lying in the county of Tuscaroras, in the State of Ohio, which lands were granted by Congress, in the year 1796, to the "Society of United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen," in trust, for the sole use and benefit of the said Indians; said purchase to be made with the knowledge and consent of the said Society.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, in pursuance of instructions of the Senate, reported a bill for the relief of James Morrison; and the bill was twice read by unanimous consent.

On motion by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of John Mitchell, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, presented the petition of the board created by the Legislature of South Carolina, for the establishment of a municipal guard, for the protection of Charleston and its vicinity, praying the assent of Congress to an act of that State. The petition was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. EATON submitted the following motions for consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate will, on Friday, the 28th day of February, instant, proceed, by ballot, to elect the several officers of the Senate; which election shall take place every second year thereafter; and a majority of the votes present shall be necessary to a choice.

Resolved, That, after the 28th day of February, no clerk in the Secretary of the Senate's office, shall be competent to act, or shall be entitled to receive any compensation for his services, until he shall be reported to the Senate, and his appointment be assented to; and this shall be done every second year, immediately after the election of the officers of the Senate shall take place.

The bills last brought up from the House of Representatives for concurrence were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1823, was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Navy of the United States, for the year 1823," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill entitled "An act for the relief of Polly L. Campbell, widow of Colonel John B. Campbell, deceased, late of the eleventh regiment of United States infantry," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BARBOUR gave notice that, to-morrow, he should ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Nimrod Farrow, Richard Harris, and their securities.

The bill extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office, was read the second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, on the petition of Anne Dubord, wife of Joseph Antonio De Reano; and, on motion, by Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, it was laid on the table.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a donation of lands lying upon the waters of Pearl river, to be appropriated, under the direction of the General Assembly of the State of Mississippi, to aid in the opening and improving the navigation of said river, from the seat of government of the State to the Gulf of Mexico, made a report, accompanied by a resolution that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

The engrossed bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land, in the Territory of Florida,'" approved the eighth of May, 1822, was read a third time; and, on motion, by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Public Lands, on the petition of Elihu Hall Bay, and others; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, on the 18th instant, in relation to contemplated fortifications at St. Mary's and Patuxent rivers, and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 19th instant, relative to the barracks and other buildings, commenced at Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana; and the same having been modified, by substituting the "Committee on Finance," was agreed to.

On motion, by Mr. LOWRIE, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill supplementary to the acts to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States, in the Revolutionary war; and, on his motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to and made the order of the day for to-morrow.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives for

SENATE.

Accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie, to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeable to the provisions of the Indian Treaty of Brownstown.

On this bill a long debate arose, in which its principle and details, its constitutionality and expediency, were thoroughly discussed; in the course of which the bill was considerably modified.

Messrs. MILLS, of Virginia, and KING, of New York, were the principal opponents of the bill, and Messrs. BROWN, of Ohio, LANMAN, BENTON, SMITH, of Maryland, and LOWRIE, its supporters. The debate principally turned upon the obligation there was on the part of the United States, to carry into effect the Treaty of Brownstown, and whether, even if an obligation was imposed, the State of Ohio had any interest in it which required her to claim it to be executed.

Finally, the bill was ordered to a third reading, as amended—ayes 29.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill entitled "An act to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois;" and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill supplementary to the "Act to designate the boundaries of districts, and establish land offices for the disposal of the public lands not heretofore offered for sale in the States of Ohio and Indiana;" and the bill was read.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, observed that, as the Senate did not usually sit on Saturday, he hoped they would indulge him so far as to meet on Saturday next for the purpose of discussing his resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in regard to the election of President of the United States, and with that view he moved that the resolution be made the order for that day; which motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS OF DANIEL D. TOMPKINS.

The Senate then, on the motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, proceeded to the consideration of the bill to provide for the settlement of the accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York.

[This bill authorizes, first, that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury adjust and settle the accounts and claims of Daniel D. Tompkins, on principles of equity and justice, subject to the revision and final decision of the President of the United States. Secondly, it enacts that the provision of the appropriation law of last session, which prohibits the payment of salary to any individual while he shall appear to be indebted to the United States, shall be repealed so far as it applies to Mr. Tompkins.]

Mr. EATON was opposed to the second provision (above stated) of the bill; because, however highly he might estimate the services and patriotism of the Vice President during the late war, he could not reconcile it to himself to extend to any individual a privilege which was denied to all others similarly situated. It would have the appearance of favoritism, and might be so charged, particularly as it related to a person who held a high and respectable office.

Mr. BROWN, of Louisiana, replied to Mr. EATON in an animated manner. He did not think any such imputation could be made. A jury had passed on this claim, and had rendered a verdict in favor of the Vice President. Committees, too, in both Houses of Congress, had examined the case, and had reported in favor of authorizing what the bill proposed. There was a wide difference, therefore, between this and other cases of unsettled accounts with the Government.

Mr. MORRIL could not agree in the propriety of Mr. EATON's objections. He adverted to the distinguished services of the Vice President during the late war, and argued in support of the justice of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, supported the bill with much earnestness; and Mr. MACON opposed it, generally, on the ground taken by Mr. EATON.

The question was then taken on ordering the bill to a third reading, and was carried, with two or three dissenting voices.

At the request of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, the bill was thereupon read the third time, by unanimous consent, was passed, and returned to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SOUTHARD gave notice that, to-morrow, he should ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for a library for the Supreme Court of the United States.

FRIDAY, February 21.

Mr. BARBOUR asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Nimrod Farrow, Richard Harris, and their securities. The bill was twice read by unanimous consent, and the bill, together with sundry documents, submitted by Mr. BARBOUR, relating to the claim of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris, for the building of the fortifications at Dauphin Island, were referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion, by Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, of the 18th instant, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate, of the 17th of January, in relation to contemplated fortifications at St. Mary's and Patuxent rivers, were ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LOWRIE submitted the following resolutions for consideration:

Resolved, That Robert Tweedy, Tobias Simpson, and George Hicks, assistants to the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, be paid, out of the contingent fund, two dollars a day for each day they have attended the Senate during the present session of Congress, and that Henry Tims, jun., be allowed — dollars for his attendance during the present session.

Resolved, That there be paid, out of the contingent fund, to Robert Tweedy, Tobias Simpson, and George Hicks, the sum of — dollars for extra services.

The resolutions were read, and passed to the second reading.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Revolutionary Pensions.

SENATE.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on the Militia, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act vesting in the State of Virginia the right of the United States to all fines assessed for non-performance of militia duty, during the late war with Great Britain, within said State," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BENTON laid on the table sundry maps and plans of the lead mine districts.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to alter the times of holding the district court of the United States for the district of Vermont," reported the same without amendment.

The amendments to the bill entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeable to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown," having been reported by the Committee correctly engrossed, the bill was read a third time, as amended, and passed.

The bill supplementary to the act, entitled "An act to designate the boundaries of districts, and establish land offices for the disposal of the public lands, not heretofore offered for sale, in the States of Ohio and Indiana," was read the second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a donation of lands lying upon the waters of Pearl river, to be appropriated, under the direction of the General Assembly of the State of Mississippi, to aid in the opening and improving the navigation of said river, from the seat of government of the State, to the Gulf of Mexico; and on motion by Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Finance, on the memorial of Lewis A. Petray and Just Viel; and on motion by Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in the case of Ann Dubord, wife of Joseph Antonio De Reano, of the city of New Orleans; when, on the motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, the report was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report a bill for the relief of the petitioner.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Captain Richard Hightower," in which bill they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill last mentioned was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, confidentially or otherwise, as he shall think fit, any information in his possession, which he may not deem improper to be communicated, relative to the present state and condition of the Mexican empire.

On motion by Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles, to land within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes; and, on his motion, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to report a bill to amend the act "To provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States, in the Revolutionary war," and the act in addition thereto, so as to reduce the pensions therein provided thirty per cent., and to include all persons who shall have served their country the time required by said acts, without requiring the condition of poverty or necessity; and that the pensions so reduced shall continue to be paid until the number of pensioners shall be reduced to eighteen thousand; after which, there shall be a further reduction to one-half of the original pension.

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, then proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, "supplementary to the acts 'to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States in the Revolutionary war.'"

[This bill provides for the restoration to the pension list, of the name "of any person who may have been, or hereafter shall be, stricken therefrom, in pursuance of the act of Congress, passed the 1st day of May, 1820, if such person, so stricken from the list of pensioners, has heretofore furnished, or hereafter shall furnish, evidence, in pursuance of the provisions of said act, to satisfy the Secretary of War that he is in such indigent circumstances as to be unable to support himself without the assistance of his country."]

Messrs. MILLS, MORRIL, and LOWRIE, spoke in favor of, and Mr. NOBLE against, the bill.

Mr. LOWRIE proposed, as an amendment to the bill, an additional section, providing for a reduction of 20 per cent. on the amounts hereafter to be paid to all the Revolutionary pensioners.

In support of this motion—

Mr. LOWRIE observed that his remarks on this subject would take up very little time, for he was well aware that the friends of a measure sometimes destroy it by too much speaking. The expense of the pension list for four years, is as follows:

1819	-	-	-	-	$1,811,328 96
1820	-	-	-	-	1,373,849 41
1821	-	-	-	-	1,200,000 00
1822	-	-	-	-	1,833,936 30

---

6,219,114 67

SENATE.

Proceedings.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

One quarter of which is $1,554,778 66 per annum.

There are 2,328 men who, under the provisions of this act, may be placed upon the list. This number, and no more, will be affected by its provisions. This is the utmost extent to which the bill goes, and by no possible construction can more be embraced. The expense of that number, supposing, what is not probable, that all will be placed on the list, according to the estimate of the Chairman of the Committee, (Mr. NOBLE,) is $223,000. The estimate I have made, amounts to $350,000. This is $137,000 beyond that of the chairman; and if it be erroneous, it is too large; and it is the utmost limit of the expense. Now, for the other side. By the present law, there are near 6,000 who may get on the list. Now, suppose but one-half of that number be placed on the list. This may, and will take place, whether you pass this bill or not. If placed on the list, they will be entitled to back pensions from the time they were suspended by the act of 1820, which will be about three years. The amount, then, for back pension alone, for 3,000 men, will be $900,000. You have now the advantage and disadvantage of this bill, as it respects the Treasury. The calculation, to my mind, is perfectly satisfactory. Any gentleman can satisfy himself by making a few figures; and, from this view of the principles of the bill, it is perfectly evident that the Treasury will not lose by it.

But, sir, said Mr. L., I wish to look a little further into the subject. Our expense for this list is now between one million and a half and two millions of dollars. Whether this bill is passed or not, the list will soon swell to two millions of dollars. This is a large sum; and the question must be met, where will you get the money? Will you lay a tax to raise it? That, sir, would make us all pause, in these times. Will you repeal the law? To that I will never consent. I then, sir, to relieve the pressure on the Treasury, propose an amendment, to reduce the pensions twenty per cent. This would give each private $76 80. That sum, sir, is worth as much as ninety-six dollars was at the time of passing the original act. On the subject of reduction, I propose no measure to the pensioners which I would not vote for, as it respects myself. For I neither will tax the people or borrow money, while any prudent reduction can be made. The present amendment will relieve the Treasury from about $400,000. That sum I would give to those who are not on the list. The money we now pay, I would still pay; but I would distribute it to more individuals. Numbers are not on the list, who have as good a right to be there as those who are now there. In doing this, we do more justice than by keeping the door closed against those who are now without. Still, sir, should the amendment be rejected, I will vote for the bill; and I do so under the full conviction that, even without the amendment, it ought to pass. I offer this amendment for the purpose of saving the bill, as it is well understood that it will be rejected without it.

The amendment was agreed to—18 to 16.

Messrs. SEYMOUR and LANMAN spoke in favor of the bill, and Messrs. MACON and SMITH, of South Carolina, opposed it.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, said he considered the amendment adopted by the committee, on motion of the honorable member from Pennsylvania (Mr. LOWRIE) as giving a death blow to the bill. As much as he might feel in favor of any other parts of the bill, he could not vote for it, if that amendment were adopted, which he considered as a breach of faith. The Government having entered into a contract to pay to these pensioners a certain stipulated sum during life, any reduction of that sum would amount to a violation of the faith of the Government. For this reason, he should vote against the bill as amended.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, with the amendment.

The question on adopting the amendment was taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the affirmative, 23 to 22. The vote was as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Chandler, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lowrie, Macon, Noble, Palmer, Smith of South Carolina, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Dyke, and Williams of Tennessee—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Boardman, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Johnson of Kentucky, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lloyd of Maryland, Mills, Morril, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Stokes, Talbot, Van Buren, Ware, and Williams of Mississippi—22.

The question on ordering the bill to be read a third time, was taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the negative, 21 to 24. The vote was as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boardman, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, Mills, Morril, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Stokes, and Van Buren—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lloyd of Maryland, Macon, Noble, Smith of South Carolina, Talbot, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Dyke, Ware, Williams of Missouri, and Williams of Tennessee—24.

So the bill was rejected.

SATURDAY, February 22.

Mr. PARROTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Robert F. Stockton, late commander of the United States schooner Alligator, made a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Robert F. Stockton; the bill was twice read by unanimous consent, and on motion by Mr. PARROTT, the report was ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN, of Louisiana, presented the petition of Charles Wilkins, praying the payment of the balance ascertained by due course of law to be due to him, on the settlement of his accounts as contractor. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

Mr. BENTON gave notice that, on Monday next, he should ask leave to introduce a bill to enable the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to audit and settle the accounts of the surveyor of public lands in the States of Illinois and Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas, for extra clerk hire in his office.

Mr. LOWRIE submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That Gales & Seaton be paid, out of the contingent fund, two hundred and fifty dollars, for eight thousand copies of the Message of the President of the United States, for the years 1821 and 1822.

The resolution was read, and passed to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Captain Richard Hightower," was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of the Legislature of Alabama, praying that the military works for the defence of the bay and harbor of Mobile may be completed, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 20th instant, for the election of the several officers of the Senate; and, on motion, by Mr. EATON, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion for requesting of the President of the United States information relative to the present state and condition of the Mexican empire; and, on motion, by Mr. KING, of Alabama, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 21st instant, for instructing the Committee on Pensions to report a bill to amend the act to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States in the Revolutionary war," and the act in addition thereto; and, on motion, by Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, it was laid on the table.

The resolution to compensate Robert Tweedy, and others, assistants to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and Doorkeeper of the Senate, were read the second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a donation of lands, lying upon the waters of Pearl river, to be appropriated under the direction of the General Assembly of the State of Mississippi, to aid in opening and improving the navigation of said river, from the seat of government of the State, to the Gulf of Mexico; and, on motion, by Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, it was laid on the table.

The Senate then, according to the order of the day, resumed the consideration of the resolution offered by Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in regard to the election of President of the United States, together with the several amendments (or substitutes) offered to the resolution, by Mr. DICKERSON and Mr. HOLMES of Maine.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, rose and spoke some time, in reply to the remarks submitted by Mr. DICKERSON on a former day, and in support of his own proposition, and against that of Mr. DICKERSON.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, replied to Mr. TAYLOR, in a speech of about half an hour—advocating Mr. DICKERSON's proposition in preference to Mr. TAYLOR's.

On motion of Mr. EATON, the subject was then laid on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill, entitled "An act appropriating moneys for the purpose of repairing the national road from Cumberland to Wheeling," with amendments, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate. They have passed a bill, entitled "An act extending the time for issuing and locating military land warrants to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary war;" a bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the military service of the United States, for the year 1823;" a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles Carr, of Kentucky, late paymaster to Colonel William Dudley's regiment of Kentucky militia;" a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John B. Hogan;" and, also, a resolution requiring from the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives an annual statement of the expenditures from the contingent fund of the two Houses; in which bills and resolution they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said four bills and resolution were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act extending the time for issuing and locating military land warrants to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary war," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the military service of the United States, for the year 1823," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles Carr, of Kentucky, late paymaster to Colonel William Dudley's regiment of Kentucky militia," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John B. Hogan," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution requiring from the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives an annual statement of the expenditures from the contingent fund of the two Houses, was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the committee appointed to audit and control the contingent expenses of the Senate.

SENATE.

Revolutionary Pensions.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

The Senate took up the amendment of the House of Representatives to the Cumberland Road bill, and agreed, without objection, to substitute the word "public" for the word "national," as applied to the road.

On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, the Senate took up the joint resolution directing the printing of a number of copies of the Journal of the Revolutionary Congress; and, after some remarks from Mr. LOWRIE and Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, to show the great value and importance of the work, its scarcity, the impossibility of procuring a copy in the United States, &c., the resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

Mr. KELLY rose, and, adverting to the decision of the Senate yesterday, by which the bill from the House of Representatives supplementary to the Revolutionary Pension Acts, was rejected, stated that the subject was one which he had not given much attention to when he was called to vote on it; that subsequent reflection had induced him to mistrust the correctness of the vote he then gave, and he should be glad to have the question more deliberately and maturely decided. He, therefore, (having yesterday voted with the majority,) moved to reconsider the decision of yesterday on the bill.

On this question Mr. NOBLE asked for the yeas and nays.

The question was accordingly taken, and the motion was agreed to—yeas 27, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Boardman, Brown of Ohio, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Mills, Morrill, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Stokes, Talbot, Thomas, Van Buren, and Williams of Mississippi.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Brown of La., Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Louisiana, Macon, Noble, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Ware, and Williams of Tenn.

So it was agreed that the Senate reconsider the vote; and, on motion, by Mr. KELLY, the further consideration of the bill, as amended, was postponed to and made the order of the day for Monday next.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES OF PEACE.

At the request of Mr. BARBOUR, the Senate took up the bill from the other House to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in the District of Columbia, to debts of fifty dollars.

On this bill a good deal of debate took place, as well on its details, to which amendments were offered, as on its constitutionality and expediency. Messrs. BARBOUR and SOUTHARD were the principal supporters of the bill; Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, opposed it altogether; and Messrs. EATON, MILLS, BARTON, and JOHNSON, of Kentucky, entered principally into the discussion of questions of detail.

Amongst the amendments agreed to, was one offered by Mr. SOUTHARD, exempting from execution the necessary beds, bedding, wearing apparel, and one cow, of the debtor; and this was extended, on the motion of Mr. MILLS, to exempt, also, the tools and implements of trade of the debtor.

Amongst the amendments offered to the bill was the following, by Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, which he earnestly supported:

"And in no case, arising under this act, shall any person whatever be subject to arrest upon mesne process, or to any execution against the body, after rendering the judgment."

Before the question was taken on this amendment, a motion was made to adjourn; and the Senate adjourned.

MONDAY, February 24.

The PRESIDENT communicated the credentials of JOHN TAYLOR, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Virginia, for the term of six years, commencing on the fourth day of March next; and also, the credentials of NEHEMIAH R. KNIGHT, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, for the same term of six years; which were severally read, and laid on file.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Captain Richard Hightower," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, presented the resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, in relation to a mail route, proposed from Washington to New Orleans; which was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act extending the time for issuing and locating military land warrants to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary war," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BARTON submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to procure, and lay before the Senate, at the next session of Congress, the originals or copies of all the contracts for surveying the public lands, made by the Surveyor General of Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, since the first day of January, 1819.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was recommitted the report of said committee on the petition of Joseph S. McPherson, with additional testimony, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. BENTON asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to enable the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to audit and settle the accounts of the Surveyor of Public Lands in the States of Illinois and Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas, for extra clerk hire in his office; and the bill was twice read by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Jurisdiction of Justices of Peace.

SENATE.

Mr. MACON, from the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution requiring from the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, an annual statement of the expenditures from the contingent fund of the two Houses, reported the same without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the petition of George Gatty, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the memorial of Lewis A. Petray and Just Viel; and, on motion, by Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, it was laid on the table.

On motion, by Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, instructing their Senators and requesting their Representatives in Congress, in relation to the lands reserved for schools in that State, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The resolution to pay Gales & Seaton for certain copies of the Messages of the President of the United States, was read the second time.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motions of the 20th instant, for the election of the several officers of the Senate; and, the first motion having been amended, on motion, by Mr. TALBOT, they were laid on the table.

The resolution directing the printing of the Journal of Congress, from the fifth day of September, 1774, to the third day of November, 1786, was read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to authorize the building a lighthouse at Cape Romain, in South Carolina, and placing floating lights in Delaware Bay; whereupon, Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, submitted, as an amendment, a new draft of a bill; which was read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate, and the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, to-morrow.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the engrossed bill to amend an act, entitled "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida," approved the 8th of May, 1822; and the bill was read a third time, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House concur with the Senate in the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 15th, 17th, and 18th, and disagree to the 6th, 7th, 9th, 14th, and 16th of their amendments to the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to, and to amend, an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed 2d March, 1799, and for other purposes." They have passed a bill entitled "An act for the discharge of John Burgin from imprisonment;"

and also a bill, entitled "An act respecting stamps;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The two last mentioned bills were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1823," reported the same with an amendment, which was read.

The bill entitled "An act for the discharge of John Burgin from imprisonment," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill entitled "An act respecting stamps," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the same Committee.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES OF PEACE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, within the District of Columbia, to fifty dollars, &c.—the question being on the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, to exempt the debtor from imprisonment, for any sum not above twenty dollars, exclusive of costs.

Much debate followed on this amendment; in the course of which, various modifications and substitutes were offered for it; and it was finally agreed to, substantially, as stated above.

An amendment was also adopted, on motion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, exempting from imprisonment, under any process, issued by virtue of this act, the persons of all females whatsoever, and all males over 70 years of age. In support of this amendment Mr. H. adduced the example of the Napoleon Code.

Various other amendments were offered, some of which were agreed to and others lost. Amongst those which were unsuccessful, was one offered by Mr. SOUTHARD, which proposed to strike out all of the bill allowing a jury trial before a justice of the peace, and substituting sections, providing that where the parties to a debt above $20, did not consent to waive a jury trial, then the case should be referred to the court of the county; this amendment was lost by two votes.

In the discussion of the amendment, above stated, and referred to, Messrs. BARNOUR, SOUTHARD, MILLS, EATON, LLOYD, of Maryland, TALBOT, JOHNSON, of Kentucky, MACON, MORRIL, and LANMAN, engaged most actively.

In the end, the bill was ordered to be read a third time, as amended.

CASE OF DIVORCE.

The Senate then took up the bill to divorce John Wheelwright, of Alexandria, and Caroline Eliza Wheelwright his wife.

Mr. W. petitions for a divorce, on the ground of the insanity of his wife, at the time of his marriage, (though then to him unknown); of the increase of the malady until it became entirely settled and confirmed; of its having now continued for several years, and the belief, (in which he has the opinion of the physicians in whose care she has been long placed,) that the insanity is incurable.

A long and feeling debate took place on this bill—chiefly on these points: Whether the insanity actually existed at the time of marriage, so as to render the contract void; whether an affliction of this character ought to dissolve the marriage contract; whether, if it was entitled to relief, the tribunal appointed for the purpose of granting such relief in the State of Massachusetts, (where the marriage was contracted) was not the proper place for the petitioner to seek it; whether it was right for Congress to grant divorces at all, (it has never yet granted one,) &c. It was agreed, on all hands, the facts being generally admitted, that it was a case of great hardship. Messrs. BARBOUR and SOUTHARD advocated the bill with much earnestness. It was opposed by Messrs. KING, of New York, BENTON, MILLS, HOLMES, of Maine, and CHANDLER. Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, without taking sides on the bill, spoke in corroboration of the facts set forth by the petitioner, and as to the great respectability of the connexions of the lady residing in Boston.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, it was decided in the negative by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, Knight, Lanman, Noble, Parrott, Southard, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Williams of Tennessee—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Boardman, Brown of Ohio, Chandler, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Morrill, Palmer, Seymour, Smith of South Carolina, Stokes, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams of Mississippi—26.

So the bill was rejected.

The bill (reported by the Committee of Claims, according to instructions) for the relief of Colonel James Morrison, was, at the motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, taken up; and, having been considered in Committee of the Whole, was ordered to a third reading.

TUESDAY, February 25.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate, a communication from R. R. Henry, relative to malpractices in office of Archibald Clark, collector of the port of St. Mary's, in Georgia; which was read, and referred to the President of the United States.

On motion, by Mr. BARBOUR, the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the resolution of the Senate, in relation to the territories of the United States, on the Northwest Coast of America, was discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Nimrod Farrow, Richard Harris, and their securities, reported the same, with amendments; which were read.

On motion, by Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the memorial of the President and Directors of the Bank of the United States; the memorial of Thomas Napier, and others, merchants, of Charleston; and, also, the resolution of the Legislature of Alabama, instructing their Senators and requesting their Representatives to endeavor to procure the passage of a law imposing a tonnage duty on all vessels coming into the ports of Mobile and Blakely, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

On motion, by Mr. DICKERSON, the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to which was referred the petition of Watson Atkinson; the memorial of the Pennsylvania Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Manufactures; the memorial of Henry Huber, and others, manufacturers of bridle bits, &c.; and, also, the memorial of Daniel Dunham, praying that certain privileges may be conferred on the steamship Robert Fulton, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to which was referred the petition of sundry merchants, and others, of the collection district of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, praying that a marine hospital may be established in that district, made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

The Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Charles Wilkins, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

On motion by Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, the Committee on Roads and Canals, to which was referred the petition of the president and directors of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company; the resolution of the Senate in relation to the stock of the Company making a Canal from the Delaware river to the Rariton; the resolution of the Senate in relation to stock in any company which has been incorporated within the United States for the improvement of internal commerce and navigation; and, also, the report of the commissioners appointed by the States of Maryland and Virginia, to examine the affairs of the Potomac Company, and to survey the Potomac river, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill to enable the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to audit and settle the accounts of the Surveyor of Public Lands, in the States of Illinois and Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas, for extra clerk hire in his office, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the military service of the United States, for the year 1823," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. VAN BUREN presented the petition of Daniel Brown, praying the passage of a law authorizing the equitable settlement of his accounts. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Louisiana Land Titles.

SENATE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Claims, to which was recommitted the report of said committee on the petition of Joseph S. McPherson, with additional testimony; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 24th instant, for requesting information in relation to the contracts for surveying the public lands of Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, since the first day of January, 1819; and agreed thereto.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel F. Hooker," with an amendment, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate. They have passed a bill, entitled "An act making further appropriations for the military service of the United States for the year 1823;" a bill, entitled "An act to abolish the office of measurer;" a bill, entitled "An act altering the time of holding the Circuit Court in the District of Maine and New Hampshire;" and, also, a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The four bills last mentioned were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill entitled "An act making further appropriations for the military service of the United States for the year 1823," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill entitled "An act to abolish the office of measurer" was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill entitled "An act altering the time of holding the circuit court of the district of Maine and New Hampshire" was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill entitled "An act for the relief of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris" was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John B. Hogan," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. VAN DYKE presented a remonstrance, signed by a number of the inhabitants of Alexandria, against the bill to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the recovery of debts in the District of Columbia; which was read, and laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendment to the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to and to amend an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed the 2d March, 1799, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House of Representatives. Whereupon, the Senate receded from the said amendments.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, and read:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit to Congress the general returns of the militia of the several States and Territories, for the year 1823, with an account of the arms, accoutrements, ammunition, ordnance, &c., belonging to each, as far as the returns have been received, in compliance with the provisions of the act of 1803.

JAMES MONROE.

FEBRUARY 25, 1823.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel F. Hooker," and concurred therein.

The amendments to the bill, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the recovery of debts in the District of Columbia," having been reported by the Committee correctly engrossed, the bill was read the third time as amended, and passed.

The bill for the relief of James Morrison was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, laid before the Senate certain documents from the War Department, in relation to Revolutionary pensioners; which were read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate took up the bill authorizing the President of the United States to employ an engineer to examine and select the most suitable site for a National Armory on the Western waters, and appropriating $25,000 for the purchase of such site, &c.

No objection being made to this bill, the question was taken on ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading, and was carried, with only two or three dissenting voices.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill to authorize the building of certain light-houses, and the substitute reported thereto by Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures.

The substitute embraced a considerable number of light-houses, in addition to those proposed by the original bill, and in discussing the questions they severally presented, near an hour was occupied; in the end, the details of the bill were got through, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

LOUISIANA LAND TITLES.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to land, within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes; together with the amendments reported thereto by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, explained the objects of the bill, and urged the importance of act-

SENATE.

Proceedings.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

ing on the subject at the present session. He thought it was not only the duty but the interest of the Government to provide for the adjustment of the claims embraced by the bill. If they are not valid, they belong to the United States, and should be brought into market, which could not be done until they are decided on. But he complained of the injury done to Louisiana, by keeping large claims of land waste, within the limits of the State. Emigration had then been checked, and the prosperity of the country retarded. He said, when the subject was under consideration some days since, he had proposed to exclude from the operation of the bill three large claims known by the names of Bastrop's, Maison Rouge's, and Houmas's, not because he had changed his opinion since he introduced the bill, but because he understood it to be the opinion of the Committee on Public Lands to whom the bill was referred, that it was expedient to provide for their decision in a separate bill. But as no such bill had been since introduced for the purpose, he was now opposed to the amendment under consideration, reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which proposed to exclude these claims from the operation of the bill. He considered it of the first importance in every point of view, that these claims should be also adjusted without further delay.

Upon this amendment a discussion arose, which occupied more than three hours. It was ultimately adopted—ayes 27, noes 10.

It appeared to be the opinion of the several members, that the three claims alluded to, should not be referred to the Judiciary, but be decided on by Congress itself; though the Senate seems to have acted on the ground that it was expedient to provide for their adjustment by a separate bill.

The gentlemen who spoke in favor of including the three large claims, named above in the bill, were Messrs. JOHNSON of Louisiana, VAN DYKE, BROWN of Louisiana, SMITH of Maryland, and MILLS; and those who opposed it were Messrs. TAYLOR of Virginia, VAN BUREN, EATON, LANMAN, BARBOUR, and CHANDLER.

After considerable discussion on other details of the bill, and the adoption of several amendments; and after rejecting a motion to postpone the bill indefinitely, the question was put on engrossing the bill for a third reading, and was decided in the affirmative by yeas and nays—yeas 28, nays 6, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Stokes, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, and Williams of Mississippi.

NAYS—Messrs. Boardman, Chandler, Dickerson, Lanman, Morrill, and Smith of South Carolina.

WEDNESDAY, February 26.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from E. Causici, in relation to a model for a clock; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act respecting stamps;" the bill, entitled "An act altering the time of holding the Circuit Court in the districts of Maine and New Hampshire;" and also the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Abraham Snyder;" reported the same, respectively, without amendment.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures, to which was referred the petition of sundry merchants, and others, of the collection district of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, praying that a Marine Hospital may be established in that district; and on motion, by Mr. BARBOUR, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to authorize the building a lighthouse at Cape Romain, in South Carolina, and placing floating lights in Delaware Bay, together with the amendment proposed thereto; and, the same having been agreed to, the bill was reported to the House, amended accordingly; and, the amendment being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

The Senate took up such of their amendments to the bill extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia as had been disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

After some discussion, the Senate insisted on so much of their amendment as exempts all women, and all men over seventy years, from imprisonment under this act, and receded from so much of the said amendment as exempts other persons from imprisonment for sums not exceeding twenty dollars.

The bill to enable the holders of French, British, and Spanish titles to land within the State of Louisiana, which have not been recognised as valid by the Government of the United States, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and for other purposes, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill to establish a national armory on the Western waters was read a third time; and, the bill having been amended by unanimous consent, it was passed.

Mr. PARROTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Navy of the United States, for the year 1823," reported the same, with amendments; which were read; and, on his motion, the bill, together with the amendments, were taken up and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and the further consideration thereof was postponed to and made the order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to lay before the Senate, during the present session, the number of officers and soldiers disabled in the service of the United States, in the late war, who have been placed on the pension list since the last session of Congress, together with their names, the State to which each one belongs, the amount of each pension, at what office paid, at what time each application was accepted at the Department, or if any are carried back beyond the time of accepting their application, and how far, and whether they are of total or partial disability, and how the disability was ascertained.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Revolutionary Pensions.

SENATE.

Agreeably to the notice which he gave yesterday, Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, moved that the Senate now proceed to the election of a Printer, for the Senate, for the next Congress.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to ballot, and the following was the result:

For Gales & Seaton - - - - 40 votes.

For other persons - - - - 3 votes.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, reported a bill for the relief of Anne Dubord; which was twice read.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House disagree to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in the recovery of debts, in the District of Columbia," and agree to the residue of the said amendments. They have passed a bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States, for the year 1823, and for other purposes;" a bill, entitled "An act further to prolong the continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia;" a bill, entitled "An act to continue in force an act, entitled 'An act regulating the currency within the United States, of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, and the crowns of France, and five franc pieces,' passed on the 29th day of April, 1816, so far as the same relates to the crowns of France, and five franc pieces;" a bill, entitled "An act making the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, receivable in payments on account of public lands;" a bill, entitled "An act for carrying into effect the Convention of Navigation and Commerce between the United States and France, concluded at Washington, on the 24th day of June, 1822;" a bill, entitled "An act to amend the ordinance, and acts of Congress, for the government of the Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes;" a bill, entitled "An act respecting the punishment of piracy;" a bill, entitled "An act further to extend the provisions of the act entitled 'An act supplementary to an act entitled an act for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands prior to the first of July, 1820;'" and, also, a resolution concerning the Indians in the Territory of Florida; in which bills and resolution they request the concurrence of the Senate. The eight bills and resolution last mentioned were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States, for the year 1823, and for other purposes;" the bill, entitled "An act further to prolong the continuance of the mint at Philadelphia;" the bill, entitled "An act to continue in force an act entitled 'An act regulating the currency within the United States of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, and the crowns of France, and five franc pieces," passed on the 29th day of April, 1816, so far as the same relates to the crowns of France, and five franc pieces;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act making the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, receivable in payments on account of public lands;" were severally read the second time by unanimous consent, and respectively referred to the Committee on Finance, to consider and report thereon.

The bill, entitled "An act for carrying into effect the Convention of Navigation and Commerce between the United States and France, concluded at Washington, on the 24th day of June, 1822," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill, entitled "An act further to extend the provisions of the act entitled 'An act supplementary to an act entitled an act for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands prior to the 1st of July, 1820,'" was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill, entitled "An act to amend the ordinance and acts of Congress for the government of the Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act respecting the punishment of piracy;" were severally read the second time by unanimous consent, and respectively referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution concerning the Indians in the Territory of Florida, was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. BENTON, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to authorize the recorder of land titles in the State of Missouri to examine into the number and state of the unconfirmed French and Spanish land claims in the State of Missouri, and to report the same to the Congress at their next session; and the same having been amended, it was reported to the House accordingly; and, the amendment being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, supplementary to the acts providing pensions for Revolutionary services.

[This bill provides, principally, that the Secretary of War shall restore to the list of pensioners the name of any person who may have been, or hereafter shall be, stricken therefrom, in pursuance of the act of Congress of the 1st day of May, 1820, if such person, so stricken from the list of pensioners, has heretofore furnished, or hereafter shall furnish, evidence, in pursuance of the provisions of said act, to satisfy the Secretary of War that he is in such indigent circumstances, as to be unable to support himself without the assistance of his country. The third section provides that provisions granted upon other and different schedules than those heretofore exhibited by the same applicants, shall commence from the time such schedules shall be filed in court. In addition to these provisions, a clause has been adopted in the Senate, reducing twenty per cent. all pensions which have heretofore, or may hereafter be, allowed.]

SENATE.

Revolutionary Pensions.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

On motion of Mr. KELLY, the third section was stricken out, and a substitute adopted, providing that no pension hereafter allowed under this act on claims heretofore filed, shall commence prior to the passage of this act; and that all other pensions hereafter allowed shall commence from the time of completing the proof.

Mr. KELLY offered another amendment proposing to equalize the pensions of the officers and privates, after the 4th of September next; but this proposition was negatived.

On these amendments, and on the merits of the bill itself, much debate took place, in which Messrs. KELLY, SMITH of Maryland, TAYLOR of Virginia, VAN BUREN, MACON, and NOBLE, largely participated.

Mr. KELLY, of Alabama, said that, having heretofore moved the reconsideration of this bill, he considered it a duty to the nation, the Senate, and himself, to explain the grounds upon which he had acted, and the reasons by which he was now governed. When this bill was called up for consideration in the Senate, said Mr. K., I had not examined its particular provisions, nor had I examined the acts of 1818 and 1820, on the subject of Revolutionary pensions. The act of 1818 gave a pension of eight dollars a month to soldiers, and twenty to officers, in the continental line, who had served nine months during the war of the Revolution, and were in such reduced circumstances as to need the aid of their country.

Under this law, twenty-nine thousand nine hundred and eighty-seven persons applied for pensions; and, of that number, eighteen thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight were successful. In 1820, apprehending that frauds had been committed, all pensions granted under the act of 1818 were suspended until schedules of the property of each pensioner should be taken and returned to the War Department.

On the return of the schedule, the Secretary of War was directed to continue such as, in his opinion, were entitled to the benefits of the act of 1818, and strike from the list such as were not. Under this act twelve thousand five hundred and twenty-nine were continued, and two thousand three hundred and twenty-eight, who returned schedules, were stricken from the list, because they had too much property, and four thousand two hundred and twenty-one have not yet returned schedules. The first section of the present bill requires the Secretary to re-examine the cases of those stricken from the list, and if now found to be sufficiently poor, to replace them on the pension list. The second section relates to the mode of making proof, where the applicant is unable to attend court. The third section regulates the time at which the pensions of those hereafter placed on the list shall commence. And the fourth section, from and after the 4th of September next, reduces all pensions under the acts aforesaid, twenty per cent. My object was, in the vote heretofore given, to relieve the Treasury from part of the enormous burden of the Revolutionary pension list, already swelled to upwards of $1,000,000; and I voted against the bill, under the belief that my object would be effected. I was not as well satisfied at the time, as I would wish to be, when voting upon all subjects of such importance.

Although the subject may have been, and perhaps was, well elucidated in the former debate, yet I had not time to make calculations for myself; and, amidst the conflict of opinions, then advanced, I am now satisfied that I came to an erroneous conclusion. It was urged on one hand, that, to pass the bill would open an additional drain upon the Treasury for two or three hundred thousand dollars; and, on the other, it was contended, that it would save that much, or more, annually. To ascertain which of these opinions is correct, it is necessary to examine the provisions of the present bill with some care.

Who can be placed on the pension list by it that could not otherwise get on? The answer to this question is obvious and easy. The 2,328 who have returned schedules, and been stricken from the list, may get replaced. I think it a fair presumption, that a greater proportion of that class will succeed in getting replaced than any other description of applicants. Admit, for argument, that the whole number will be replaced, and it will require something upwards of $200,000 to pay them. This sum, then, is the greatest possible expenditure that can be incurred by the passage of the bill in question.

How will the case stand in the event of rejection? In the first place the 4,221, who were on the list, and have not yet returned schedules under the act of 1820, may do so at any time they choose, as they are daily and patriotically becoming poor enough to pass muster; and whenever their poverty is established secundum artem, the law is inexorable, and the Secretary must replace them on the list; and, in that event, they draw their pension back to 1820, the date of their last payment. There are also the 11,109 rejected applicants under the law of 1818. They may also become poor enough to succeed; and, if so, their pension will commence from the time of filing their affidavit in court—in many cases, as far back as 1818, and in all prior to 1820. These two classes amount to 15,430. Will they continue their efforts? The nature of man forbids the idea of their idleness in worming themselves into the Treasury. The temptation of receiving several hundred dollars at one time is too strong to be resisted. Property will disappear in a thousand honest ways, and poverty will be achieved when so great a reward awaits it. How many of these 15,330 will reappear, it is impossible to say; but it is surely a safe calculation to suppose, that at least as many of that number will get on the list as there will of the 2,529 provided for by the present bill; and if so, it is obvious that, as the case now stands, it will require at least three times the sum to pay them, as they will be entitled to three years' pension whenever replaced on the list.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Revolutionary Pensions.

SENATE.

It never could have been the intention of the act of 1818 to place so much money in the hands of the pensioner at one time. The present bill guards against that result, and I consider it of great importance to the country to legislate on that subject. In a fiscal point of view, thereby cutting off these back pensions, a sum will be saved to the Treasury more than sufficient to pay so many as may get on the list by the provisions of this bill.

I believe, Mr. President, that the third section of the bill does not express the sense of the Senate in relation to back pensions. If I am not mistaken, the Senate intended to destroy their retroactive quality in all cases. As that section now stands, such pensions as may be allowed on schedules already filed, will not be covered by its language, and of course such cases will be regulated by the former laws on the subject. I wish myself to prevent the retroaction in all cases, and shall therefore propose a substitute for that section before the vote is taken on the passage of the bill.

I wish to modify the bill in other respects, and make a further reduction of the amount of pensions, being well convinced that the sum allowed is too large, even when reduced twenty per cent., and, if the rules of the Senate will admit, I would propose a substitute for the amendment adopted the other day in relation to the reduction of 20 per cent., reducing the soldiers still lower, and reducing the officers to the same sum allowed the soldier. [Here the President informed Mr. Kelly that it was too late to move a reconsideration of the vote on the amendment, as more than three days had elapsed.]

As I am precluded by the rules of correct legislation, said Mr. K., from approaching my object in that way, I must abandon a further reduction as to the soldiers, and move an additional section to the bill in relation to the officers. The difference made between them in the act of 1818, is unjust itself, and destitute of any rational foundation. I grant, while in service, and for time afterwards, there is a difference that ought to be observed; but, after mingling with the world for forty years, every trace of difference must be obliterated, and entirely destroyed. Have not some of the officers degraded themselves, by intemperance and other vices? And have not many of the soldiers attained the highest honors and distinctions of their country? Where, then, is the ground of distinction? There is none in the character or merit of the parties, and there should be none in the bounty of the Government. If reduced to want, the same sum will spread a frugal repast for an officer that will for a soldier.

No difference should have been made originally, and, notwithstanding it has been done by a former Congress, I not only feel authorized, but bound, by the strong dictate of duty, to urge its abolition, by reducing the officers to the sum allowed to the soldiers.

It is said, however, that the faith of the Government is pledged upon this subject, and that a reduction of the sum promised involves its violation. I am not of that opinion.

I admit, in its full and fair extent, the obligation of the Government to respect, under all circumstances, the rights of property in the citizen. It is upon that basis that free Government is erected. It is the criterion by which it is distinguished from despotism; but, while I admit this principle, and acknowledge its influence, I feel bound to examine with care the case on which it is to operate.

By the rules of the civil law, the fairness and deliberation with which the assent was given, constituted the essence of the obligation. Try the case by this rule:

In 1818 the Treasury was full, and the nation, like a generous spendthrift, sought objects of munificence. It was thought the few remaining heroes of the Revolution could be rendered comfortable in the evening of life, by applying at the utmost four hundred thousand dollars per annum of the public money; and those who passed the law of 1818, had no idea that more than that sum would be required.

They deliberately promised to go that far, but unfortunately used general and unguarded terms, which, by sad experience, has been found to require an expenditure of almost five times the sum expected to be sufficient for all the purposes of the act. Can it be said the nation deliberately and fairly promised to appropriate one million eight hundred thousand per annum? Did such an idea enter the minds of those who passed the law? It cannot be believed for a moment. The clear mistake as to the number of pensioners destroys the fairness of the promise, and strips the transaction of that sacred character which had been given to it in argument. By the common law, the consideration upon which a promise is founded is essential to its validity.

What is the consideration here? Not the pay they earned during the war that had either been received, or the claim for it existed against the Government in the form of a specific debt, and would have been so paid, if such had been the case. The truth is, there is no consideration; it originally was, and yet is, a mere gratuity on the part of the Government, and, unless some rule can be found which will bind the Government, when an individual would not be bound by a promise made under similar circumstances, there is no ground for charging the Government with a breach of faith in reducing the pensions so unguardedly and unfortunately promised.

It will not be pretended that an individual would not be at liberty to withhold or reduce these pensions, if he had promised to pay them instead of the Government. The known maxim—"ex nudo pacto non oritur actio"—would protect him, and give him the control of the subject, until the money was paid—when paid, the right to hold it would be complete, and not till then. A voluntary gift, if delivered, is good; but, if not delivered, may be revoked. The contract, if it may be so called, is not binding until it is executed by delivery of the sum promised. Suppose the act of 1818 had given, or rather promised, a million of dollars to each pensioner, will any one pretend that the nation, at the expense of irredeemable beggary, would be bound to fulfil such a promise? Could public faith be pressed into service in such a case? Could it be said that the President should be mustered out of service, the temple of justice closed, and the hall of legislation abandoned? Should all the institutions of the country be sacrificed, for fear of being charged with a violation of public faith? In such a case there can be but one opinion. The recuperative energies of the nation should be manifested in revoking the rash promise. This may, he said, be reasoning from an extreme case. Still, the case supposed, and that under consideration, are parallel in all their principles. They differ only in the extent of enormity. In the one case the revenue would be entirely diverted from its legitimate destination; and in the other, it would be so far crippled as to compel the nation to borrow the means of living in time of peace.

Can such a state of things be sustained? Can this nation borrow the means of support, and continue to exist?

Upon the whole, Mr. President, I am well satisfied that the pensions in question may be reduced, without impugning or impairing public faith. The next question relates to the policy of the measure: Upon this part of the case, it cannot be said that Congress intended to do more by the act of 1818, than to furnish the objects of their bounty with a frugal supply of the table. Money was more abundant then than at any other period of our history, and the price of living proportionably high. The sum allowed was graduated by the folly and extravagance of the times, and although Congress have mentioned a given number of dollars, still I think it obvious, that they intended only to give the means of a comfortable and frugal support; so far from impugning public faith, it will be carrying the real intention of the law into fair and vigorous execution, to allow as much money now as would procure, at the present reduced price of living, as comfortable a support as the sum allowed in 1818 would then command.

The soldier can have no well-founded cause of complaint in adopting this course. I feel convinced that he would be satisfied with it.

I do not hesitate to avow that I am opposed to the policy in which the act of 1818 originated. The avowed object of the law was to enlarge the circle of human happiness. My observation on the movements of human nature, forbids the belief that that Utopian notion ever has, or can be realized by the distribution of public money. I entertain the fullest conviction, that, on the contrary, human vices have been cultivated, and human misery extended, by the law in question; and that the same consequences will follow every visionary attempt of the kind—that the retailer and tapster have enjoyed the benefits of the law, and the immediate objects of its bounty have become more vicious and miserable than they were at its passage.

I am clearly then in favor of reducing this item of public expenditure. Will the present bill achieve my object? Two thousand three hundred and twenty-eight may, by its operation, get on the list, who could not otherwise succeed. If they do, it will require about $250,282 per annum, to pay them. I think it within the limits of moderation to suppose, that at least as many of the 15,330 will succeed in getting on under the existing law; and if so, by cutting off their years of back pensions, there will be three times the amount saved, on that score, as will be expended on the other. If my proposition, to reduce the officers to a level with the soldiers, shall prevail, there will be a further saving of upwards of $25,000. And while upon this part of the subject, I beg the Senate to remember, that, at the close of the war, the officers received five years' full pay from the Government.

Independent, then, of the reduction of twenty per cent. upon all pensions under consideration, I think it is clear, that more would be saved than expended by passing the present law. But suppose I am mistaken in all this—that all the expenditure, and none of the saving will ensue, still it is obvious, that the reduction of twenty per cent. will effect a saving of a great deal more than the expenditure required by the bill. I deem it unnecessary to trouble the Senate with a particular estimate on this subject. The result is too palpable to be overlooked. To effect these savings to the Treasury, I am willing to give those who have been stricken off, under the act of 1820, an opportunity to be relieved and replaced on the list. I am the less opposed to this feature of the bill, because it is said to cover the most meritorious class of pensioners. It covers, as it is said, the frugal, the temperate, and the industrious, who had saved their receipts, and converted them into property—the schedule of which, when returned, excluded them from the further bounty of the country; while the sons of Bacchus, who swallowed their bounty as fast as it was received, were poor enough to retain their places on the list. This account is probable in itself, and I am not inclined to question its correctness.

Well satisfied, Mr. President, that my former vote was erroneous, I avail myself of the opportunity now offered to correct that error, by giving a different one. I wish, however, to make the bill more acceptable, by reducing the sum allowed to officers, and therefore move the adoption of an amendment to that effect.

The question being taken on ordering the bill, as amended, to be read a third time, was decided in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Boardman, Chandler, Dickerson, D'Wolf, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Kelly, King of New York, Knight, Laman, Mills, Morrill, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Stokes, Talbot, Thomas, and Van Buren—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Louisiana, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Noble, Smith of South Carolina, Taylor of Indiana,

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

Taylor of Virginia, Ware, Williams of Mississippi, and Williams of Tennessee—20.

In Executive Session.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

By a resolution of the 27th of December last, the President of the United States was requested to communicate to the Senate, such information as he might possess, respecting the political state of the Island of St. Domingo; whether the government thereof was claimed by any European nation, what our commercial relations with the government of the island were, and whether any further commercial relations with that government would be consistent with the interest and safety of the United States.

From the import of the resolution, it is inferred that the Senate were fully aware of the delicate and interesting nature of the subject embraced by it, in all its branches. The call supposes something peculiar in the nature of the government of that island, and in the character of its population, to which attention is due. Impressed always with an anxious desire to meet every call of either House for information, I most willingly comply in this instance, and with a view to the particular circumstances alluded to.

In adverting to the political state of St. Domingo, I have to observe, that the whole island is now united under one government, under a constitution which retains the sovereignty in the hands of the people of color, and with provisions which prohibit the employment in the government, of all white persons who have emigrated there since 1816, or who may hereafter emigrate there; and which prohibit, also, the acquisition, by such persons, of the right of citizenship, or to real estate in the island. In the exercise of this sovereignty, the government has not been molested by any European Power. No invasion of the island has been made, or attempted, by any Power. It is, however, understood, that the relations between the Government of France and the island have not been adjusted, that its independence has not been recognised by France, nor has peace been formally established between the parties.

The establishment of a government of a people of color in the island, on the principles above stated, evinces, distinctly, the idea of a separate interest, and a distrust of other nations. Had that jealousy been confined to the inhabitants of the parent country, it would have been less an object of attention. But, by extending it to the inhabitants of other countries, with whom no difference ever existed, the policy assumes a character which does not admit of a like explanation. To what extent that spirit may be indulged, or to what purposes applied, our experience has yet been too limited to enable us to form a just estimate. These are inquiries more peculiarly interesting to the neighboring islands. They, nevertheless, deserve the attention of the United States.

Between the United States and the island a commercial intercourse exists, and will continue to be the object of this Government to promote it. Our commerce there has been subjected to higher duties than have been imposed on like articles from some other nations. It has, nevertheless, been extensive; proceeding from the wants of the respective parties, and the enterprise of our citizens. Of this discrimination to our injury, we had a right to complain, and have complained. It is expected that our commercial intercourse with the island will be placed on the footing of the most favored nation. No preference is sought in our favor, nor ought any to be given to others. Regarding the high interest of our happy Union, and looking to every circumstance which may, by any possibility, affect the tranquillity of any part, however remotely, and guarding against such injury, by suitable precautions, it is the duty of this Government to promote, by all the means in its power, and by a fair and honorable policy, the best interest of every other part, and thereby of the whole. Feeling, profoundly, the force of this obligation, I shall continue to exert, with unwearied zeal, my best facilities to give it effect.

JAMES MONROE.

FEBRUARY 25, 1823.

The Message was laid on the table for consideration.

THURSDAY, February 27.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles Carr, of Kentucky, late paymaster to Colonel William Dudley's regiment of Kentucky militia;" and, also, the bill making an appropriation for the gradual armament of the new fortresses of the United States," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for carrying into effect the Convention of Navigation and Commerce between the United States and France, concluded at Washington, on the 24th day of June, 1822," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act further to prolong the continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia;" the bill, entitled "An act making the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain," receivable in payment on account of public lands;" the bill, entitled "An act to continue in force an act entitled 'An act regulating the currency, within the United States, of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, and the crowns of France, and five franc pieces,' passed on the 29th day of April, 1816, so far as the same relates to the crowns of France, and five franc pieces;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act to abolish the office of measurer," reported the same, respectively, without amendment.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act making further appropriations for the military service of the United States, for the year 1823," reported the same, with amendments; which were read.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Henry Lee, one of the sureties of John Ricaud, late a paymaster in the service of the United States;" the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James Rees, of New York, one of the sureties of Joseph H. Rees, deceased, late assistant deputy paymaster general in the service of the United States;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Polly L. Campbell, widow of Colonel John B. Campbell, deceased, late of the 11th regiment of United States infantry," reported the same, respectively, without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the resolution concerning the Indians in the Territory of Florida, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. KING, of New York, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, instructed and directed to prepare and lay before the Senate, at the beginning of their next session, maps of the several States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana, and of the Territories of Michigan, Arkansas, and Florida, which maps shall contain plats of the public land within the aforesaid States and Territories which, before the first day of the year 1823, had been surveyed under the authority of the United States, marking upon the maps, aforesaid, the land, the Indian title to which, at the date aforesaid, was not extinguished; and distinguishing, by colors, upon the plats aforesaid, the land granted to the Army, the land sold by the United States, the land granted to occupants or confirmed to persons claiming under British, French, or Spanish titles, and, also, the land surveyed, as aforesaid, which, at the date aforesaid, remained to be sold; stating likewise, the computed number of acres of each of the enumerated classes of land, and the number of acres which, at the date aforesaid, had been surrendered to the United States under any law passed for the relief of the purchasers of public land; together with a statement of the amount of debt, at the date aforesaid, due to the United States from purchasers of public land within the respective States and Territories aforesaid.

Mr. LANMAN presented the memorial of Thomas Staniford, praying the passage of a law authorizing the equitable settlement of his accounts. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to amend the ordinance and acts of Congress for the government of the Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act respecting the punishment of piracy," reported the same, respectively, without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the memorial of Edward DeKrafft; the memorial of the Legislature of Indiana, praying a different organization of the United States' court for said State; the memorial of Herkimer Sternberg, and others, praying certain amendments to the patent laws; the resolution of the Senate in relation to the Territory of Florida; the resolution of the Senate for dividing the State of Alabama into two judicial districts; the resolution of the Senate in relation to the judiciary system of the United States; and, also, the resolution of the Senate in relation to the public moneys in the hands of clerks of courts, attorneys, and marshals; were discharged from the further consideration thereof respectively.

The PRESIDENT communicated the credentials of Nicholas Ware, appointed a Senator by the Legislature of Georgia for the term of six years, commencing on the fourth day of March next; which were read, and laid on file.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act further to extend the provisions of the act, entitled 'An act supplementary to an act, entitled 'An act for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands prior to the first July, 1820,'" reported the same without amendment.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris," reported the same, with an amendment, which was read.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of the 26th instant, in relation to certain pensioners; and agreed thereto.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Finance, on the petition of John Mitchell; and in concurrence therewith, resolved that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Navy of the United States, for the year 1823," together with the amendments reported thereto by the Committee on Naval Affairs; and, on motion, by Mr. PARROTT, the further consideration thereof was postponed to, and made the order of the day for, to-morrow.

On motion, by Mr. PARROTT, it was ordered that the Senate will give precedence to the bills on the orders of the day, which have originated in the Senate, and will take them up in their regular order.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, together with the amendments reported thereto by the select committee; and, on motion by Mr. MILLS, they were laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill to regulate the collecting of debts in the District of Columbia; and, on motion by Mr. BARROUR, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill supplemental to an act, entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioners to lay out the road therein mentioned;" and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the relief of the heirs of Don Harpin de la Gautrais; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The bill to authorize the Recorder of Land Titles in the State of Missouri, to examine into the number and state of the unconfirmed French and Spanish land claims in the State of Missouri, and to report the same to the Congress, at their next session, was read the third time, and passed.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

The bill to authorize the building a lighthouse at Cape Romain, in South Carolina, and placing floating lights in Delaware Bay, was read the third time, and passed.

The amendments to the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the acts to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States, in the Revolutionary war," having been reported by the committee correctly engrossed, the bill was read a third time, as amended, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House recede from their disagreement to that part of the first amendment of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, in the recovery of debts, in the District of Columbia," on which the Senate have insisted. They concur in all the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the acts to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States, in the Revolutionary war," except that which proposes a fourth section, to which they disagree.

They have passed a bill, entitled "An act providing for the examination of the titles to land in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river; a bill, entitled "An act to amend 'An act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida,' and for other purposes;" a bill, entitled "An act to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Department of the Treasury to sell the public lots, and other property, belonging to the United States, in the District of Columbia;" a bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the public buildings;" and also, a resolution to direct the withholding of the compensation of certain prize agents; in which bills and resolution they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said four bills and resolution were read, and severally passed to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the public buildings," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill, entitled "An act to amend 'An act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida,' and for other purposes," was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill, entitled "An act providing for the examination of the titles to land in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river, was read the second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion, the bill, entitled "An act to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Department of the Treasury to sell the public lots, and other property, belonging to the United States, in the District of Columbia," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The resolution to direct the withholding of the compensation of certain prize agents, was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SOUTHARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the petition of John S. Stiles, executor of George Stiles, deceased, with the accompanying documents, made a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of John S. Stiles, executor of George Stiles, deceased. The report and bill were read, and the bill passed to the second reading.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the discharge of John Burgin from imprisonment," reported the same without amendment.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in relation to internal improvement; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

As this was the last day on which, by the joint rules of the two Houses, either House could transmit to the other any bill for concurrence—

The Senate proceeded to the consideration, successively of the following bills, which were severally examined and discussed in Committee of the Whole, and were subsequently ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to day, viz: A bill to continue in force an act to provide for reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court; a bill for the relief of Taylor Berry; a bill for the punishment of frauds committed on the Departments of the Government; a resolution granting to the Washington Library a copy of the public documents, journals, laws, &c.; a bill to commute the pension of Lieutenant Alfred Flournoy; a bill for the relief of the heirs of the late Captain Johnston Blakeley; a bill for the relief of Edward Evat; a bill to alter the time of holding the District Court of the United States in Kentucky; a bill for clearing, repairing, and improving certain roads, for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of the mail; a bill supplementary to the act "to designate the boundaries of districts and establish land offices for the disposal of the public lands not heretofore offered for sale, in the States of Ohio and Indiana;" a bill extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants and returning surveys.

[On this last mentioned bill considerable debate took place, in which the bill was zealously supported by Mr. BARBOUR, and was opposed by Messrs. LANMAN and RUGGLES.]

The PRESIDENT communicated to the Senate the following letter from the Secretary of State:

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, Feb. 27, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor of transmitting herewith a supplementary return to the digest of the accounts of the manufacturing establishments, and their manufactures, which has been reported to Congress, in pursuance of their joint resolution, of 30th March last. The imperfection of these returns, has been owing to various causes—among which, a principal one was, the unwillingness of manufacturers themselves, to give the information required for making the return. The inadequateness of the compensation allowed by law, for the performance of the service, has also been a subject of complaint, by many of the marshals, and of their assistants.

The supplementary return now made, is of omissions which occurred in making the Digest, under the direction of this Department, and which should have been included in the printed Digest. A statement is added, of the several counties and districts from which no returns have been received.

I am, with great respect, &c.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

A letter was communicated by the PRESIDENT to the Senate from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual reports of the several banks in the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. TALBOT, the Senate resolved to meet this evening, at 6 o'clock; and then, about 4 o'clock, adjourned for a recess.

Six o'clock in the Evening.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made in obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, requesting information relative to loans of money made to certain banking institutions; and the report was read, and laid on the table.

The Senate took up the bill for the relief of Lieutenant R. F. Stockton, of the Navy, late commander of the schooner Alligator.

Messrs. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, and MILLS explained the transactions in which this bill originated, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The following bills were also severally examined and discussed in Committee of the Whole, and were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, viz:

A bill to permit Anna Dubord to bring certain slaves into Louisiana;

A bill to enable the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of the Surveyor General of Missouri, &c., for extra clerk hire.

The Senate resumed (ayes 19) the consideration of the bill to authorize the sale of the salt springs and lead mine lands.

Mr. TALBOT offered an amendment, to authorize the appointment of a skillful person to explore those mine lands, and report to the Treasury Department the result of his observations, (different somewhat from the amendment of Mr. DICKERSON,) and to authorize the sales to proceed as the lands were explored, and supported the bill.

Mr. MACON also advocated the bill.

Messrs. EDWARDS, DICKERSON, BENTON, KING, of New York, and BROWN, of Ohio, joined in the debate, which turned on the expediency of now throwing those lands into the market, the price proper to fix on them, their probable value and productiveness, &c.

The amendment offered by Mr. TALBOT was agreed to—ayes 17, noes 15; when the bill was, on motion of Mr. MACON, laid on the table.

The bill providing for the gradual armament of the new fortresses of the United States was then taken up.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Tennessee, by order of the Military Committee, to which this bill had been referred, moved the indefinite postponement of the bill; which motion was agreed to.

The resolution directing the payment of two hundred and fifty dollars, out of the contingent fund, to Gales & Seaton, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be read a third time.

The resolutions for compensating Robert Tweedy, Tobias Simpson, George Hicks, and Henry Tims, jun., were considered as in Committee of the Whole, and they were amended by filling the blanks; and, the amendments having been concurred in, the resolutions were ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

On motion, by Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Rush and Samuel Conway; the petition of James H. Draughan, and the petition of John McAlister.

Mr. PARROT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the "resolution to direct the withholding of the compensation of certain prize agents, reported the same without amendment.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act for the relief of Nathan Brauson;" "An act to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Spain, the twenty-second day of February, 1819;" "An act to authorize the laying out and opening certain public roads in the Territory of Michigan;" "An act amending and supplementary to the act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida, and to provide for the survey and disposal of the public lands in Florida;" "An act to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to remit the instalments due on certain lots in Shawneetown, in the State of Illinois;" "An act for the relief of John Coffee;" "An act for the relief of Woodson Wren;" "An act for the relief of Sophia B. Ford, Nathan Ford, and Jacob Arnold, jun., administrators of the estate of Mahlon Ford, deceased;" "An act for the relief of James H. Clark;" "An act for the relief of Thaddeus Mayhew;" "An act supplementary to 'An act for the better organization of the courts of the United States within the State of New York;" "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to pay for certain repairs to the General Post Office, and to keep the engine house, the fire engine, and apparatus in repair;" "An act concerning invalid pensions;" "An act to discontinue certain post roads and to establish others;" and, also, "An act to establish an additional land office in the Territory of Michigan;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Farrow and Harris.

SENATE.

The said fifteen bills were severally read, and passed to a second reading.

The bill entitled "An act for the relief of Nathan Branson," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill entitled "An act to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Spain, the 22d of February, 1819;" the bill entitled "An act to authorize the laying out and opening certain public roads in the Territory of Florida;" the bill, entitled "An act amending and supplementary to the act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida, and to provide for the survey and disposal of the public lands in Florida;" the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to remit the instalments due on certain lots in Shawneetown, in the State of Illinois;" the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Coffee;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Woodson Wren," were severally read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill entitled "An act for the relief of Sophia B. Ford, Nathan Ford, and Jacob Arnold, jun., administrators of the estate of Mahlon Ford, deceased;" the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James H. Clark;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Thaddeus Mayhew," were read the second time by unanimous consent, and severally referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act for the better organization of the courts of the United States within the State of New York,'" was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill entitled "An act concerning invalid pensions," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill entitled "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to pay for certain repairs to the General Post Office, and to keep the engine house, the fire engine, and apparatus, in repair;" and the bill, entitled "An act to discontinue certain post roads and to establish others;" were read the second time by unanimous consent, and severally referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the public buildings," reported the same with an amendment.

The bill entitled "An act to establish an additional land office in the Territory of Michigan," was read the second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the subject was referred, reported the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be requested to collect and arrange in one bill, all the acts of Congress now in force relative to the courts of the United States, and their administration of justice thereon, and report the same to the Senate at their next session; together with such suggestions of changes and modifications thereof as will, in his opinion, improve the present system.

FARROW AND HARRIS.

The bill to authorize the adjustment of the accounts of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris (formerly contractors for building the fortifications on Dauphin Island, now abandoned) was taken up. A debate of considerable duration took place on this bill, and the various amendments offered thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON was opposed to the postponement of the bill. He said the object of the motion seemed to be to postpone the bill under consideration, which had been reported by the committee of the Senate, to whom the subject was referred, for the purpose of passing the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the petitioners. He did not approve either of the bills, as neither of them is calculated to afford prompt relief. He thought the Senate's bill, however, best calculated to attain that object.

Mr. J. now explained the circumstances of the case, and exposed the hardships to which the petitioners had been subjected, and the cruel injustice which had been done them by Congress, as he conceived, in withholding the appropriations necessary to enable the Government, on its part, to fulfil the contract made with the petitioners. Farrow, one of the petitioners, and who was most interested, and whom he represented as being at the time of the contract a gentleman of high respectability, and one of the most wealthy citizens of Virginia, had, in consequence of this failure on the part of the Government, been reduced from a state of affluence and independence to that of poverty and want; and he had been harassed and oppressed for a considerable time, and, he believed, without the least fault on his part. He referred to the contract. In the month of July, 1818, Farrow and Harris entered into a contract with the Government to construct on Dauphin Island, Mobile bay, a fort and other public buildings, and engaged to be on the island on or before the 1st day of December, 1818, for the purpose of commencing the works. And it was stipulated between the parties that the United States' engineer would be on the island at the time specified, and designate the spot on which the buildings were to be erected, and prescribe the manner in which they were to be executed. It appears Farrow and Harris arrived on the island with their men, materials, and implements, to a very great amount, ready to carry into effect their part of the contract. But the United States' engineer, who was to designate the site for the intended works, did not arrive till some time in January; so that the contractors, with all their mechanics, laborers, and overseers, had to wait nearly two months in a state of suspense and uncertainty, and were in consequence subjected to great inconveniences, and sustained heavy losses. Still, notwithstanding this failure on the part of the Government, the contractors had commenced, and progressed rapidly with the works; they had surmounted the difficulties that had impeded their progress; the materials sufficient for the completion of the works had been obtained; and at the time Congress withheld the appropriations which occasioned the progress of the works to be stopped, there was every reason to believe the contract would soon be fulfilled, to the entire satisfaction of the Government.

SENATE."

Farrow and Harris.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

The Chief Engineer, in his report, states: "The contract for fortifications at Dauphin Island was in a prosperous condition at the time the appropriation was withheld; and, from the means applicable to its prosecution, as shown in the table, there is reason to believe its progress would have continued to be entirely satisfactory, and that it would be erected within the estimate." And it appears by a statement from the proper department, that on account of $162,877, advanced by the Government to Farrow and Harris, a credit of $48,899 is allowed, and that the value of the articles on hand applicable to the works is set down at $120,000—making together the sum of $168,899—showing a balance of $6,617 due to Farrow and Harris, independently of the heavy damages they have sustained from the violation of the contract on the part of the Government, and for which they are certainly entitled to compensation.

Contracts with the United States are governed by the same principles as between individuals; each party being bound to fulfil what they agree to do, and the party that fails to perform the agreement is liable to damages.

Thus it appears, from these statements, that at the time the progress of the works were stopped by the Government, the materials on hand were perhaps equal to the completion of the works contemplated, and the means necessary, in full operation to complete them in a short time, and all the expenses incurred, on which the profits are predicated. Notwithstanding this view of the subject, which he believed to be correct, the contractors have been prosecuted by the Government, and their property withheld to a large amount, and a suit is now actually pending against them and their securities, to recover back the amount of advances made by the Government on account of the contract; after deducting the value, by admeasurement, of so much of the work as was actually done, at the contract rates. The amount of the price of this work, added to the value of the materials on hand, at a fair valuation, would be no compensation to the contractors. By this mode of settlement, no allowance would be made for the great investments of capital, or for the labor and expenses bestowed in collecting the materials, and preparing for the execution of the work; nor would any allowance be made for the losses and risks incident to such an undertaking, or for such materials as were either paid or contracted for, though not actually delivered. The profits to be derived from his contract could arise, not from the collection of the materials on the island, but from putting the materials together in the construction of the works.

Mr. J. proceeded to state, that about 80 or 100 slaves had been purchased on account of the Government, for the purpose of executing the works, and were mortgaged to the Government for the advances made, and are now held subject to the mortgage. And what is contemplated to be done, he asked, by the bill from the House of Representatives? It provides for the sale of the slaves and materials alluded to, for prompt payment, with the view of giving the contractors credit for the amount of the proceeds of sales. It was evident, he said, that the property, if thus disposed of, would be sacrificed. Besides, the power of Congress to adopt such a step might be questioned. If the materials furnished for the fortifications belong to the United States, they require no law to authorize the sale of them. If they are the property of the contractors, Congress has no right to pass a law directing the sale of them. But, presuming the materials to belong to the contractors, and admitting the power thus to dispose of them, would it be just or politic to exercise it? He thought not. The materials are wanted, and may all be employed, as he is informed, in completing the fortifications now building at Mobile Point, three miles from Dauphin Island. He was of opinion, therefore, that the Government should be authorized to receive them at a fair estimation, leaving the question of damages open for further investigation. He was, also, of opinion that the Government should be directed by this act, to receive the slaves in question, at the price for which they were purchased, or at least to discharge the mortgage on them. The gentleman who had purchased the slaves for the Government, had not been credited with the amount paid for them, nor was he permitted to use or to dispose of them. This seems to present a case of peculiar hardship, nor could he reconcile the course which had been pursued in relation to the subject, with his ideas of the principles of justice.

The bill under consideration, he said, requires the Secretary of War to cause all the facts of the case to be investigated, and to report the same to Congress at their next session, for the purpose of enabling Congress to act advisedly on the subject. There was one great objection to this plan. If adopted, the adjustment of the subjects in controversy will be suspended for another year, greatly to the injury of all parties concerned. He would prefer to see the bill modified, so as to make an immediate disposition of the materials and slaves alluded to, in the manner he had suggested, leaving the question of damages to be ascertained as provided for by the bill. Nevertheless, he preferred this bill to the one from the House of Representatives, and hoped it would not be postponed.

The motion was rejected, and the bill was ordered to a third reading, and passed.

FRIDAY, February 28.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Nathan Branson," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims,

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Sophia B. Ford, Nathan Ford, and Jacob Arnold, jr., administrators of the estate of Mahlon Ford, deceased;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James H. Clark," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act for the better organization of the courts of the United States within the State of New York,'" reported the same without amendment.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to remit the instalments due on certain lots in Shawneetown, in the State of Illinois," reported the same with amendments; which were read.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Spain, the 22d of February, 1819," reported the same with an amendment; which was read.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Woodson Wren;" the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Coffee;" the bill, entitled "An act providing for the examination of the titles to land in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river;" and, also, the bill, entitled "An act to establish an additional land office in the Territory of Michigan," reported the same, respectively, without amendment.

Mr. LANMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Department of the Treasury to sell the public lots and other property belonging to the United States in the District of Columbia," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. STOKES, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to pay for certain repairs to the General Post Office, and to keep the engine house, the fire engine, and apparatus, in repair," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate of the 8th of January last, directing them to "inquire into the expediency of authorizing an interchange of the laws of the several States, by mail, free of postage," made a report, accompanied by a resolution, that it is inexpedient, at this time, to authorize the interchange of the laws of the several States, by mail, free of postage.

On motion, by Mr. VAN DYKE, the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the laying out and opening certain public roads in the Territory of Florida," were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. KING, of New York, was taken up; and having been modified so as to call on the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the resolution was agreed to.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution proposed by the Judiciary Committee, relative to a collection of the laws concerning the Judiciary; and after some discussion, on the necessity of such a collection, and particularly on the expediency of directing the duty to be performed by the Attorney General, as proposed by the resolution, the resolution was disagreed to.

The following resolutions were severally read a third time, and passed:

Resolved, That Robert Tweedy, Tobias Simpson, and George Hicks, assistants to the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, be paid, out of the contingent fund, two dollars a day for each day they have attended the Senate during the present session of Congress; and that Henry Tims, jr., be allowed one hundred dollars for his attendance during the present session.

Resolved, That there be paid, out of the contingent fund, to Robert Tweedy, Tobias Simpson, and George Hicks, the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars each, for extra services.

Resolved, That Gales & Seaton be paid, out of the contingent fund, two hundred and fifty dollars, for eight thousand copies of the Message of the President for the years 1821 and 1822.

On motion, by Mr. NOBLE, the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Howell, the petition of Peter Cherry, and, also, the petition of John Fitzgerald, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to amend 'An act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida, and for other purposes,'" reported the same without amendment.

The bill making appropriations for the support of the Navy of the United States for the year 1823, was considered in Committee of the Whole, amended, and was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate of the original amount of a judgment lately obtained by the United States in the district court of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, against Colonel William Duane, and what credits have been allowed to the defendant since the date of the judgment, the date of such credits, by whom given, and under what authority.

The bill providing for clothing the militia of the United States when in actual service, was taken up in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NOBLE made some remarks in support of the measure. Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, opposed the bill, not on principle, because he was friendly to the principle, but from objections to the mode proposed by the bill; and for the purpose of getting rid of the bill he moved to lay it on the table. Mr. NOBLE replied to Mr. S. and answered his objections; when—

SENATE.

Proceedings.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the better organization of the District Court of the United States within the State of Louisiana;" and the same having been amended it was reported to the House, and, the amendment being concurred in, the amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill was read a third time as amended.

Mr. STOKES, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to discontinue certain post roads and to establish others," reported the same, with amendments; which were read.

The Senate took up, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill in addition to the act "for the prompt settlement of public accounts, and for the punishment of the crime of perjury."

Several amendments were proposed to this bill, and discussed; all of which were, in the end, negatived; and considerable debate took place also on the merits of the bill itself. In these discussions Messrs. HOLMES of Maine, BARBOUR, LANMAN, EATON, CHANDLER, RUGGLES, SMITH, of Maryland, TALBOT, and MILLS, engaged. The bill was finally ordered to be read a third time, by yeas and nays—31 to 8, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Boardman, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Mills, Morril, Noble, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, Van Buren, Ware, and Williams of Mississippi.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Findlay, Gaillard, Knight, Macon, and Taylor of Virginia.

The bill was then read a third time, by unanimous consent, and passed.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act concerning invalid pensions," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the laying out and making certain public roads in the Territory of Florida," reported the same without amendment.

Mr. VAN DYKE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act amending and supplementary to the act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida, and to provide for the survey and disposal of the public lands in Florida," reported the same, with amendments; which were read.

On motion of Mr. EATON, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, of the 29th ultimo, requesting information relative to loans of money made to certain banking institutions, was ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act extending the time for issuing and locating military land warrants to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary army;" and, no amendment having been proposed, it was reported to the House, and passed to a third reading.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bills which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri;" "An act extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office;" and "An act for the relief of Nimrod Farrow, Richard Harris, and their securities;" with an amendment to each, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office;" and concurred therein.

The following bills were successively considered in Committee of the Whole, some of them a good deal discussed, and some amended in their details; and all of them ordered to be read a third time, viz: A bill supplementary to the act relating to the ransom of American captives of the late war; a bill for the relief of James Morrison; a bill to extend the time allowed for the redemption of lands sold for direct taxes, in certain cases; a bill to alter the times of holding the district court of the district of Vermont; a bill to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria; a bill for the relief of John B. Hogan; a bill for the relief of Abraham Snyder; a bill respecting stamps; a bill for the relief of Henry Lee, one of the sureties of Ricaud, late a paymaster in the Army; a bill for the relief of James Rees; a bill for the relief of Polly L. Campbell, widow of Colonel John B. Campbell, deceased; a bill to amend the ordinances and acts of the Congress for the government of the Territory of Michigan; a bill to extend the provisions of the act supplementary to the act for the relief of the purchasers of public lands; a bill for the relief of Captain Richard Hightower; a bill to continue in force the act regulating the currency, within the United States, of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, and the crowns of France, and five franc pieces; a bill making the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, receivable in payment on account of public lands; a resolution requiring from the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives an annual statement of the contingent expenses of the two Houses. [This was subsequently read a third time, and passed;] a bill to amend an act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from adjacent territories; a bill to transfer to the State of Virginia certain militia fines; a bill making appropriations for the military service for the year 1823; a bill making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1823.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Government Deposites in Banks.

SENATE.

MINT ESTABLISHMENT.

The bill further to prolong, for five years, the continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia, was taken up.

Mr. EATON questioned the propriety of making provision for continuing the Mint at Philadelphia for five years. He thought the Mint establishment might be fixed at the seat of Government, where it would be more immediately under the eye of Congress, and its operations and concerns more easily examined and understood. He did not assert that it ought to be removed; but he wished the subject to be inquired into, and moved to insert one year in the bill instead of five, that Congress might, in the meantime, consider the subject, and decide understandingly on it.

This motion was opposed by Messrs. ELLIOTT and LANMAN; who, among other things, argued that, even if it were now enacted to continue the Mint at Philadelphia for five years, Congress could revoke the law at any time, if it should be deemed expedient to remove the establishment from thence; but they controverted the propriety of removing the Mint from Philadelphia, from considerations of convenience, and the successful operation of the establishment.

The motion to amend the bill was negatived; and it was ordered to a third reading.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITES IN BANKS.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to loans or deposits made by the Treasury to banks from the year 1789 to the present time—rendered in obedience to a resolution of the Senate; which report was, on motion of Mr. EATON, ordered to be printed. The report is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Feb. 25, 1823.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the Senate, of the 29th ultimo, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury "to inform the Senate if any loans of money to any amount, and for what purpose, have been made from the Treasury, to any individuals, or banking institutions, since the third day of March, 1789, and whether such loans, so made, have been repaid, or in any manner adequately secured, so that the Government will ultimately be satisfactorily reimbursed," I have the honor to submit copies of letters from the Secretary of the Treasury, from the 19th of March, 1792, to the 17th of July, 1819, inclusive, to the officers of the Bank of the United States, and of its branches, and to the officers of certain State banks, and to other officers and individuals, which contain the information required by the resolution, as far as it can be collected from the correspondence of the department.

By reference to the papers numbered from 1 to 11, inclusive, it is apparent that loans in fact, though not in terms, were offered by the Treasury Department to the Bank of the United States, and to the State banks to which they were directed.

By the first of these letters, dated the 19th March, 1792, the Secretary of the Treasury informed the president of the Bank of the United States, that it had been represented to him that an unusually large sum of money had, and would become due to the United States, from importers in the district of Philadelphia, in the month of March, 1792, and reminded him that, in consequence of standing circular instructions, the collector of the district would receive from the merchants, as cash, the post notes of the Bank of the United States, if not issued for a longer period of payment than thirty days, and that he would judge how far it might be convenient to make operations payable in such notes, which might not be convenient if payable immediately in specie, or cash notes. On the 29th of the same month, a letter was addressed, by the same officer, to the president of the Bank of Maryland, stating that it has been intimated to him that considerable sums of duties had become due, or were to fall due in Baltimore, in the course of the month, and that it was at all times his wish to give to the merchants as much facility as the public business would admit; that he had, therefore, determined, if he should incline to make discounts for the importers, to enable them to pay the duties due on or before the 15th of April thereafter, he would leave a sum of money, equal thereto, in his hands, for sixty days after the dates of the notes.

By his letters of the 10th of April, 1792, the presidents of the Bank of the United States, and of the Bank of Maryland, were informed that circumstances, within his knowledge, induced him to state that the operation, suggested in his letter of the 29th of March, continued to be desirable in relation to those who have payments to make at the custom-house, in the course of that month. By his letter of the 8th of December, 1792, the president of the Bank of the United States was informed that the Secretary had no objection that notes, in which the Government was interested, should be renewed for thirty days, in all cases where it could be done with perfect safety to the public. By the letter of the Secretary, of the — of February, 1793, the presidents of the offices of the Bank of the United States at New York and Baltimore were informed that an arrangement had been made with the Bank of the United States, for the accommodation of the merchants of Philadelphia, whose bonds for duties were to become payable between that date and the last day of the ensuing month, by which the bank would discount the notes of such merchants as were indebted to the custom-house, for thirty days, for the respective sums that should become payable; the bank to receive those notes from the collector, as cash, to be drawn for only by the collector. The president of the office was informed that, if a similar arrangement appeared to him to be requisite to the accommodation of the merchants of New York, that he would not draw for the sums that had relation to the transaction, until about the middle of May thereafter. On the 5th of March, 1793, a similar letter was addressed to the presidents of the offices of discount and deposit at Boston and Providence. His letters of the 5th of April, 1793, and the 16th of February, 1797, marked 10, 11, have the same object in view; that is to say, they offer, as inducements to the banks to discount the notes of persons indebted upon duty bonds, that the amount of such bonds shall not be drawn from the banks until the notes discounted were payable, or that post notes shall be receivable by the collector in discharge of such bonds.

The latter of these letters relates to the case of an individual, in whose favor the Secretary of the Treasury submits to the consideration of the bank, whether an accommodation could not be granted to him, on condition that the sum discounted should be paid in a post-note, to be deposited with the collector of the customs. This representation was made in consequence of the individual's being unable to obtain a credit at the custom-house on a cargo of coffee, because he had duty bonds to a considerable amount then due. It appears, from the letter of the 23d of February, 1793, already referred to, that arrangements of that nature were made, verbally, with the bank, as the arrangement referred to in that letter is not of record in the office.

The correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the banks, generally, does not show upon what account the deposits in those banks were made. The letters of the Secretary to the Treasurer are still more general, simply directing the deposits.

The accounts of the Treasurer with the banks, anterior to the last quarter of the year 1811, have not been preserved; no inference, therefore, can be drawn, from the state of the accounts, as to the object or purpose for which any deposit was made, previously to that date. From the accounts with the banks, from that period, it appears that many deposits were made by transferring public money from one bank to another, when the amount in the bank, to which the transfer was made, was much more than sufficient to meet the drafts drawn upon it. Although the inferences which may be drawn from the state of the accounts between the Treasurer and a bank in which deposits are made, apparently not required for the public expenditure, cannot be considered as conclusive evidence that such deposits were made to sustain the bank against a run, or press upon it, or to aid in its operations; yet the presumption is sufficiently strong, to make it proper to present a few of those cases. On the 6th of March, 1812, a draft was drawn for $50,000, in favor of the Mechanics' Bank of New York, upon the State Bank at Charleston, and on the 7th of May, for $80,000. On the 2d of March, there was on deposit, in the former bank, $432,000, which was not reduced below $319,000 during the remainder of the month; and on the 4th of May, the deposit was $133,000, which sum was not diminished during the month; and at the end of the quarter, it had increased to $224,000. There were drawn, and deposited, in the Bank of Pennsylvania, the following drafts, viz: 12th March, 1812, upon the Union Bank of Boston, $50,000; 6th July, upon the State Bank of Boston, $49,000; in October of the same year, upon the Bank of Baltimore, $200,000; and upon the Manhattan Company, $100,000. At the date of the first draft, there was standing to the credit of the Treasurer, on the books of the bank, $133,000, which was not diminished during the month; and at its close, amounted to $294,000. At the date of the second, the deposit amounted to $164,000 which continued increasing, and amounted, on the 17th August, to $403,000; and at the end of the quarter, to $636,000. On the 6th of October, the date of the first draft, in that month, it amounted to $465,000, and at the close of the month, to $593,000. The records of the office afford no explanation of the reasons which induced the Secretary of the Treasury to make these transfers; and many others, of a similar nature, were made from time to time. But on the 4th of March, 1814, the Cashier of the Bank of Pennsylvania, by letter of that date, informed the Secretary of the Treasury, that the great and unprecedented demand upon that institution for specie, principally from the eastward, induced him to request, that, if consistent with the interests of the Government, he would give him drafts either on New York or Boston, to an amount that would counteract those demands, stating, that the amount of specie in the vaults but little exceeded $200,000, and that the demands of the bank, upon those to the southward of Philadelphia, if called for, might put them to serious inconvenience. Upon this representation, a draft was, on the 8th of the month, drawn by the Treasurer, in favor of the bank, for $150,000, upon the Bank of New York. Upon the 28th of February preceding this transaction, there was in the bank a deposit of $755,000, and on the 31st of March, $799,000. By reference to the letter of the President of the Bank of Columbia, which accompanies this report, it appears that, on the 29th of October, 1801, the Secretary of the Treasury made a deposit in that bank of $50,000, to enable it to sustain itself against a run which was then making upon it, and that other sums were subsequently deposited in that bank by the department, to aid it in its operations. In the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, of the 27th May, 1813, to Stephen Girard, he is informed, that "the arrangement made by Mr. Gallatin, relative to the deposit of the public moneys drawn from your bank, in favor of the public agents, was to shield you against the attacks of the incorporated banks, to whom such money would otherwise have been transferred; and the magnitude of your contract might thus have been rendered highly prejudicial to your institution. It is the particular province, and it has been the practice, of the Department of the Treasury of the United States, to direct the moneyed operations of the public, to the preservation of credit, by maintaining the equilibrium between the moneyed institutions of the country; and as it has protected your institution, by the arrangement alluded to, so it will guard those institutions against any undue pressure which the public funds in your vaults may enable you to direct against them. I am informed that you have made some very heavy and unnecessary drafts of specie from several banks, and particularly from the Pennsylvania and Farmers' and Mechanics' Banks, with indications of a disposition to persevere, which has excited considerable apprehension. I therefore deem it necessary to inform you, that a continuance of that system, will induce the prompt application of a specific remedy."

From my personal intercourse with Mr. Gallatin, I know he entertained the sentiments communicated in this letter, and I presume they have been entertained by all of his predecessors and successors in office, and acted upon whenever cases occurred which rendered it necessary.

When I entered upon the duties of Secretary of the Treasury, on the 22d of October, 1816, the banks in all the States, except those in Massachusetts, had suspended specie payments. My immediate predecessor in office had made an ineffectual attempt, in the course of that year, to induce them to commence specie payments, by discharging, in specie, all notes not exceeding five dollars. By the charter of the Bank of the United States, it was to go into operation on the 1st of January, 1817. It was, after mature deliberation, determined that another effort should be made by the Treasury Department, to induce the State banks to aid the Bank of the United States, in restoring the currency to a sound State. There was then in the Treasury more than eleven millions of dollars, deposited in the State banks, and the estimate of receipts for the year 1817, considerably exceeded that of the expenditure for the year. It was, therefore, proposed by the Department that no part of the sums then in the State banks, should be drawn from them before the 1st of July, unless the receipts should not be equal to the expenditure, an event which there was no reason to apprehend, and that, after that time, it should be gradually drawn, as the public service should require, but in no case were drafts to be drawn in favor of the Bank of the United States, unless it should become necessary to protect it against the State banks. This advantageous proposition was declined without hesitation. The banks in the principal Atlantic cities, however, entered into an arrangement with the Bank of the United States, by which they engaged to resume specie payments, and, in the course of the year 1817, the resumption, with but few exceptions, became general throughout the Union. Towards the close of the year 1818, some of the banks in the Western States stopped payment. The sudden fall in the price of all domestic articles, which occurred about the same period, created a general pressure upon the banks. In the Winter and Spring of 1819, the Bank of the United States was, in the opinion of the enlightened officer who presided over its direction, in a great degree indebted for the preservation of its credit to the forbearance of its creditors, and to the support which it received from the Treasury Department. Such were my impressions of its critical state, that I felt it my duty to accept propositions made by the Board of Directors, which, under other circumstances, would have been declined.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Government Deposites in Banks.

SENATE.

During this general pressure, the banks in this District, which, upon the establishment of the office of discount and deposit in the city, had not taken advantage of that event, to reduce their circulations, by contracting their discounts, were pressed by continual and increasing demands for specie from the Eastward, and by the return of their notes upon them from the western parts of Virginia, where certain banks, chartered by that State, had commenced, or were preparing to commence business. Pressed thus, on both sides, their means of meeting the demands made upon them, and of preserving their credit, were believed to be insufficient. In this critical situation, several of them applied, personally, by their directors, to the Department, to ascertain whether, in case of great emergency, they would receive any support. Considering this crisis as highly important to the nation, and believing that a failure of one or more of those banks would produce a general run upon all, of a different nature from that which was then pressing upon them, assurances were given, that a reasonable support might be relied upon.

In consequence of this assurance, deposits were, from time to time, made in the Union Bank of Alexandria, the Mechanics' Bank, and the Franklin Bank, of the same place; in the Union and Central Banks of Georgetown; in the Bank of Washington, and in the Patriotic Bank. All these sums have been repaid, except the sum of $48,000, deposited in the Franklin Bank of Alexandria. The whole of the funds of that bank have been assigned to the United States, and legal measures have been adopted by the Attorney of the United States for the recovery of the amount from the debtors of the bank. The letter of that officer, which is herewith communicated, shows that there is no danger of any loss to the United States. Copies of the letters to the Treasurer, directing the deposits to be made in that bank, to his credit, are also communicated. These deposits were made upon the representations of General Thompson Mason, then collector of the district of Alexandria, and of John T. Ricketts, Esq., who were both men of great respectability, and considerable stockholders in the Bank. W. T. Swann, Esq., a man of the fairest character, and of considerable property, was then the President of the Bank. No doubt was entertained of the integrity with which the Bank was administered, and of its capacity, if aided for a short time, of preserving its credit, and of meeting the drafts of the Treasurer for the amount deposited by him to his credit. This anticipation, it is believed, would have been realized, had not the notes of the Bank been so successfully counterfeited, as to have imposed upon its officers to a considerable amount. The same misfortune befel the Central Bank of Georgetown. In the month of May, of the same year, when the Cashier of the Bank of Columbia was about to set out on his journey through the interior of the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Ohio, for the purpose of demanding payment of the special deposit which had been transferred to that bank, he represented to the department that he should be at very considerable expense, and that, during his absence, there might be a press made upon the bank; and, therefore, requested that a deposit of forty-five thousand dollars might be made in the bank, to the credit of the Treasurer. As no charge was to be made for the expense and risk which was incurred, in carrying a large amount of bank notes through the country, the request was considered reasonable, and the deposit was accordingly made. This bank has never ceased to pay its notes in specie, on demand.

These are all the transactions with banks which are believed to be within the intent or terms of the resolution, except certain transactions with the banks in this District, in the early part of the year 1817, which were specifically reported to the two Houses of Congress, on the 10th of December, 1817, and printed among the public documents of that session. In that report, it is stated that a deposit of $75,000 had been made in the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown, to sustain it in its operations, immediately after resuming specie payments. The principle and practice of the Treasury in sustaining the credit of banks, disposed to act correctly, was, in this communication, frankly disclosed to Congress, when not the slightest symptom of dissatisfaction was manifested, or the right or propriety of the practice called, directly or indirectly, in question.

It is presumed that it has not been the practice of the Department to lend the public money to individuals. By reference to letters numbered from 12 to 16, inclusive, it will be found that public money has been advanced to individuals, which, however, have that appearance; but it is possible that those transactions may admit of explanations, which may take from them that character. From Nos. 14, 15, it appears, that considerable sums were, in 1798, advanced to Lane & Salter, and others, to enable them to erect the necessary machinery for making cannon, when no contract for that object had been made. The only case which has occurred since I took charge of the Treasury Department, which can have given rise to that part of the resolution, is one connected with the public money deposited by the Receiver at Cincinnati, in the Farmers and Mechanics' Bank of that place.

That bank, a short time after the date of its agreement with the Department, in 1819, stopped payment, and has not, when called upon, offered any explanations, or given any reply, to the several letters addressed to it by the Department. When, in the course of that year, Mr. Whann visited Cincinnati, as the agent of the Treasury, to convert the special deposit into current notes or specie, or to obtain acknowledgments that should bear interest, he reported that all the banks upon which he had called, with the exception of the Farmers and Mechanics', had shown a disposition to act fairly—had exposed to him the state of their affairs, and given him such explanations as were satisfactory; but that the officers of that bank had refused to expose the state of its affairs, or give explanations of any kind. It also refused to give any receipt or acknowledgment of the amount which had been deposited in it. No return has yet been made by the bank to the Treasurer, or to his office, stating the amount in its possession. These circumstances had produced a most unfavorable impression, not only as to the integrity with which the bank was directed, but also as to its solvency. In the spring of 1820, Colonel Johnson, of the Senate, as the agent of his brother, applied to the department to ascertain whether, upon his transferring notes to the United States, upon persons in good credit, in this place, a credit would be given to his brother for the amount with the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank. Believing, as I did, from the circumstances which have been stated, that the debt due by the bank was not safe, and that notes upon solvent persons in this place afforded a more certain prospect of receiving payment than from the bank, the offer was accepted; and notes, to the amount of $30,583 24, a considerable proportion of which were secured by mortgage, were deposited in the Branch of the United States' Bank in this place, and a credit for the amount given to Colonel Johnson with the bank at Cincinnati. The transaction, however, was never considered as a loan of money. It was, in fact, changing one debt for another, and receiving, as it was then, and is still believed, a better security for it than what was given in exchange. Subsequent reflection, however, upon the subject, excited doubts whether the responsibility of changing the nature of any debt due to the United States, except by taking collateral or additional security, ought to be incurred by the department. An application of a similar kind, made subsequently, by the same gentleman, was accordingly declined.

I have the honor to be, &c.

W. H. CRAWFORD.

HON. JOHN GAILLARD,

President, pro tem., of the Senate.

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

The Senate took up the message from the House of Representatives, announcing its disagreement to the Senate's amendment to the bill supplementary to the Revolutionary pension laws.

[The amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives, was a clause inserted by the Senate, to reduce all the Revolutionary pensions twenty per cent.]

Mr. NOBLE moved to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. MORRIL, of New Hampshire, addressed the Chair as follows:

Mr. President: I rise to address you on this occasion, with a feeling and sensibility not usually excited. This is a subject in which not only many individuals, but the Congress of the nation and the whole country itself, are deeply interested. It is a vital question, touching the liberality, the justice, and faith, of the nation.

Sir, I do not present myself to the Senate as the advocate of the intemperate and dishonest soldier, but the poor, honest, disheartened Revolutionary warrior—the poor man who fought your battles, defended your rights, sustained your character, and achieved your privileges. I am impelled to this by the disappointments and necessities of the heroes of the Revolution. My view of the pledged honor and justice of the nation excites me to this duty. In the performance of it, my design will be, if possible, to convince the Senate, (as intimated by the honorable gentleman from Indiana, Mr. NOBLE,) that this bill ought not to be postponed; but to pass into a law. I view the laws on this subject as constituting a contract of a solemn nature between the Government and the Revolutionary soldier. Perhaps, sir, I should not use language too strong, if I were to say, they vest in them a right, which is not to be alienated without the consent of both parties. You promised them, would they prove, to your satisfaction, that they had performed certain services, under certain circumstances, and now are, or at any future period may be, so poor, as to need the assistance of their country for support, you would give them a pension during life. They have complied with your proposition; they have confirmed the contract on their part; it is now complete, and you have pledged the honor and faith of the nation to fulfil it on your part. They had, and still have reason to believe, that they will perform this act of justice and good faith, because it was promised and promulgated in a public law of the land, made by the constituted authorities—the Representatives of the people.

Sir, what have you promised? To sustain my positions, I must recur to the laws which you have passed on this subject. In the act of the 18th of March, 1818, you promise "that every commissioned officer, non-commissioned, musician, and private soldier, &c., who served in the war of the Revolution until the end thereof, or for the term of nine months or longer, at any one period of the war, on the Continental establishment, &c., who is yet a resident citizen of the United States, and who is, or hereafter, by reason of his reduced circumstances in life, shall be in need of assistance from his country for support, and shall have substantiated his claim to a pension, in the manner hereinafter directed, shall receive a pension from the United States, if an officer, of twenty dollars per month, during life; if a non-commissioned officer, mariner, musician, marine, or private soldier, of eight dollars per month during life." This, sir, is your engagement. The second section defines the evidence necessary to obtain the benefit of this act, and the manner in which it shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War, and expressly says, "whose duty it shall be, if satisfied (note the expression,) the applicant comes under the provisions of this act, to place such officer, musician, mariner, marine, or soldier, on the pension list of the United States." These quotations contain all the essential provisions of this law. In their application, the Secretary of the Department of War exercised a liberality honorable and just; but perhaps too extensive for the existing state of the Treasury, it not being apprehended so great a number could possibly apply for the benefits of this law. But, in consequence of an undue zeal, and a misconstruction of the law by many of the courts, and an avaricious disposition of the applicants, a much greater number was placed on the pension roll than was anticipated, or than was justly entitled. But, sir, it ought to be borne in mind, that the Secretary of War was to receive the testimony, the certificate of the court, and, "if then satisfied that the applicant came within the provisions of the act, to place him on the pension list." He formed his opinion from the testimony put into his hands, taken under such regulations, and before such a tribunal as you had prescribed. As before observed, it was thought that the testimony was not procured with that scrupulous attention to correctness, nor the certificates given with that good faith, which was desirable; and, also, that the construction of the law, given by the Secretary of the Department of War, was too liberal. A remedy was necessary. This gave rise to the act of May 1st, 1820. This is more particularly explanatory of the act of March, 1818. Here we learn the intention of Congress on this subject: it is, that all persons, of the description stated in said act, under the circumstances therein mentioned, who then were, or at any future time might be, in such reduced circumstances as to need the assistance of their country for support, should be placed on the pension roll of the United States. In order the more accurately to ascertain the real property of the applicant, and decide correctly whether he was in such reduced circumstances as to need the assistance of his country for support, the law of May 1st, 1820, provides, "that no person who now is, or hereafter may be, placed on the pension list of the United States, by virtue of the act of March, 1818, shall, after the payment of that part of the pension which became due on the 4th of March, 1820, continue to receive such pension until he shall have exhibited to some court of record, &c. a schedule, subscribed by him, containing his whole estate and income, (necessary clothing and bedding excepted,) and shall have taken and subscribed an oath," &c.

FEBRUARY, 1823.

Revolutionary Pensions.

SENATE.

A certified copy of this schedule, oath, and opinion of the court, shall be delivered to the Secretary of War. The second section provides, "That, on the receipt of the copy of the schedule and oath, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Department of War to cause to be stricken from the list of pensioners the name of such person, in case the said person shall not, in his opinion, be in such indigent circumstances as to be unable to support himself without the assistance of his country."

These are the provisions of the law of May 1st, 1820. How to put them into full operation, the honorable Secretary seems to have been at his wit's end. A new course must be adopted—a process which will sweep from the pension roll a great portion of those who deserved well of their country. To effect this, an opinion must be formed; because his opinion is to decide the fate of the applicant, nolens volens. To form an opinion, on principle, some definite rule or standard must be devised and established. And, sir, while attending to this part of his duty, the honorable Secretary seems to have been completely beside himself. In his effort to avoid Scylla, he has fallen upon Charybdis, and while here, he must have settled the rule by which he was to be governed in all his decisions under the operation of the acts of March, 1818, and May, 1820. What is this rule by which the honorable Secretary was to decide all cases under the aforesaid acts? It is this; the property of the applicant is to be estimated by the schedule, deducting therefrom "mortgages given at the time of the purchase of the property, and judgment debts of an old date." This rule we find in an official report made by the honorable Secretary of War. Is not this a singular rule, unreasonable and absurd? Nay, unjust in the extreme? The schedule of an applicant may amount to two hundred dollars. There may be a judgment debt, of recent date, of one hundred and eighty dollars; he may also, in view of his pension, purchase a small piece of land, to the amount of two hundred dollars, and, at the time of purchase, may procure an endorser; but the purchaser, not punctually fulfilling his contract, the endorser becomes dissatisfied, and takes his name from the paper, in consequence of which, the purchaser, to satisfy the grantor, gives a mortgage; this, not being "given at the time of the purchase of the property," although the grantee may not, in fact, be worth one single cent, cannot, by the rule of the honorable Secretary, be deducted from the schedule, any more than the recent judgment debt of one hundred and eighty dollars above stated. Further, the applicant may justly owe, on accounts, notes, or bonds, the full amount of his schedule, nay more, and the honorable Secretary exclude him, under the operation of his rule. This is the practical operation of the rule. This being its operation, I do not hesitate to say, it is unreasonable, absurd, and unjust. Thus we distinctly see, there may be bona fide demands against the applicant, to the full amount of his schedule, and much more, and this proved to the perfect satisfaction of the honorable Secretary of War, and yet, by his rule and dictum, he is stricken from the list. Was there ever a tribunal on earth that decided the real value of a person's estate by what he possessed without reference to what he owed? These are the evils we wish to remove. Sir, the operation of this rule was to strike from the roll a great number of the poorest pensioners on the list. With respect to the quo animo in this case, I make no inquiry; but, as to the quo jure, I do inquire. I distinctly ask, and I hope some honorable gentleman of this House will answer the question, by what sound principle, or rule of law, could such a regulation be established, and such decisions be made? They are beyond my comprehension; this may be owing to the imbecility of my mind; but I hope, if they are within the scope of human intellect, they will be made known, and illustrated by some honorable member of the Senate. Sir, I said some of the poorest pensioners have been stricken from the list, under the operation of those regulations. Many who obtained a pension under the law of March, 1818, were at the time extremely poor, without house or home. Under the expectation of receiving from the Government a small pittance, annually, during life, they made a purchase, of perhaps a few acres of land, with a small house, where they might repose in life, and go down to the grave in peace. On this perchance they might make one payment, and owe the remainder. Their pension is suspended—their means of payment completely destroyed; but they have made a contract, on the faith of your contract, and their contract must be fulfilled; but, your withholding the means, they are utterly unable; the creditor calls, and not only the property just purchased is taken to discharge the demand, but whatever trifle the pensioner might previously possess, is swallowed up in the interest and cost, and he is left perfectly destitute. These are the persons on whom this rule operates most unjustly. They are the most judicious and honest portion of your applicants. They were disposed to make a good use of your act of justice and liberality. They were honest in making their inventory, yea, too honest to come under the operation of the honorable Secretary's rule.

Many of this character are left without a cent; more wretched and miserable than they were when they first received a pension.

The novelty of this rule, and its unjust operation, excited an interest throughout the nation, and a peculiar sensibility in the other House of Congress. The general impression was, that the honorable Secretary would come to himself, and, on reflection, restore to the pension roll some whom he had stricken off, and thrown into despondency and wretchedness, tenfold more distressing than that in which he found them. This reasonable expectation grew out of the peculiar plainness of the law to authorize such an act. Hence, new representations and pressing applications were made for revisions and reversions; but all in vain. The honorable Secretary was inaccessible and immoveable; still, however, he found himself in a dilemma; but, being determined to adhere, he thought to avoid the consequences by dividing the responsibility between himself and the Attorney General. In comes his aid. And what was the result of these combined powers of intellect and law? The Attorney General very gravely says: "I am asked whether the Secretary of War has any power to restore to the list of pensioners, on subsequent and different evidence, the name of any person who may have been stricken off, on the evidence of the schedule: to which I answer, he has not; because the law, which is the only warrant of authority to him, gives him no such power." I consider this opinion an evasion, to say the least. If the Attorney General meant the law of May, 1820, only, this may be less exceptionable, because that law does not touch this particular point. Did not the Attorney General know that the Secretary of War was acting under the express provisions of two laws? That they were both to have influence on his conduct? But, he says, this law gives no power to restore. Very good, there was no need of it; this power was expressly given in the law of March, 1818, and never repealed nor abridged by the law of May, 1820. Hence, I say, that opinion evaded and obscured the real object. What says the law of March, 1818? It is this: "every soldier, &c., who is, or hereafter shall be, by reason of his reduced circumstances in life, in need of assistance from his country for support, shall receive a pension," who then was, or at any future period might be reduced, &c. Here is express power given to the Secretary of War, at any time when he is "satisfied the applicant comes under the provisions of this act," to place him on the pension list. Therefore, no provision is made for the exercise of this power, in the law of May, 1820, because it was distinctly delegated in the previous law, and never repealed or diminished.

Sir, I say, for this appeal there was no necessity; because the law is perfectly intelligible and plain. It is impossible that this provision of the act should be misunderstood. This led me to infer that the real object of the honorable Secretary of War, in appealing to the Attorney General, was not for information on an obscure provision of law, but to divide the responsibility.

Now, sir, with respect to the application of this opinion. It is as arbitrary as the rule of the honorable Secretary is unreasonable. It precludes him from reviewing and judging a second time, on the same subject, under new testimony, and circumstances entirely different. If a person is stricken off, "on the evidence of the schedule," yet, "on subsequent and different evidence," if ever so perfect and satisfactory, he cannot be restored. This is contrary to ordinary judicial proceedings. The Judges of the Circuit Courts can hear and determine; the same cause can be brought up to the Supreme Court, where the same Judges may hear and determine again. But not so in this case. These singular decisions have given rise to the present bill.

We will now inquire into the object of this bill. This may be ascertained by examining its express provisions. "Sec. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be authorized, and he is hereby authorized and required, to restore to the list of pensioners the name of any person who may have been, or hereafter shall be, stricken therefrom in pursuance of the act of Congress, passed May 1, 1820, if such person, so stricken from the list of pensioners, has heretofore furnished, or hereafter shall furnish evidence, in pursuance of the provisions of said act, to satisfy the Secretary of War that he is in such indigent cir-

MARCH, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

'circumstances as to be unable to support himself 'without the assistance of his country.' The second section authorizes a judge, in case the bodily infirmity of a Revolutionary soldier be such that he is unable to attend in open court, to take the schedule and testimony at his residence, and report the same to the court, which, in that case, shall be good and valid. The third section defines the time when the pension shall commence, under this bill.

Sir, let me to ask, what is there unreasonable in the provisions of this bill? You distinctly said, in your first and second laws, that persons so reduced in their circumstances as to be unable to support themselves without the assistance of their country, should receive a pension. You say no more in this. In your second law, you prescribe a mode by which this fact should be ascertained, which, not being construed agreeably to your intention, you propose this bill, to direct a review of the cases erroneously decided under that law. No new power is given by this bill; it is merely saying to the Secretary of War, you now understand our meaning, we require you to exercise the power you now have, and have always had, under the existing pension laws. Is not this proper, just, and necessary? Under the act of March, 1818, 18,418 were placed on the pension list. Under the law of May, 1820, on the 4th of September, 1822, there were 12,331 on the list; death, and the Hon. Secretary of War, have stricken off 6,087. Under the law of May, 1820, there were rejected 2,391; this is the number, and these are the persons, for whom provision is made in this bill: whom, we say, being as meritorious as any now on the list, ought to have the privilege of preferring their claims again, with such testimony as they may be able to furnish. This is all we ask; against its justice, no one can possibly object. For these reasons, I am against the indefinite postponement of the bill, and hope it will pass into a law. Sir, it was my intention to have distinctly shown the favorable operation of this bill upon the Treasury, but the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. MILLS,) having clearly illustrated this fact, I shall add no more, only present my thanks to the Senate, for the attention and candor which they have bestowed upon my remarks.

When Mr. M. had concluded—

The question was taken on indefinite postponement, and decided in the negative—yeas 20, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Brown of Ia., Brown of Ohio, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Gaillard, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Louisiana, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Maryland, Macon, Noble, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, Williams of Mississippi, and Williams of Tennessee.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Boardman, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Kelly, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Mills, Morril, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Stokes, Thomas, and Van Buren.

On motion, by Mr. BARBOUR, that the Senate insist on their said amendment, it was determined in the negative—yeas 21, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Brown of Louisiana, Brown of Ohio, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Gaillard, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, Macon, Noble, Stokes, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Dyke, Williams of Mississippi, and Williams of Tennessee.

NAYS—Messrs. Boardman, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Mills, Morril, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith of Maryland, Southard, Van Buren, and Ware.

SATURDAY, March 1.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a statement of all contracts made by the Post Office Department during the last year; and the letter and statement were read.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Henry P. Wilcox, administrator of Joseph Wilcox, the memorial of William Patterson, and others, merchants, of the city of Baltimore; the memorial of Alfred Moore and Sterling Orgain; the documents in support of the claim of David Cooper; the document in support of the claim of Robert Shaw; the resolution of the Senate in relation to the claim of Jacob Butler; the petition of Joshua Clark; the petition of Daniel Brown; the petition of Augustus Porter, and others; the petition of Samuel Bent; the petition of Jeremiah Downs; the petition of Edward Owings; the petition of Walker K. Armistead; the petition of Richard S. Chappel; the petition of Thomas Eastman; the petition of Samuel Odlin; the petition of John Rodgers, a Cherokee chief; the petition of James Pelot; the petition of D. G. Cowan; and, also, the petition of John Nicholson, marshal of the United States at New Orleans, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

On motion, by Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to lay before the Senate, during the first week of its next session, the amount of interest received or receivable, in each State, on the public debt; the amount of dividends paid or payable, in each State, by the Bank of the United States; all in reference to the year 1823; and the amount of duties on tonnage and imports, received in each port, during the year ending on the 30th of September next; and the amount of the direct taxes still due and unpaid, in each State of the United States.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to lay before the Senate, during the first week of its next session, a list of the factories, in each State, employed in manufacturing for sale such articles as would be liable to duties if imported from foreign countries; the said list to be extracted from the Digest of Manufactures, and such other sources of information as he possesses,

SENATE.

Proceedings.

MARCH, 1823.

or can obtain; and to specify, as far as possible, the capital of each factory, and whether it is incorporated or not by State laws.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to lay before the Senate, during the first week of its next session, the number of Revolutionary pensioners, in each State, then on the pension list; the amount of money received or receivable, in each State, on account of Revolutionary pensioners; and the amount of the expense on account of the Academy at West Point, for one year preceding the 30th of September next.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States, for the year 1823, and for other purposes," reported the same, without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, the Committee on Finance were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Seth Knowles.

Mr. NOBLE presented the petition of Richard Fordham, praying payment of arrears of wages due to him for services rendered during the Revolutionary war, or a pension. The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion, by Mr. PARROT, the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the report of the Secretary of the Navy, exhibiting a statement of the expenditures and unexpended balances; the report of the Commissioners of the Navy Pension Fund; the resolution of the Senate in relation to a bounty on prisoners and guns taken in piratical vessels; the petition of George Ulmer; the petition of Sarah Perry; and also the petition of Susan W. Eakin, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

The resolution offered yesterday by Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, relative to the judgment against William Duane, was taken up and agreed to.

The report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, adverse to transmitting the laws of the several States free of postage, was also taken up and agreed to.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Nimrod Farrow, Richard Harris, and their sureties:" Whereupon, on motion of Mr. BARBOUR, it was concurred in.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri:" Whereupon, they concurred therein.

The bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act further to regulate the entry of merchandise imported into the United States from any adjacent territory,'" was read a third time, as amended, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act for the better organization of the District Court of the United States within the State of Louisiana," was read a third time, as amended, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Captain Richard Hightower," was read a third time, as amended, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1823," was read the third time, as amended, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Navy of the United States for the year 1823," was read a third time, as amended, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act vesting in the State of Virginia the right of the United States to all the fines assessed for non-performance of militia duty, during the late war with Great Britain, within said State," was read the third time, as amended, and passed.

The bills of the following titles were severally read a third time, and passed:

"An act supplementary to 'An act relating to the ransom of American captives of the late war,'" "An act to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois;" "An act extending the time for issuing and locating military land warrants to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary army;" "An act to amend the ordinance and acts of Congress for the government of the Territory of Michigan;" "An act for the relief of James Morrison, of Kentucky;" "An act for the relief of Abraham Snyder;" "An act further to prolong the continuance of the Mint at Philadelphia;" "An act further to extend the provisions of the act, entitled 'An act supplementary to an act, entitled 'An act for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, prior to the first July, 1820,'" "An act to continue in force an act, entitled 'An act regulating the currency within the United States of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, and the crowns of France, and five-franc pieces,' passed on the 29th day of April, 1816, so far as the same relates to the crowns of France, and five-franc pieces;" "An act making the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, receivable in payment on account of public lands;" "An act to extend the time allowed for the redemption of lands sold for direct tax, in certain cases;" "An act for the relief of James Rees, of New York, one of the sureties of Joseph H. Rees, deceased, late assistant deputy paymaster general in the service of the United States;" "An act for the relief of Henry Lee, one of the sureties of John Ricaud, late a paymaster in the service of the United States;" "An act to alter the times of holding the district court of the United States for the district of Vermont;" "An act for the relief of Polly L. Campbell, widow of Colonel John B. Campbell, deceased, late of the 11th regiment of United States infantry;" "An act for the relief of John B. Hogan;" and "An act respecting stamps."

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act to establish a National Armory on the Western waters," with an amendment; and, also, the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the building of lighthouses, light vessels, and beacons, therein mentioned, and for other purposes," with an amendment; in which amendments they request the concurrence of the Senate.

MARCH, 1823.

Military Appropriations.

SENATE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment to the bill last mentioned, and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act to establish a National Armory on the Western waters," and concurred therein.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris;" and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act making further appropriations for the military service of the United States for the year 1823; and, the same having been amended, it was reported to the House accordingly; and, the amendments being concurred in, they were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time, as amended. The bill was then read a third time, as amended, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year 1823," with an amendment, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate. They concur in one, and disagree to the other, amendment of the Senate, to the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the military service for the year 1823."

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendment to the bill last mentioned, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and, on motion, by Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, the Senate receded therefrom.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to their amendment to the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year 1823," and concurred therein.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act altering the time for holding the circuit court in the States of Maine and New Hampshire;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and passed to a third reading; and it was read a third time, by unanimous consent, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the discharge of John Burgin from imprisonment;" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the House, ordered to a third reading, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act respecting the punishment of piracy;" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the House, ordered to a third reading, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for carrying into effect the Convention of Navigation and Commerce between the United States and France, concluded at Washington, on the 24th day of June, 1822;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, and ordered to a third reading, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles Carr, of Kentucky, late paymaster to Colonel Dudley's regiment of Kentucky militia; and no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, ordered to a third reading, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the public buildings," together with the amendment reported thereto by the Committee on Finance; and, the amendment having been agreed to, the bill was reported to the House, amended, accordingly; and, the same being concurred in, the bill was ordered to a third reading, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the resolution to direct the withholding of the compensation of certain prize agents; and, the same having been amended, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the resolution concerning the Indians in the Territory of Florida, and on motion, it was laid on the table.

MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the year 1823.

The Committee of Finance, to which this bill had been referred in the Senate, amongst other items, reported an amendment making an appropriation of $50,000 for the extinguishment of certain Indian reservations of land in the State of Georgia. [This is the same proposition which was so fully discussed in the House of Representatives when the same bill was under consideration, and was lost by a small majority.]

On the question of concurring in this amendment a debate arose of considerable extent—Messrs. HOLMES of Maine, ELLIOTT, MACON, VAN BUREN, and CHANDLER, supporting the appropriation, and Mr. LANMAN opposing it, chiefly on the ground that the act was, at this time, premature and unnecessary. The amendment was agreed to without a division.

The other amendments reported by the Committee of Finance having been discussed and adopted—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, offered as an amendment an additional section, authorizing the President of the United States to apply the unexpended balance of the appropriation of 1820 for the fulfilment of the Choctaw treaty, in obtaining a modification of that treaty, so as to remove the Choctaw Indians beyond the limits of the Territory of Arkansas.

SENATE.

Office of Measurer.

MARCH, 1823.

This amendment was supported by Messrs. JOHNSON of Louisiana, BENTON, and KING of Alabama, and it was agreed to without a division.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and passed.

OFFICE OF MEASURER.

The bill to abolish the office of measurer in the collection of the revenue, and assigning the duties thereof to the inspectors, was taken up.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, explained to the Senate the grounds on which the bill was predicated, and which rendered it expedient. The main reason was, that the office was unnecessary, and had been so stated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, doubting the expediency of pulling down a system of thirty years standing, on such short notice, and questioning, altogether, from his present information, the propriety of the arrangement proposed by the bill, he was opposed to it, and entered into some statements to show why he deemed it inexpedient. He opposed it, however, principally, on the ground that there was not time properly to investigate the subject now, and moved the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, advocated the bill on account of the large amount it would save in the collection of the revenue.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, moved to lay the bill on the table, but the motion was negatived—ayes 17, noes 18.

Some further debate followed on the bill, in which Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, supported the bill, and Mr. PARROT opposed it, who controverted, by calculations and reasoning, the facts and arguments urged in favor of the bill. Mr. LLOYD added some remarks, to show that, if the offices were united, the number of inspectors must be increased in proportion to the number of measurers abolished, so that no saving would take place. He also read a resolution (subjoined) which he should offer, if the bill were postponed.

The question being taken on the indefinite postponement of the bill, it was carried—ayes 19, noes 12.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, then offered the following resolution, which was read and adopted, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to cause to be laid before the Senate, at the commencement of the next session of Congress, the amount received by every officer in the customs, from his per diem and every other allowance to which he is entitled, in consequence of his official employment; and whether any offices may not be abolished consistent with the public interest.

The last clause of the resolution was added at the suggestion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine.

The Senate, then adjourned to five o'clock this evening.

Five o'clock, P. M.

A report was received from the Secretary of War, rendered in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the 27th February, exhibiting the number of officers and soldiers disabled in the service of the United States in the late war, who have been placed on the pension list since the last session, &c., which report was ordered to be printed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Woodson Wren;" and no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the following bills, with amendments, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate: "An act for the relief of Ebenezer Stevens and others;" "An act for the punishment of frauds committed on the Government of the United States;" "An act to continue in force the act, entitled 'An act to provide for reports of decisions of the Supreme Court,' passed the third day of March, 1817;" "An act granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land."

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Ebenezer Stevens and others," and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the punishment of frauds upon the Government of the United States," and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act to continue in force the act, entitled 'An act to provide for reports of decisions of the Supreme Court,' passed the 3d day of April, 1817," and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain sections of land," and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land," and concurred therein.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act for the better organization of the courts of the United States, within the State of New York,'" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Nathan Branson;" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Sophia B. Ford, Nathan Ford, and Jacob Arnold, jr., administrators of the estate of Mahlon Ford, deceased;" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the

MARCH, 1823.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James H. Clark;" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to remit the instalments due on certain lots in Shawneetown, in the State of Illinois," together with the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands; and the same having been agreed to, the bill was reported to the House, amended accordingly; and, the amendments being concurred in, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

[The title was amended so as to strike out "Commissioner of the General Land Office," and insert, in lieu thereof, "Secretary of the Treasury."]

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Spain, the 22d day of February, 1819;" and, the same having been amended, it was reported to the House; and, the amendment being concurred in, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act providing for the examination of the titles to land in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river;" and, the same having been amended, it was reported to the House; and the amendment being concurred in, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Coffee;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to establish an additional land office in the Territory of Michigan;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Department of the Treasury to sell the public lots and other property belonging to the United States, in the District of Columbia;" and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Postmaster General to pay for certain repairs to the General Post Office, and to keep the engine house, the fire engine, and apparatus, in repair;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act concerning invalid pensions;" and the further consideration thereof was indefinitely postponed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the 17th Cox. 2d Sess.—11

Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida, and for other purposes;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the House, read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to discontinue certain post roads and to establish others;" and the same having been amended, it was reported to the House accordingly; and, the amendments being concurred in, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the laying out and opening certain public roads in the Territory of Florida;" and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States for the year 1823, and for other purposes," reported the same with an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, offered an amendment, for the purpose of appropriating the sum of twenty-nine thousand one hundred and seventy-eight dollars for completing the barracks and other public buildings at Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana, and explained at some length the necessity of the appropriation, and earnestly enforced the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, and Mr. MACON, opposed it. Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, Mr. BROWN, of Louisiana, and Mr. BENTON, replied, and supported the amendment. Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, and Mr. VAN BUREN, added a few words in favor of the appropriation. The amendment was adopted. The bill was then ordered to a third reading as amended, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Alexander Montgomery, deceased;" and also the resolution directing the printing of the Journal of Congress from the 5th day of September, 1774, to the 3d day of November, 1786, with amendments, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the last mentioned resolution: whereupon, resolved that they do not concur therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the last mentioned bill, and concurred therein.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act amending and supplementary to the act for ascertaining claims and titles to land in the Territory of Florida, and to provide for the survey and disposal of the public lands in Florida;" and the same having been amended, it was reported to the House; and, the amendments being concurred in, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

A message from the House informed the Senate

SENATE.

Adjournment.

MARCH, 1823.

that the House insist on their amendment to the resolution directing the printing of the Journal of Congress from the 5th day of September, 1774, to the 3d day of November, 1786.

Whereupon, on motion, it was Resolved, That the Senate adhere to their disagreement to the said amendment.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Thaddeus Mayhew," reported the same without amendment; and, on his motion, it was laid on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House adhere to their amendment to the resolution directing the printing of the Journal of Congress, from the 5th day of September, 1774, to the 3d day of November, 1786.

[This being the last day of the session but one, and the joint rule of Congress forbidding that any bill shall be presented to the President of the United States, for his approbation, on the last day, the Senate continued in session until near three o'clock in the morning, considering the remaining bills from the other House; and in reading the third time and passing those bills which had previously, yesterday and to-day, been ordered to a third reading.]

MONDAY, March 3.

On motion by Mr. BARBOUR, the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the memorial of Robert Young and Richard Bland Lee; and the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill, entitled "An act to repeal the third section of the act, entitled 'An act supplementary to an act, entitled

'An act concerning navigation,' were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively, and the bill was laid on the table.

On motion by Mr. NOBLE, the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Richard Fordham, were discharged from the further consideration thereof.

On motion by Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the petition of Benjamin Desobry; the memorial of the Legislature of Louisiana, in relation to the act of Congress of 1819, providing that foreign coins should cease to be current in the United States; the instructions of the Legislature of Alabama, in relation to a tonnage duty on all vessels coming to the ports of Mobile and Blakeley; the memorial of the same Legislature, requesting a treaty may be held with the Cherokee nation of Indians; and, also, the resolution in relation to the silver coins of Mexico, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, respectively.

Having received official information that the President of the United States had approved the several bills presented for his signature,

The Senate appointed Mr. MACON and Mr. KING, of New York, to give the customary notice to the President of the United States, that they had completed all the legislative business before them, and were ready to adjourn.

The Senate then went into the consideration of Executive business, and continued so occupied until half past 3 o'clock; when they adjourned to 6 o'clock, P. M.

At six o'clock the Senate resumed its session, and continued with closed doors (deliberating on Executive nominations, it was understood,) until a late hour; when the Senate adjourned sine die.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

AT THE SECOND SESSION OF THE SEVENTEENTH CONGRESS, BEGUN AT THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, MONDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1822.

MONDAY, December 2, 1822.

At 12 o'clock, precisely, the Speaker, (Mr. P. P. BARBOUR, of Virginia,) took the chair, and Mr. SAMUEL BURCH, principal clerk in the office of Clerk of the House of Representatives, called over the roll of members, when it appeared that the following members were present, viz :

From Maine.—Joshua Cushman, Joseph Dane, Ebenezer Herrick, Mark L. Hill, Enoch Lincoln, and William D. Williamson.

From New Hampshire.—Josiah Butler, Matthew Harvey, Aaron Matson, William Plumer, jr., Nathaniel Upham, and Thomas Whipple, jr.

From Massachusetts.—Samuel C. Allen, Francis Baylies, Lewis Bigelow, Henry W. Dwight, William Eustis, Timothy Fuller, Benjamin Gorham, Aaron Hobart, Jeremiah Nelson, John Reed, and Jonathan Russell.

From Rhode Island.—Job Durfee, and Samuel Eddy.

From Connecticut.—Noyes Barber, Henry W. Edwards, John Russ, Ansel Sterling, Ebenezer Stoddard, and Gideon Tomlinson.

From Vermont.—Samuel C. Crafts, Elias Keys, Rollin C. Mallary, John Mattocks, and Phineas White.

From New York.—Churchill C. Cambreleng, Samuel Campbell, Alfred Conkling, John D. Dickinson, John Gebhard, James Hawks, Thomas H. Hubbard, Joseph Kirkland, Elisha Litchfield, Richard McCarty, Walter Patterson, Jeremiah H. Pierson, Nathaniel Pitcher, William B. Rochester, Charles H. Ruggles, Cadwalader D. Colden, Micah Sterling, John W. Taylor, Albert H. Tracy, Stephen Van Rensselaer, William W. Van Wyck, Reuben H. Walworth, Silas Wood, and David Woodcock.

From New Jersey.—Ephraim Bateman, George Casedy, Lewis Condict, George Holcombe, James Matlack, and Samuel Swan.

From Pennsylvania.—John Brown, William Darlington, George Denison, Samuel Edwards, Patrick Farrelly, John Findlay, Samuel Gross, Joseph Hemphill, James McSherry, James S. Mitchell, Thomas Murray, jr., Thomas Patterson, John Phillips, George Plumer, Thomas J. Rogers, and John Tod.

From Delaware.—Louis McLane.

From Maryland.—Philip Reed, Joseph Kent, Peter Little, John Nelson, Samuel Smith, Henry R. Warfield, and Robert Wright.

From Virginia.—Mark Alexander, William S. Archer, Burwell Bassett, Robert S. Garnett, Edward B. Jackson, James Jones, William McCoy, Charles F. Mercer, Hugh Nelson, Thomas Newton, John Randolph, Arthur Smith, Alexander Smyth, Andrew Stevenson, George Tucker, and Jared Williams.

From North Carolina.—William S. Blackledge, Hutchins G. Burton, Henry Conner, Weldon N. Edwards, Thomas H. Hall, Charles Hooks, John Long, Archibald McNeil, Romulus Sanders, Felix Walker, and Lewis Williams.

From South Carolina.—Joseph Gist, Thomas R. Mitchell, Starling Tucker, and John Wilson.

From Georgia.—Joel Abbot, George R. Gilmer, Edward F. Tatnall, and Wiley Thompson.

From Kentucky.—James D. Breckenridge, Benjamin Hardin, Francis Johnson, John T. Johnson, Thos. Metcalfe, Thomas Montgomery, Anthony New, David Trimble, and Samuel H. Woodson.

From Tennessee.—Robert Allen, Newton Cannon, John Cocke, Francis Jones, and John Rhea.

From Ohio.—Levi Barber, David Chambers, Thos. R. Ross, John Sloane, and Joseph Vance.

From Louisiana.—Josiah Stoddard Johnston.

From Mississippi.—Christopher Rankin.

From Illinois.—Daniel P. Cook.

From Alabama.—Gabriel Moore.

From Missouri.—John Scott.

The following new members appeared, to wit :

From Maine.—Mark Harris, in the room of Ezekiel Whitman, resigned.

From Pennsylvania.—Walter Forward, in the room of Henry Baldwin, resigned; and Thomas Forrest, in the room of William Milnor, resigned.

From Delaware.—Daniel Rodney, in the room of Cæsar A. Rodney, resigned.

From Virginia.—James Stephenson, in the room of Thomas Van Swearingen, deceased; and

From Indiana.—Jonathan Jennings, in the room of William Hendricks, resigned—

Who severally produced their credentials, were qualified, and took their seats.

JAMES WOODSON BATES, the Delegate from the Territory of Arkansas, also appeared and took his seat.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, a message was ordered to be sent to the Senate, informing that body that a quorum of this House was formed, and was ready to proceed to business.

H. OF R.

Election of Clerk.

DECEMBER, 1822.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, also, it was ordered, that a committee be appointed, to act jointly with such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that the two Houses were in session, and ready to receive any communication which he might have to make to them.

BALLOTING FOR CLERK.

After receiving a message from the Senate, by their Secretary, that they had formed a quorum—

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, it was ordered, that the House do now proceed to the election of a Clerk, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Thomas Dougherty, esquire, late Clerk of this House.

This being an office to which persons other than members of the House may be elected, nominations of candidates are, by the rules of the House, required previous to election; and twenty persons were nominated as candidates for the office.

The balloting took place.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee of Tellers, reported, that the whole number of votes given in was 154, of which William Milnor received 14, Samuel Burch 10, Levi H. Clarke 19, B. S. Chambers 17, S. D. Franks 15, Tobias Watkins 12, Robert Temple 13, Edward W. Du Val 5, S. A. Foot 9, James H. Pleasants 13, Mr. Briggs 5, J. S. Williams 4, M. St. C. Clarke 9, and of the other votes not more than three were given to any candidate.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, reported that the committee had performed that duty, and had received for answer that the President would, to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, make a communication to the House in writing.

Another balloting then took place for Clerk, the result of which was as follows: Whole number of votes 140; for Mr. Temple 15, Mr. Foot 9, Mr. L. H. Clarke 22, Mr. Milnor 12, Mr. Franks 13, Mr. M. St. Clair Clarke, 12, Mr. Burch 6, Mr. Watkins 10, Mr. Chambers 20, Mr. Goldsborough 4, Mr. Pleasants 13; no one other person voted for having more than three of the remaining votes.

A third balloting then took place, which resulted as follows: Whole number 149; for Mr. Temple 23, Mr. Foot 8, Mr. L. H. Clarke 24, Mr. Milnor 9, Mr. Franks 13, Mr. M. St. Clair Clarke 14, Mr. Watkins 12, Mr. Chambers 20, Mr. Pleasants 15, no one other person voted for having received more than four votes.

A fourth balloting then took place, in which Mr. Temple received 28 votes, Mr. Foot 6, Mr. L. H. Clarke 26, Mr. Milnor 7, Mr. Franks 8, Mr. M. St. C. Clarke, 17, Mr. Goldsborough 7, Mr. Watkins 6, Mr. Chambers 25, Mr. Pleasants 17.

A fifth balloting took place, which gave to Mr. Temple 46 votes, Mr. L. H. Clarke 21, Mr. Franks 20, Mr. M. St. C. Clarke 21, Mr. Chambers 28, Mr. Pleasants 8, and there were 9 scattering votes.

The sixth balloting gave to Mr. Temple 54, Mr. L. H. Clarke 12, Mr. Chambers 29, Mr. M. St. C. Clarke, 24, Mr. Pleasants 17, Mr. Franks 9, and 3 scattering votes.

The House then adjourned, without, having made an election of Clerk.

TUESDAY, December 3.

Several other members, to wit: From Connecticut, DANIEL BURROWS; from New York, CHAS. BORLAND, jr., and JOHN J. MORGAN; from Maryland, RAPHAEL NEALE; from Virginia, WILLIAM SMITH, JOHN FLOYD, and THOMAS L. MOORE; from Kentucky, JOHN SPEED SMITH; and from Ohio, JOHN W. CAMPBELL, appeared and took their seats.

The SPEAKER laid before the House letters from the Secretaries of the State, Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, and from the Postmaster General, each transmitting a report of the number of officers and messengers retained in their respective departments, which were severally ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, enclosing authentic returns of the election of THOMAS FORREST, SAMUEL D. INGHAM, and WALTER FORWARD, to serve in this House as Representatives of that State in the room of WILLIAM MILNOR, SAMUEL MOORE, and HENRY BALDWIN, who have resigned; which letter and returns were ordered to lie on the table.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, which was read, and committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and five thousand copies thereof, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed for the use of the members of this House.

[For this Message, see Senate proceedings, ante page 12.]

ELECTION OF CLERK.

The House then proceeded to ballot (the 7th time) for a person to fill the vacancy of Clerk of the House, in the place of the late Thomas Dougherty, Esq., and the votes were as follows:

For Robert Temple,	46	For John H. Pleasants,	12
B. S. Chambers,	26	William Milnor,	11
Levi H. Clarke,	19	M. St. C. Clarke,	5*
S. D. Franks,	16	Tobias Watkins,	3
Samuel A. Foot,	13

The eighth ballot gave—

For Mr. Temple,	47	For Mr. Foot,	16
Mr. Chambers,	25	Mr. Pleasants,	3
Mr. L. H. Clarke,	5	Mr. Milnor,	9
Mr. Franks,	20	Mr. St. C. Clarke,	29

The ninth ballot gave—

For Mr. Temple,	50	For Mr. Foot,	16
Mr. Chambers,	23	Mr. St. C. Clarke,	45
Mr. Franks,	15

* In this report of the Tellers, there was an error, as afterwards appeared. The votes placed to the credit of Levi H. Clarke were mostly intended for Mr. M. St. C. Clarke.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Standing Committees.

H. OF R.

The tenth ballot gave—
 For Mr. Temple, 55 For Mr. Foot, 13
 Mr. Chambers, 7 Mr. St. C. Clarke, 71
 Mr. Franks, 2

The eleventh ballot gave—
 For Mr. St. C. Clarke, 98 For Mr. Temple, 48
 Scattering, 4

So MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE, having a majority of all the votes, was declared by the SPEAKER to be duly elected Clerk of this House.

MR. CLARKE accordingly attended, and was sworn into office.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

On motion of MR. LITTLE, it was ordered that the SPEAKER be directed to appoint the Standing Committees of this House, when the following Standing Committees were announced:

Committee of Elections.—Mr. Sloane, Mr. Edwards of North Carolina, Mr. Kirkland, Mr. Moore of Virginia, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Mallary, and Mr. Tucker of South Carolina.

Committee of Ways and Means.—Mr. Smith of Maryland, Mr. McLane, Mr. Mitchell of South Carolina, Mr. Jones of Tennessee, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Andrew Stevenson, and Mr. Cambreleng.

Committee of Claims.—Mr. Williams of North Carolina, Mr. McCoy, Mr. Edwards of Connecticut, Mr. Litchfield, Mr. Forrest, Mr. Matson, and Mr. Reed of Maryland.

Committee of Commerce.—Mr. Newton, Mr. Tomlinson, Mr. Hill, Mr. Abbot, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Hardin, and Mr. Durfee.

Committee of Public Lands.—Mr. Rankin, Mr. Scott, Mr. Cook, Mr. Cannon, Mr. Sterling of New York, Mr. Bassett, and Mr. Jennings.

Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.—Mr. Francis Johnson, Mr. Hooks, Mr. Gross, Mr. Stoddard, Mr. Campbell of New York, Mr. Bateman, and Mr. Wilson.

Committee for the District of Columbia.—Mr. Kent, Mr. Mercer, Mr. Neale, Mr. Matlack, Mr. Patterson of Pennsylvania, Mr. Rochester, and Mr. James Stephenson.

Committee on the Judiciary.—Mr. Nelson of Virginia, Mr. Plumer of New Hampshire, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Burton, Mr. Sanders, Mr. Johnston of Louisiana, and Mr. Hemphill.

Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims.—Mr. Rhea, Mr. Little, Mr. Eddy, Mr. Allen of Tennessee, Mr. Wm. Smith, Mr. Hubbard, and Mr. Barber of Ohio.

Committee on Public Expenditures.—Mr. Montgomery, Mr. Dwight, Mr. Crafts, Mr. Gebhard, Mr. Gist, Mr. Tatnall, and Mr. Harris.

Committee on Private Land Claims.—Mr. Campbell of Ohio, Mr. Conkling, Mr. Moore of Alabama, Mr. Upham, Mr. Sterling of Connecticut, Mr. Crudup, and Mr. Van Rensselaer.

Committee on Manufactures.—Mr. Tod, Mr. Woodson, Mr. Floyd, Mr. Conner, Mr. Nelson of Maryland, Mr. Condict, and Mr. Forward.

Committee on Agriculture.—Mr. Butler, Mr. Baylies, Mr. Garnett, Mr. McNeil, Mr. Vance, Mr. Findlay, and Mr. New.

Committee on Indian Affairs.—Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Bigelow, Mr. Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Mr. Mercer, Mr. McCarty, Mr. Williamson, and Mr. Williams of Virginia.

Committee on Foreign Affairs.—Mr. Russell, Mr. Wright, Mr. Trimble, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Archer, Mr. Farrelly, and Mr. Rodney.

Committee on Military Affairs.—Mr. Eustis, Mr. Cocke, Mr. Walworth, Mr. Darlington, Mr. Smith of Kentucky, Mr. McCoy, and Mr. Mattocks.

Committee on Naval Affairs.—Mr. Fuller, Mr. Randolph, Mr. Gilmer, Mr. Colden, Mr. Warfield, Mr. Plumer of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Harvey.

Committee on Revision and Unfinished Business.—Mr. Ross, Mr. Hawks, and Mr. Brown of Pennsylvania.

Committee on Accounts.—Mr. Allen of Massachusetts, Mr. Swan and Mr. Ruggles.

On motion of MR. HILL, the Clerk was directed to cause the members of this House to be furnished with such newspapers as they may elect; the expense of each member not to exceed the price of three daily papers.

WEDNESDAY, December 4.

Another member, to wit: from North Carolina, JOSIAH CRUDUP, appeared, and took his seat.

A new member, to wit: from South Carolina, ANDREW R. GOVAN, elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of James Overstreet, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat.

On motion of MR. COCKE, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the expediency of prescribing by law a mode by which the Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress shall receive their compensation; and also a mode by which the contingent expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be liquidated.

On motion of MR. MOORE, of Alabama, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing the State of Alabama three Representatives, in conformity with the section of the act, entitled "An act for the apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the fourth census."

MR. BATEMAN proposed to proceed to-morrow to elect a Chaplain on the part of this House; but the joint resolution on the subject not having yet come down from the Senate, Mr. B. waived his motion for the present.

On motion of MR. WALWORTH, the credentials of the newly-elected members were referred to the Committee of Privileges and Elections.

THE MILITIA.

MR. WHIFFLE, of New Hampshire, offered for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the act making provision for arming and equipping the whole body of the militia of the United States passed April 23, 1808, so that the arms, provided in virtue of said act, and transmitted to the several States composing this Union, and the Territories thereof, shall, by each State and Territory, be deposited and kept in proper arsenals, to be provided by such State or Territory, to be delivered to the militia thereof only when they may be called into actual service.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, suggested that the committee to be appointed on the general subject of this resolution would seem to be the proper one to which to refer the consideration of this resolution. At the last session, Mr. T. had himself been of opinion that all subjects connected with the militia and with the army, should be referred to the same committee. But, on the motion of a gentleman from Tennessee, a different direction had been given to them, so as to refer to separate committees what related to the militia and to the army. This course having been pursued at the first session of the present Congress, he thought it ought to be persevered in at this session, to the end that the same gentlemen, or nearly the same, being appointed on the same committees, the House might have the advantage of the information gained and the reflection bestowed upon the subjects at the last session. For the present, therefore, he moved that this resolve should lie on the table, until the committees should have been appointed on the President's Message.

Mr. WHIPPLE assenting to this course, the resolve was ordered to lie on the table.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The House then, on motion of Mr. TAYLOR, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the President's Message—Mr. CONDIOT being called to the Chair.

Mr. TAYLOR proposed the following resolves:

1. Resolved, That so much of the Message of the President of the United States as relates to the Convention of Navigation and Commerce between the United States and France, and the commerce between the United States and the British colonies, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the ninth article of the Treaty with Spain, by which Florida was ceded to the United States, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the subject of revenue, be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

4. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the Military Establishment, the Academy at West Point, fortifications, and arsenals, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to organizing, arming, and disciplining the Militia, be referred to a select committee.

6. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the Navy and the suppression of piracy, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

7. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the suppression of the Slave Trade, be referred to a select committee.

8. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the execution of the "Act to abolish the United States Trading Establishments," and the condition of the Indians in the Territory of Florida, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

9. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to Manufactures, and the appointment of an agent to superintend the lead mines, be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

10. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the Cumberland Road, be referred to a select committee.

11. Resolved, That the said select committees have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

These resolves were agreed to without debate or opposition, and, the SPEAKER having resumed the Chair, they were all in like manner concurred in, with the exception of that which refers to the African slave trade.

That resolution being before the House—

Mr. WRIGHT, of Maryland, said, that his desire to have the resolution relative to the African slave trade considered by itself did not proceed from any objection to that resolution, but from a desire to impress the House with its importance, and lead to such measures as might effectually, as far as depended on the American Government, effect the entire suppression of the slave trade. The American people, coevally with the formation of their Government, by an article of that instrument, laid the foundation for the suppression of that nefarious traffic, against which every American heart revolts.

This subject, Mr. W. said, had been referred to select committees at the last two sessions of Congress, which had each represented the facts deemed important by them, and severally recommended a resolution, "that the President be requested to enter into such arrangements as he may deem suitable and proper, with one or more of the maritime Powers of Europe, for the effectual abolition of the slave trade." By some of these Powers, it had been thought indispensable, to effect that object, that a right of search should be granted to a certain number of ships of the contracting parties of equal force, especially licensed, and within a certain limit authorized to exercise that right. The American Government had felt an indisposition to adopt that mode, from apprehensions that it might be abused, and from a doubt of their Constitutional powers. Mr. W. said it would be found that this is the only effective measure to secure that important purpose; and he hoped that the committee might, at an early period, bring this subject before us in a shape to lead to such a direction to it as may produce the philanthropic effect; and that America, who led the way in this great work of humanity, may be able, within the powers delegated by the Constitution, to act in concert with the European Powers engaged in the suppression of that traffic; and, if it shall be found that they cannot be exercised under our Constitution, that it may be so altered as to leave no impediment to so desirable an object.

Mr. TAYLOR said that the importance of this subject could not be denied; and the motives which had induced him to propose the appointment of a select committee on the subject of the slave trade, had been in a good degree stated by the gentleman from Maryland. The question of the measures necessary for the suppression of piracy had been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, one of the standing committees of the House, because that subject was not supposed to involve any important question of national law. But the subject of measures for the suppression of the slave trade was one of the most difficult and delicate, as well as important, that could be brought before the Legislature. It was with a view of having the subject fully investigated, in order to ascertain whether a just, safe, and honorable arrangement might not be made with other Governments, to effect its total suppression, that he had wished it to be referred to a select committee.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Election of Chaplain.

H. OF R.

Mr. WRIGHT added, that he discovered, from the report from Sierra Leone, that two hundred free blacks had been taken by the brig Camperdown, and a great number of free negroes from the same place, by the schooner Mulatto. Vide 45th page, Report last session. He had particularly adverted to this subject, he said, with a sincere hope to enlist the sympathies of this House, and to lead to such an investigation of the facts, that every effort of the nation may be put in operation to abolish this impious traffic.

The resolution was then agreed to, nem. con.

Mr. CANNON, Mr. McCARTY, Mr. FINDLAY, Mr. ARTHUR SMITH, Mr. JOHN T. JOHNSON, Mr. SANDERS, and Mr. REED of Massachusetts, were appointed a committee on the subject of the militia, in pursuance of the fifth resolution.

Mr. GORHAM, Mr. PHILLIPS, Mr. GOVAN, Mr. BORLAND, Mr. JONES of Virginia, Mr. HALL, and Mr. HERRICK, were appointed a committee on the subject of the slave trade, in pursuance of the seventh resolution.

Mr. HEMPHILL, Mr. PITCHER, Mr. RUSS, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. LONG, Mr. CUSHMAN, and Mr. STEWART, were appointed a committee on the subject of the Cumberland road, in pursuance of the tenth resolution.

THURSDAY, December 5.

Another member, to wit: from Pennsylvania, ANDREW STEWART, appeared, and took his seat.

On motion of Mr. HARDIN, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing ports of entry and delivery at Louisville in Kentucky, Cincinnati in Ohio, and St. Louis in Missouri.

On motion of Mr. HALL, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Fayetteville, in North Carolina, to Norfolk, in Virginia; and from thence, up the bay, by steamboat carriage, to Baltimore, or such other place as will be most convenient, at all seasons of the year, to form a junction with the main stage road.

On motion of Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, the Committee of the whole House, to which is committed the bill to revive and amend the several acts imposing duties on imports and tonnage, were discharged from the further consideration thereof; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means.

On motion of Mr. BRECKENRIDGE, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a manufactory of arms on the Western waters.

On motion of Mr. WHIPPLE, the House proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him yesterday, and laid on the table; and being modified by the mover, by substituting the Committee on the Militia for the Committee on Military Affairs, was in that shape agreed to by the House.

CLAIM OF BEAUMARCHAIS.

Mr. A. STEVENSON, of Virginia, called the attention of the House to a communication made at a late period of the last session of Congress, by the President of the United States, transmitting to the House the correspondence which had taken place between the French Government and the United States relative to the claim of the heirs of Beaumarchais. The subject had then been referred to a select committee, which did not report upon it. He now moved that the subject be again referred to a select committee.

Mr. CONDUIT suggested that the better course would be to refer the subject to the Committee of Claims for investigation, and made a motion accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina said that this claim differed from ordinary claims so far (the evidence in support of it being so voluminous, and the questions it embraced of such magnitude and difficulty) that it ought not to take the course of common cases of claims, but should be referred to a select committee. He intimated, further, that no committee could properly examine the questions involved in this claim, without devoting nearly the whole session to it.

Mr. STEVENSON further supported the reference to a select committee in preference to the standing committee; when—

The question on referring it to the Committee of Claims was taken, and decided in the negative. And the subject was referred to a select committee of five members; and Mr. ANDREW STEVENSON, Mr. CAMBRELENG, Mr. FRANCIS JOHNSON, Mr. DWIGHT, and Mr. HOLCOMBE, were appointed the said committee.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN

The resolution from the Senate for the choice of two Chaplains—one for each House—having been received, was taken up, and concurred in. And, on motion of Mr. BATEMAN, the House proceeded to make a choice by ballot of a Chaplain on its part. Mr. COCKE, from the committee of Tellers, reported the following as the result of—

The first ballot.

Rev. Mr. Allison	- 38	Rev. Mr. McIlvaine	- 6
" Peyton	- 35	" Breckenridge	2
" Post	- 32	" Baker	- 2
" Bryce	- 14	" Hunter	- 1
" Chambers	- 16

H. OF R.

Disbursement of Public Moneys.

DECEMBER, 1822.

The second ballot.

Rev. Mr. Breckenridge	32	Rev. Mr. Peyton	- 18
" Allison	- 29	" Chambers	- 7
" Post	- 27	" Bryce	- 6
" McIlvaine	- 27	Scattering	- 5

The third ballot.

Rev. Mr. Breckenridge	50	Rev. Mr. Peyton	- 7
" McIlvaine	- 32	" Bryce	- 4
" Allison	- 29	Scattering	- 6
" Post	- 28

The fourth ballot.

Rev. Mr. Breckenridge	69	Rev. Mr. Post	- 18
" McIlvaine	- 39	Scattering	- 3
" Allison	- 18

The fifth ballot.

Rev. Mr. Breckenridge	97	Rev. Mr. Post	- 8
" McIlvaine	- 32	" Allison	- 3

So the Rev. Mr. BRECKENRIDGE, of Kentucky, was elected Chaplain on the part of this House.

FRIDAY, December 6.

Another member, to wit: from Virginia, JABEZ LEFTWICH, appeared, and took his seat.

A new member, to wit: from Pennsylvania, SAMUEL D. INGHAM, elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Samuel Moore, also appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

SOLOMON SIBLEY, the Delegate from the Territory of Michigan, also appeared, and took his seat.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, the petitions of sundry inhabitants of the parish of Ouachita, in the State of Louisiana, owners of a tract of land called "Bastrop's Grant," and others on their behalf, heretofore presented on the 9th and 30th of January, 1822, were referred to a select committee; and Messrs. McLANE, INGHAM, TATNALL, JONES of Tennessee, and BLACKLEDGE, were appointed the said committee.

On motion of Mr. COCKE, the subject of Revolutionary Pensions was referred to a select committee; and Messrs. COCKE, HORART, CASSEDY, BURROWS, VAN WYCK, McSHERRY, and WALKER, were appointed the said committee.

On motion of Mr. ANDREW STEVENSON, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing for a further time the act, entitled "An act to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office."

On motion of Mr. NEWTON, the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill to provide for sick and disabled seamen, were discharged from the consideration thereof, and it was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The House adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 9.

Another member, to wit: from Massachusetts, SAMUEL LATHROP, appeared, and took his seat.

On motion of Mr. MALLARY, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were directed to inquire into the expediency of allowing such persons, who may have been stricken from the pension roll, to make new application, and be placed thereon, on complying with the requisitions of the pension laws of 1818 and 1820.

On motion of Mr. COOK, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, alterations or amendments of the act, entitled "An act providing for the correction of errors in making entries of land at the land offices," are necessary to be made, so as to afford relief in all cases where such relief may be just and proper.

On motion of Mr. McSHERRY, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the provisions of the act for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands, passed on the 2d of March, 1821, so as to permit all such persons to avail themselves of its provisions, as have not heretofore done so.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Secretary of War of the 2d of May last, on the petition of Moses Bursell: Whereupon, the report and petition were referred to the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill supplementary to, and to amend, an act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," passed 2d of March, 1799, and to repeal an act supplementary thereto, passed 20th of April, 1818, and for other purposes, reported to this House by the Committee of Ways and Means on the 12th of March last, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The Committee of the whole House to which is committed the report of the Committee of Claims, of the last session, on the petition of Nathaniel Childers, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and the said report and petition were recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Postmaster General, stating the number of active and well qualified clerks and accountants which are necessary to perform the duties appertaining to his Department, by giving a reasonable, constant, and diligent attention to business; made in obedience to a resolution of this House of the 7th of May last; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

DISBURSEMENT OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

On motion of Mr. BASSETT, the House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill, reported at the last session, "concerning the disbursement of public moneys."

The bill having been read—

Mr. BASSETT, as a member of the committee which prepared this bill, stated the general views on which it was founded. This bill, he said, had been drawn with a great degree of caution, so as, by embracing all cases in which advances could be necessary, to take away any possible objection which could be made against it; and it had afterwards been submitted to the Treasury Department to undergo any alterations which it might appear to require. The jeopardizing of the public money was of that character, Mr. B. said, and the consequent waste of it so enormous, that it was time for this House to look into it. At the last session of Congress, a catalogue of defalcations had been presented, which astonished everybody, embracing a range, the extent of which could hardly have been conceived. Mr. B. recalled the attention of the House also to one or two facts stated in the President's Message. The fact was there disclosed, that, at one time, accounts for one hundred millions of dollars advanced for different objects remained unsettled. Such an amount, dependent on the personal responsibility of individuals, at once tells us how careful Congress ought to be in trusting so great an interest in the hands of public agents. If it had been found that this great trust had been confided to them without injury to the public interest, legislation on the subject might be less necessary; but such was not the fact. At the last session, the House was presented with a large amount of balances due by individuals, and supposed to be lost; and the Message of the President spoke of several millions of suspended accounts. Mr. B. said he had been told that, since the last session of Congress, public officers had gone off the stage of life considerably indebted to the Government—officers, too, in whom the greatest confidence had been placed. This showed, he said, that it was time to change the present system. It was most obvious, if we took the reason of the thing, the history of other countries, or the experience of this, that it was necessary to exercise a more rigorous control over the disbursements of public moneys. It was more than probable, Mr. B. continued, that on the first establishment of this Government, the different State institutions having little connexion or sympathy with one another, it was not very easy to transact the fiscal business of the nation, or to carry money from one part of it to the other, &c.; but the Government had been now established for forty years, and every difficulty of that sort had ceased. Could it be right, on the plea of enabling the poor man to be employed in public service, that the public money should be put in jeopardy? It was not necessary, he said, that it should be so, for the moment the Government makes a contract, the contractor has credit to the amount of his contract, and can borrow or buy upon that credit. It was not true, in fact, that advances were necessary, and it could not therefore be right to make them. These, Mr. B. said, were some of the general views which led the committee to prepare the bill now under consideration, and present it to the House. If the bill were to go through the committee, without amendment, he should then, to afford to gentlemen all proper time to consider the subject, move to lay it on the table.

DECEMBER, 1822.

American Captives.

H. OF R.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, suggested that few of the members had preserved the printed copies of the bill from the last session; and, as the subject was of some magnitude, he thought the members ought to have an opportunity to examine it. He therefore, with this view, moved that the Committee should rise.

The Committee rose accordingly, and the bill was ordered to be printed.

THE MILITIA.

The next business on the list of orders of the day was two bills, the one for disciplining the militia of the United States, and the other for clothing them at the public expense when called into actual service. The House having resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole thereon, the first of these bills was read.

Mr. CANNON made a few remarks expressive of his conviction of the importance of the subject of the bill, and of his warmest desire to draw the attention of the members to it. All that he now proposed in relation to it was, to incorporate in it the amendments which were recommended at the last session, by the committee which reported it; after which he was willing that the bill should lie on the table for the present, with a view to its being printed as amended.

Mr. REED, of Maryland, said that he did not know that he should vote for the bill in any shape; but he was certain he could not vote for it now, not having the bill before him, and not being able to understand it as read from the Chair. He wished to have it printed, that the House might act on it understandingly.

On the suggestion of Mr. LITTLE, the Committee rose, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Militia, there to be amended, that it might be presented to the House at once in the shape in which the Committee wished to have it.

On the other bill, (for clothing the militia,) the Committee obtained leave to sit again.

AMERICAN CAPTIVES.

The next bill in order was the bill reported at the last session, supplementary to the act for the relief of American captives during the late war; and, on motion of Mr. SIBLEY, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the subject. The bill was read through.

Mr. SIBLEY briefly stated the object of the bill. After the surrender of Detroit during the late war, and subsequent to the defeat afterwards sustained, in 1813, many persons taken under our standard were brought captive by the Indians to and through Detroit. The citizens of Detroit, moved at the spectacle, though themselves at the time in a state of vassalage, exerted themselves to relieve the sufferers, and employed in that manner all the money they could raise. These facts were made known to Congress, and an act was passed to reimburse to them the money thus advanced. But the act was of that narrow construction, that it was not at all calculated to give the relief contemplated by it. It required, in the first place, that the persons relieved from captivity should be American citizens; which, in the first place, was hardly susceptible of proof, and, if it were, was not material, where the individuals were taken

H. OF R.

Roads and Canals.

DECEMBER, 1822.

under the American flag. Another requisition of that law was, that written evidence of the amount paid, or a receipt for the ransom money, should be produced, to entitle to relief. Now, Mr. S. said, the money was paid to Indians; and every one must know that they give no receipts for ransoms, and that such a receipt, if given, would be good for nothing, inasmuch as an Indian would as readily give a receipt for ten thousand dollars as for ten. In the agitation, alarm, and hurry of the times, the people did not calculate where or how they were to get their money again, and thought of nothing less than the taking receipts for it, &c. Besides, Mr. S. said, clothing was furnished to the captives, the season being inclement, and they literally naked. For this, also, the citizens of Detroit ought to be remunerated. The claims embraced in this bill, he said, were altogether bottomed on humanity, and he trusted that the patriotic exertions made by the people of Detroit, whilst they themselves were oppressed by the presence of an enemy, would not be disregarded, but that they would at length be repaid the money which they had advanced almost ten years ago.

No other remarks being made on the bill, the Committee rose and reported it to the House, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

The next subject in order was a resolution proposed at the last session for carrying into effect a certain agreement between the United States and Georgia. Before taking that up, however, a motion was made to adjourn, and prevailed.

TUESDAY, December 10.

Mr. Ross, from the Committee of Revisal and Unfinished Business made a report, in part, of such business as remained unfinished at the close of the late session of Congress, which report was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. WALWORTH, the Committee on Military Affairs was instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President of the United States to cause to be delivered to Captain Aikin's volunteers certain rifles promised them by Major General Macomb, for their gallantry and patriotic services during the siege of Plattsburg, in September 1814.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMSON, the Committee on Military Affairs was instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a battery or other fortification on the west side of Penobscot river, in the town of Prospect, and State of Maine, near the head of Orphan Island, and opposite the Narrows, so called, in said river.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, the bill, reported at the last session, entitled "A bill to procure the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, on the subject of roads and canals," was now referred to a Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. Woodcock laid on the table the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before this House a statement showing the amount of all moneys advanced by Government, on contracts or otherwise, either to agents, sub-agents, contractors, sub-contractors, or to individuals, since the 1st of January, 1816, which have not been accounted for on settlement; and the amount of loss, (if any,) sustained in each; and whether, in all cases, on the advancement of money, security has been taken, and the names of the sureties.

All resolutions, like this, calling for information, lie upon the table one day of course, by the rules of the House.

On motion of Mr. KENT, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, reported at the last session, for the establishment of a Penitentiary in the District of Columbia, and it was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. F. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the widowed mother of Lieutenant W. H. Allen, of the United States Navy, a half-pay pension for five years.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, upon the progress which has been made in the public buildings within the last year; which was ordered to lie on the table, no committee having been appointed on the subject of the public buildings.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Secretary of War, of the number of active and well qualified clerks and accountants which will be necessary to perform the duties of his office, by giving a reasonably constant, and diligent attention to business; made in obedience to a resolution of the 7th of May last; which report was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act relating to the ransom of American captives of the late war," was read the third time, and passed.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have chosen the Rev. CHARLES P. McILVAINE Chaplain to Congress on their part; they have passed two resolutions, one for the appointment of a joint committee on enrolled bills, the other, for the appointment of a joint committee to have the application of the money appropriated for the Library of Congress; in which resolutions they ask the concurrence of this House.

ROADS AND CANALS.

On motion of Mr. COOK, of Illinois, it was

Resolved, That so much of the several acts of Congress passed for the admission of Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, into the Union, as sets apart a portion of the money arising from the sale of the public lands in those States, for the purpose of constructing roads and canals leading to those States, respectively, be referred to a select committee

On the usual question, what number the committee should be composed of, Mr. Cook proposed three—some other member named seven—and the question being between the two—

DECEMBER, 1822.

Naval Peace Establishment.

H. OF R.

Mr. Cook observed, that he had but a single word to say in favor of the number three. He had no preference for it, but that the subject of the resolution immediately concerned three States, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, and that the Representatives of these States, having consulted together, it had been agreed between them to bring the subject forward.

Mr. FLOYD, of Virginia, said, that the two per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands was to be expended not on roads within the States in question, but on roads leading to them, so that it concerned the adjacent States as much as it did those States. Besides, Mr. F. intimated that the subject ought not to be left wholly to the Western States, the disposition to speculate upon the Government in regard to the public lands there being so prevalent. He particularly referred to the speculations under the bill for the relief of purchasers of the public lands, made in States in which the circulating medium was greatly depreciated, &c. The country generally being interested in the roads to be made out of this fund, Mr. F. was in favor of the largest number proposed for the committee.

The number of seven was agreed to, and Messrs. COOK, SCOTT, JENNINGS, FLOYD, VANCE, STEWART, and NELSON of Maryland, were appointed a committee pursuant to the said resolution.

Mr. CANNON submitted the following resolutions, viz :

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide for the national defence by improving the militia of the United States.

2. Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire whether it is most expedient to improve the militia throughout the United States by means of the Military Academy, that of the encampment of the officers by brigades or otherwise, under proper regulations.

3. Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of discontinuing the preference given to the cadets educated at the public expense, in the Military Academy at West Point, in entering the public service over others of equal qualifications and merit, who are or may be educated at their own expense, or that of their parents or friends, at the school under the superintendence of Captain Partridge, in the State of Vermont, or at any other place in the United States.

4. Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of employing the regular army, or a part thereof, in the erection of fortifications during a state of peace, instead of having them built by contract, in the way heretofore pursued.

5. Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to make a statement to this House, containing the names and grade of the officers belonging to the Naval Establishment of the United States, and the duties each officer is performing ; also, the number of officers, of each different grade, necessary to command, in active service, the vessels of war, at this time belonging to the Navy.

Mr. C. said he did not mean to press these resolutions to an immediate decision. Being of much importance in his view, he wished them to lie on the table and be printed, with the expression of a determination on his part to call them up on an early day.

The resolutions were ordered to lie upon the table accordingly.

NAVAL PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, which was read, and is as follows :

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 7th of May last, requiring that a plan for the Peace Establishment of the Navy of the United States, and also of the Marine Corps, should be communicated to that House at the present session, I transmit a report of the Secretary of the Navy, containing a plan, which has been prepared for the proposed establishment.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, December 6, 1822.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 2, 1822.

SIR: The Secretary of the Navy, to whom has been referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 7th of May last, requesting the President of the United States to cause to be laid before that House a plan for a Peace Establishment of the Navy of the United States, has the honor of submitting the accompanying papers on that subject.

The paper, marked A, is the draught of a bill embracing all the provisions which have been deemed necessary ; presuming that a plan presented in this form would best meet the object contemplated by the resolution. It is deemed necessary, in this report, to notice only briefly such parts of the bill as contain new modifications of our Naval Establishment.

The bill, it will be perceived, contemplates the establishment of two new grades of office, viz : commodore and rear admiral. These grades are considered, if not absolutely necessary, at least of very great importance as regards due subordination and the discipline of the service ; and, in recommending the adoption of the provision, I can only repeat what I have had occasion heretofore to urge in support of this measure. The rank of captain is now the highest grade in the navy recognised by law ; and during the infancy of our navy, and whilst we had no vessels of a higher class than frigates, and the number of captains small, it was, perhaps, as high a grade as the good of the service required. It is, however, believed that, from the additions both to the number and class of our public vessels, and from what may reasonably be anticipated to be the situation of our navy in the course of a few years, both justice and policy require the establishment of some higher grades. According to the relative rank, as now regulated between the military and naval officers, a captain in the navy only ranks with a colonel in the army. This is thought to be contrary to sound policy and the good of the service. The establishment of the grades contemplated by the bill will place the relative rank in the army and navy upon a just footing. A commodore will rank with a brigadier general, and a rear admiral with a major general. But the more important and substantial benefit, it is believed, growing out of this measure, will be the effect it will have upon the discipline of the service. The importance of rank, both in the military and naval service, will readily occur to all in any degree acquainted with either. In a fleet or squadron, when the different vessels may be commanded by officers of the same grade, and their relative rank, and even that of the commander himself, known only by the dates of their commissions, there will not be that respect and subordination observed that are essential to order and harmony. The additional pay, it is thought, cannot afford any well-founded objection to the measure, if the real benefits confidently believed to result from it are duly appreciated.

H. OF R.

Naval Peace Establishment.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Authorizing the appointment of midshipmen, who have been examined and found qualified for promotion, to the duty of sailing-master, would be highly beneficial to the service. By the rules and regulations, sailing-masters are not considered in the line of promotion, and have not, of course, so strong inducements to remain permanently attached to the service as officers who have this prospect before them; and whenever more profitable employment in the merchant service is presented they will generally accept of it.

The number of lieutenants is already so great that the prospect of promotion of midshipmen is not very promising. To employ examined midshipmen as sailing-masters would be given them some little distinction, and affording them an opportunity of improving themselves for the higher and more important duties of the service.

In most of the classes of commissioned officers, the number fixed by the bill embraces all at present in office, and where that is not the case, it is provided that none shall be discharged but the number reduced to that contemplated in the bill, by omitting to fill the vacancies as they may occur. This, it is thought, is no more than justice requires; and, as the number thus retained is but small, the expense will be inconsiderable, and will soon entirely cease.

The increased pay provided for some few of the officers attached to ships-of-the-line and frigates, while in actual service, is recommended by considerations of justice and the good of the service. To perform the duties required of these officers on board the largest ships involves far more responsibility, and requires not only greater professional knowledge and experience, but much more labor; these, or similar distinctions, are recognised in every well regulated service; and as but a small number of our largest vessels are kept in service in time of peace, the additional expense will be of no great amount.

It has been considered a more simple mode of payment, and less liable to abuse, to allow fixed salaries to the officers stationed at the several navy yards and naval stations than as now provided by law by monthly pay and rations.

That part of the bill which makes the marine guard, detailed for the protection of navy yards, subject to the orders of the commandant of the yard, is deemed essential for the preservation of order and harmony. The difficulties which have occurred under the present regulations on that subject, suggest the necessity of some alteration; and no well-founded objection is perceived to placing this guard under the immediate orders of the commandant of the yard, in the same manner as the marine guard is placed on ship-board under the orders of the captain.

The exhibits accompanying this bill will serve to show the applicability of its provisions to our present Naval Establishment, and the comparative expense between it and the one contemplated by the bill.

Paper B is an exhibit showing the number of commissioned and warrant officers required to officer certain ships, and vessels, and navy yards.

Paper C is an exhibit showing the petty officers, able seamen, ordinary seamen, and boys, required for the vessels of war in active service.

Paper D is an exhibit showing the whole number of commission and warrant officers required for the Navy of the United States, when the ships-of-the-line, frigates, and steam batteries, directed by the "act for the gradual increase of the Navy" shall be completed.

Paper E is an estimate of the annual expense of the officers of the Navy, proposed by the bill, including the organization of the navy yards, and a comparative view between the present expense and that proposed.

By which last exhibit it will be seen that the annual expense of the officers of the Navy will be reduced about ninety thousand dollars below the estimates necessary under the existing establishment.

A peace establishment for the marine corps having been fixed by the act of the 3d of March, 1817, and no material alteration being deemed necessary, no other plan has been prepared to accompany this report.

Although, perhaps, not falling strictly within the scope of the resolution, yet the present affords a fit opportunity of respectfully suggesting the importance of establishing a naval academy for the instruction of our young officers in the sciences connected with their profession. As this is intended as a mere suggestion of a measure deserving consideration, I have not thought proper to present any plan for carrying it into effect. This may be done hereafter, should the measure meet with a favorable reception; nor is it deemed fit for me, at this time, to urge the many considerations which will readily occur to all liberal and enlightened minds in favor of such an institution.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SMITH THOMPSON.

The PRESIDENT of the U. S.

A bill to fix and render permanent the Naval Peace Establishment of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the Naval Peace Establishment of the United States shall, from and after the — day of —, consist of one rear admiral, five commodores, twenty-five captains, thirty masters commandant, one hundred and ninety lieutenants, twenty sailing-masters, four hundred midshipmen, thirty-five surgeons, forty-five surgeons' mates, forty pursers, six chaplains, twenty boatswains, twenty gunners, fifteen carpenters, fifteen sailmakers, and of all other officers, petty officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, and boys, a number not exceeding three thousand five hundred; but the President of the United States may, if in his opinion the good of the service shall require it, make additional appointments of midshipmen: Provided, however, That the whole number of midshipmen shall not at any time exceed four hundred and fifty. The President shall also have the power, if in his opinion the exigencies or the good of the service should require it, to give acting appointments of lieutenant and master to such midshipmen as have passed the examination required by the regulations of the service to qualify them to be lieutenants in the Navy: Provided, The whole number of acting lieutenants and masters, including those holding commissions and warrants, shall not exceed two hundred and thirty lieutenants and forty sailing-masters. And the President shall also have the power to appoint such additional chaplains, boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers, as the good of the service may in his opinion require, not exceeding, however, ten chaplains, ten boatswains, ten gunners, five carpenters, and five sailmakers; but none of the officers retained in service under this act shall be entitled to receive more than their monthly pay, without rations, during the time when they shall not be under orders for service: Provided, nevertheless, That none of the commissioned officers now in service shall, by virtue of this act, be discharged; but vacancies, as they occur, shall not be filled until the officers in the several grades shall be reduced to the number hereinbefore designated.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Naval Peace Establishment.

H. OF R.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the pay and subsistence of a rear admiral shall be one hundred and twenty dollars per month, and twenty-four rations per day; and of a commodore, one hundred dollars per month, and sixteen rations per day.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy, with the approbation of the President of the United States, may grant furloughs to such of the officers as may choose to enter the merchant service of the United States, or such foreign service as the President may approve, for a term not exceeding two years; subject, however to be recalled at any time he may deem necessary and proper; but all officers so furloughed shall receive only one-half their monthly pay, without rations, during the time they shall be in such manner absent from the public service.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, for the preservation of the ships and vessels placed in ordinary, the President of the United States shall have the power, provided he may deem the same necessary, to attach permanently to each ship or vessel the following officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, and boys; that is to say, to a ship of the line, one captain, two lieutenants, one sailing-master, four midshipmen, one boatswain, one gunner, one carpenter, two carpenter's mates, who shall be caulkers, eight seamen, eight ordinary seamen, and six boys; to each forty-four gun frigate, one captain, one lieutenant, one sailing-master, three midshipmen, one boatswain, one gunner, one carpenter, one carpenter's mate, who shall be a caulker, six seamen, six ordinary seamen, and four boys; to each of the frigates rated less than forty-four guns, one captain, one lieutenant, one sailing-master, two midshipmen, one boatswain, one gunner, one carpenter, one carpenter's mate, who shall be a caulker, five seamen, five ordinary seamen, and three boys; to each of the sloops of war, one master commandant, two midshipmen, one boatswain's mate, one gunner's mate, one carpenter's mate, who shall be a caulker, two ordinary seamen, and two boys; to each of the several stations at which ships and vessels are placed in ordinary shall be attached one surgeon and one surgeon's mate, to attend all the sick of such ships and vessels; one purser, to execute the duties of purser to all such ships and vessels; one chaplain and one schoolmaster, who shall perform, in their respective stations, the duties of chaplain, mathematician, and schoolmaster, on the station, under the superintendence of the senior officer of such ships and vessels in ordinary, whose duty it will be, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Navy upon the subject, to establish a school on board of the ship to which he is attached, for the purpose of instructing the midshipmen on the station, and those belonging to the ships in ordinary, in the several branches of mathematics, geometry, trigonometry, and navigation, agreeably to the rules and regulations of the Navy.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That each of the following naval stations, to wit: Portsmouth (New Hampshire,) Charlestown, (Massachusetts,) New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Gosport (Virginia,) and one other station south of the Chesapeake, (such as the President of the United States shall select,) shall be under the command of an officer not below the rank of captain of the Navy, who shall have, agreeably to such regulations as are now or may hereafter be established by authority of law for the service, a general superintendence over the ships and vessels in ordinary at those stations respectively, as well as over the officers (such officers only excepted as may be senior in rank) and crews attached to them. And it shall be the duty of such officers and crews, under his general superintendence and direction, to keep clean, ventilate, and prevent, by constant examination, and, when necessary, caulking such rents and seams in the respective vessels to which they are attached as may be found open, the deleterious effects arising from water getting between the timbers, and for the preservation, repairing, overhauling of the rigging, stores, &c., of the ships and vessels in ordinary deposited in the navy yards and storehouses, as well as for the rigging and equipping of any of the public ships or vessels fitting for sea, and like purposes; and the commanding officers of the respective ships in ordinary shall, upon the requisition of the commandant of the yard, furnish, from time to time, agreeably to the general regulations of the service, such number of officers and men as in his opinion the work to be done may require.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all officers attached to vessels in ordinary shall be allowed their full pay and rations, and such quantity of fuel and caudles, provided they live on board of the respective vessels to which they are attached, as they would be allowed were they at sea.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That to the officers stationed at the several navy yards, that is to say, Portsmouth, (New Hampshire,) Charleston, (Massachusetts,) New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Gosport, (Virginia,) and one other yard south of the Chesapeake, the following annual compensation, in lieu of all pay, rations, and emoluments, shall be allowed: To the commanding officer, not under the rank of captain, three thousand dollars; to the master commandant, one thousand seven hundred dollars; to the lieutenant, one thousand dollars; to the sailing-master, eight hundred and fifty dollars; to the surgeon, if attending an hospital, one thousand five hundred dollars; to the surgeon, if not attending an hospital, nine hundred dollars; to the surgeon's mate, seven hundred and fifty dollars; to the purser, eight hundred dollars; to a laboratory officer at Washington, seven hundred and fifty dollars; to each midshipman, three hundred and fifty dollars, to each boatswain, gunner, and sailmaker, five hundred dollars; which compensations shall be paid quarterly.

H. OF R.

Suppression of Piracy.

DECEMBER, 1822.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That to any other naval station in the United States (other than those enumerated in the preceding section) the President of the United States may deem necessary, there shall be attached one master commandant, who shall have the like superintendence over such station as is provided in the fifth section of this act for the commandants of the several navy yards therein enumerated; and the following annual compensations, in lieu of all pay, rations, and emoluments, shall be allowed to the officers attached to the Lake stations, that is to say, if attached to the station on Lake Ontario, the master commandant shall be entitled to one thousand three hundred dollars; the lieutenant to eight hundred dollars; the surgeon to eight hundred and fifty dollars; the purser, who shall perform also the duties of storekeeper, to eight hundred dollars: if attached to the station on Lake Erie, the master commandant shall be entitled to one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars; the surgeon to eight hundred dollars; the purser, who shall perform also the duties of storekeeper, to seven hundred and fifty dollars: if attached to the station on Lake Champlain, the master commandant shall be entitled to one thousand two hundred dollars; the surgeon to eight hundred dollars; the purser, who shall perform also the duties of storekeeper, to seven hundred and fifty dollars, which compensations shall be paid quarterly.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That an officer appointed to superintend the recruiting service in any port within the United States shall not be entitled to any allowance for house rent, fuel, or candles.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That officers of the following grades, attached to ships of the line and frigates, when in actual service, shall receive, in addition to their present emoluments, the monthly pay hereafter mentioned, viz: The first lieutenant of a ship-of-the-line, ten dollars; the sailing-master, ten dollars; the surgeon, fifteen dollars; the boatswain, five dollars; the gunner, five dollars; the carpenter, five dollars; the sailmaker, three dollars; the first lieutenant of a frigate of forty-four guns, six dollars; the sailing-master, six dollars; the surgeon, ten dollars; the boatswain, three dollars; the gunner, three dollars; the carpenter, three dollars; the sailmaker, two dollars; the first lieutenant of a frigate of thirty-six guns, four dollars; the sailing-master, four dollars; the surgeon, six dollars; the boatswain, two dollars; the gunner, two dollars; the carpenter, two dollars; the sailmaker, two dollars.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That when a surgeon's mate shall act in the line of his duty on board a brig, schooner, or other small vessel of war, having no other medical officer attached to said vessel, he shall be allowed at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, in addition to his present pay and rations, as authorized by law.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to discharge all warrant officers at present in the Navy of the United States, over and above the respective numbers retained by this act; and all such officers who shall be discharged under this act shall be entitled to receive six months' pay over and above what may be due to them, respectively, at the time of their discharge.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the guard of marines detached for the protection of a navy yard shall, while doing duty in the yard, be subject to the orders of the commandant of the yard, and receive from him instructions as to the duties they are to perform therein; and all persons enlisted into the service of the United States, and doing duty under the orders of the commandant of the yard, shall for every offence be subject to the "Act for the better government of the Navy of the United States," and be tried and punished in the same manner as if the offence had been committed at sea; any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

A motion was made by Mr. Russ, to lay the Message on the table, and print it.

Mr. Cocks hoped it would not be laid on the table, but that it would be referred to the Naval Committee, there to undergo the proper investigation, and to be reported upon.

Mr. Russ withdrawing his motion, the Message was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SUPPRESSION OF PIRACY.

Mr. CONDUCT, of New Jersey, rose to make a motion. In the Message of the President to both Houses of Congress, at the opening of the session, he said, a very brief allusion was made to piracies, committed in the West Indies. All that was said on that subject, is comprised in a short paragraph, which Mr. C. read. Intelligence has been recently received, and probably since that part of the Message was penned, of transactions, so flagrant and outrageous in their character, as to call, imperiously, for the early and efficient interposition of this House. The premature death of the gallant and lamented Allen has excited a spirit of indignation throughout our country, unequalled since the late war. It calls loudly for retributive justice, from those lawless barbarians; and I hope to see, with as little delay as practicable, a competent force, at the disposal of the Executive, under some one of the most experienced naval officers, with ample powers and instructions to ferret them out of their lurking holes, and to drag them to a certain and speedy punishment. A speedy punishment, because I have no idea of incurring the delay, or the hazard, of transporting them here, or of extending to them a trial by jury, with all the delays incident to our courts of justice. They have placed themselves beyond the protection of the laws of civilized society; they have set at open defiance the laws of God and man; their hand is against every man, and every man's hand should combine against them. And the most effectual restraint which you can impose upon their barbarities, is to furnish to them the spectacle of a few dozen of their leaders suspended by the halter, from the yard-arms of some of our public ships. Deeming it expedient that Congress should, at an early period, adopt some decisive measures on this subject, I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire, and report as early as may be, what further measures are necessary, not only for the more efficient protection of our commerce in the West India seas from piracy, but for the entire extirpation of those freebooters, and the punishment of those who may be found to aid and abet them.

This resolution having been read—

DECEMBER, 1822.

Pre-emptions for Seats of Justice.

H. OF R.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, inquired, if there was not upon the table a Message from the President of the United States, upon this subject.

The SPEAKER said there was such a Message on the table, received yesterday, which he had not had an opportunity yet to present to the House.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, the resolution moved by Mr. CONDIOT was ordered to lie on the table; and the Message of the PRESIDENT was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States :

Recent information of the multiplied outrages and depredations which have been committed on our seamen and commerce by the pirates in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico, exemplified by the death of a very meritorious officer, seems to call for some prompt and decisive measures on the part of the Government. All the public vessels adapted to that service, which can be spared from other indispensable duties, are already employed in it; but, from the knowledge which has been acquired of the places from whence those outlaws issue, and to which they escape from danger, it appears that it will require a particular kind of force, capable of pursuing them into the shallow waters to which they retire, effectually to suppress them. I submit to the consideration of Congress, the propriety of organizing such a force for that important object.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, December 6, 1822.

The said Message was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CLOTHING THE MILITIA.

The House then, on motion of Mr. CANNON, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill for clothing the militia when in actual service.

The bill was read through.

Mr. CANNON, though aware of the difficulty of calling the attention of the House to subjects of this description, addressed a few observations to the Chair on the subject of this bill. A proposition of the same nature, he said, was before Congress eight years ago. It was introduced into the House of Representatives during the late war with Great Britain; and such was then the conviction of the propriety of the measure, that a bill embracing the same objects passed the House of Representatives by an unanimous vote, and was sent to the Senate. It was then near the close of the war, and, before the bill was taken up in the Senate, the news of peace arrived, in consequence of which the bill was not acted on. In that period of the war, the necessity of the measure was seen and felt; and Mr. C. expressed his hope, notwithstanding we were now enjoying the calm and tranquillity of peace, that we should look forward to the militia as our great national defence in time of need, and adopt such measures as will make them competent, at all times, and under every exigency, to the defence of our country. As such he considered them, and he should make it always his business, by every means practicable, to give to the militia that improvement which will qualify it to be what it was intended, by the Constitution of the United States, that it should be. He was aware, he said, in regard to this bill, that many members had not copies of it before them; but it had undergone the deliberation of a committee during the last session, and, if the object was approved by the House, was in as good a form as could be devised. It could not be expected, he said, that the militia, when called into service, would provide themselves with clothing necessary to render them efficient soldiers, unless means were provided to reimburse them the expense. The bill went, in short, to place them, in regard to pay and emoluments, on precisely the same footing as the soldiers of the regular army. Those who had experience in such service in the late war, would acknowledge that this measure was necessary during a state of war, and, if so, he believed the House would agree with him that now, in a state of peace, was the proper time to make the provision for it.

Mr. FARRELLY rose, not to oppose the bill, but to suggest the propriety of prescribing, in it, the description of the clothing with which the militia ought to provide themselves. At present it was left optional to each militiaman to provide clothes of what material, color, shape, or fashion, he chose. Mr. F. suggested that, as the clothing was to be provided for strictly military purposes, there ought to be some provision that the dress should be uniform.

Mr. CANNON said that the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania had not escaped the attention of the Militia Committee. But there were difficulties in the way of a provision of the nature proposed: the different States prescribe different uniforms for the militia, and to establish a uniform dress for the militia would be attended, in practice, with difficulties which appeared to him to be insuperable.

No amendment being proposed to the bill, the Committee of the Whole rose, and reported it to the House. On the question to engross it for a third reading,

Mr. HARDIN suggested that this bill ought to have a more full examination before it was finally acted upon; and he, therefore, moved that the bill lie upon the table, and be printed for the use of the members.

Which motion was agreed to.

The next subject in order was the resolution for carrying into effect the agreement between the United States and Georgia; and the House having gone into committee upon it, on request of Mr. GILMER, (Mr. BASSETT in the chair)—

On motion of Mr. GILMER, the Committee rose, and obtained leave to sit again, and the explanatory report upon the subject, made at the last session, was ordered to be printed.

PRE-EMPTIONS FOR SEATS OF JUSTICE.

The next subject in order was the following bill, lying over from last session:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That there be granted to the State of Alabama, and to the Territory of Arkansas, at the minimum price for which public lands of the United

H. OF R.

Pre-emptions for Seats of Justice.

DECEMBER, 1822.

States are sold, the right of pre-emption to one quarter section of land, in or near the centre of each county of the State and Territory aforesaid, for the establishment of seats of justice, in each of such counties: Provided, The purchase be made before the commencement of the public sales in said State and Territory of the lands surrounding the quarter sections located under this right of pre-emption: And provided, also, That the proceeds of the sale of each quarter section thus located in said State and Territory, shall be appropriated for the purposes of erecting public buildings in the county for which it is located, after deducting from the net proceeds of the sale made by said State or Territory the amount originally paid for the same: Provided further, That the seat of justice for said counties, respectively, shall be fixed on the lands so located and selected.

The House having, on motion of Mr. STERLING, of New York, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole upon the subject—

Mr. STERLING stated that this bill contained provisions, in regard to the States therein named, precisely similar to those granting like rights to the State of Ohio; it had been asked for by those States, and he believed was so guarded in its provisions as not to be susceptible of abuse, if passed. It was not to have effect unless the States in question gave their assent to it; and, if they did so, the Government of the United States would be gainer instead of loser by it, because the property of the United States would gain value by the operation of the provisions of the bill. Mr. S. added, that the members of the Committee of Public Lands, at the last session, were unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, confirmed the statements of Mr. STERLING. Although generally opposed to the policy of granting pre-emptions, believing the reasons for it had ceased, this was a case in which he thought it right, inasmuch as it was agreeable to precedent in the case of Ohio, and would be decidedly advantageous to the interests of the United States.

Mr. R. then moved, though he did not know that, in any instance, the State of Mississippi would avail itself of the provision, that the State of Mississippi should be added to the three other States mentioned in the bill; which amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKE, of Tennessee, said that the United States had some lands in Tennessee, as well as in other States, in which new counties were to be laid off. The House had been told that the State of Mississippi would probably not avail herself of the benefit of this bill. He would move to add to the bill the State of Tennessee; and, when he did so, he declared his belief that that State would avail itself of the benefit of the provision. He saw no reason, he said, why lands should be sold at the minimum price to one State, and the same privilege be withheld from others. The portion of the State of Tennessee in which the United States held the land was small, it was true, but he did not see why it should be debarred the same rights as were allowed to the other States.

This motion gave rise to some debate.

It was opposed by Mr. RANKIN, on the ground that the circumstances of Tennessee did not resemble these of Mississippi, which latter State contained in one body something like four millions of acres of unseated (Choctaw) land, &c. He again adverted to the example of the privilege granted to the State of Ohio, and declared that the bill could do no injury, but rather a service, to the interests of the United States.

Mr. MCCOY was opposed to the bill altogether, principally because it would lead to many other bills. In the case of Ohio, the privilege to her had been clogged with so many provisions, she had not availed herself of it. He could not see why greater privileges should be granted to counties in the States whose seats of justice were not yet located than to others. His idea appeared to be, that all parts of the country should stand, in this respect, on the same footing. Why was it not proposed to embrace in the bill Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, as well as Alabama and Arkansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, gave a history of the application from the State of Ohio, and of the reasons why she did not avail herself of the provisions of the act of Congress in this respect. It was clogged with such conditions as made it disadvantageous to her; and she did not choose to go to the expense of sending commissioners into fourteen new counties to lay off seats of justice, when no advantage whatever would arise to her from doing so.

Mr. RANKIN replied to Mr. MCCOY. He did not know that Indiana or Illinois had applied for this right. If they did apply, he should consider them equally entitled to it with other States. Mr. R. said he felt no anxiety himself on the subject of this bill, but he was persuaded its adoption would be beneficial to the United States.

The question was then taken on the insertion of Tennessee in the bill, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. WALWORTH said, if this measure was calculated, as had been represented, to increase the value of the public lands, it ought to be general in its operation. He, therefore, moved to amend it so as to make its provisions apply "to the several States and Territories in which there are public lands belonging to the United States."

Mr. STERLING, of New York, said he hoped this amendment would not prevail. No other States but those named in the bill had made application to Congress on the subject, and it would be time enough to embrace them in the bill when they did apply. The State of Alabama and the Territory of Arkansas were peculiarly situated, the lands not having been exposed to sale in the new counties, &c. He was willing, when other States applied, under similar circumstances, but not before, to extend to them the same privileges.

Mr. COOK, of Illinois, was in favor of the amendment. He was in daily expectation of a proposition on this subject from the State which he represented; and, inasmuch as the principle of the bill had been fairly shown to be beneficial to the United States, he hoped it would be made

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

general in its operation. Mr. C. added some remarks to show the beneficial effects which might be expected from the bill.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, called for the reading of some petitions on the subject from Alabama, one of which (from the Committee of Public Buildings, in the county of Perry) was read.

The question on Mr. WALWORTH's motion, to give the bill a general effect, was decided in the affirmative. And the Committee of the Whole rose, and reported the bill as amended.

The amendment was concurred in; and the question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading—

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, said, he hoped the House would not pass the bill, considering it as embracing a policy injurious to the interests of the Government. It proposed to sell quarter sections at the minimum price for the benefit of counties. But this privilege gentlemen supposed might not be accepted. If so, Mr. W. said, the House was legislating to no purpose; giving grants which would not be accepted; offering to confer favors, which, from neglect or design, might be rejected by the party intended to be favored. With regard to the increased value which it was said this measure was to give to lands of the United States, Mr. W. said he had no confidence in this scheme of giving away with one hand, to receive increased value in the other. This land, which it was proposed to give at the minimum price, might be worth twenty or thirty dollars an acre. If we make grants, said he, let it be to the poor individuals who emigrate to that country, and who are without the ability to buy land to live upon. If we extort from the humblest emigrant the real value of the land, let us do the same, at least, from the counties to which it is now proposed to give it.

Mr. RANKIN said this privilege was asked for by the States first embraced in the bill because Congress had given it before to others. If the argument of the gentleman from North Carolina was acted upon, the world would soon come to an end: the planter would not trust his grain to the ground, because it was giving away without knowing whether any thing would spring from it to recompense him. But the argument was not a just one. It was certain the location of a seat of justice was an advantage as sure to the adjacent land as was the advantage to the farmer of sowing his seed. If a certain advantage would result to the United States from the measure, and no disadvantage could flow from it, why not pass the bill?

The question was then taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, and the votes were as follows: For the third reading 61, against it 64.

So the bill was rejected by a majority of three votes.

WEDNESDAY, December 11.

Several other members, to wit: from New York, ELIJAH SPENCER; from Virginia, WILLIAM 17th CON. 2d SESS.—12

LEE BALL; and from Georgia, ALFRED CUTHBERT, and ROBERT RAYMOND REID, appeared and took their seats.

A new member, to wit: from South Carolina, JOHN CARTER, elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of JAMES BLAIR, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. FRANCIS JOHNSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill for the relief of William Sayles; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The resolution yesterday laid upon the table by Mr. WOODCOCK, calling for information from the President of the United States, respecting advances of money to public agents, was considered, modified, and adopted by the House.

[In support of this motion, Mr. W. made some observations, which the reporter had not the opportunity of hearing. The purport of them was, that, in the statements received from the several departments, of the accounts of public officers, no account was given of moneys advanced to sub-agents and sub-contractors, &c., without security, &c.; so that this class of defaulters often escape it without observation. His object was, if practicable, to supply this deficiency.]

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, the House took up the bill providing for the examination of the titles to land in that part of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river; which was committed to a Committee of the whole House, as also was, on his motion, the bill for the relief of Thaddeus Mayhew.

On motion of Mr. BARBER, of Connecticut, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting an appropriation for completing and repairing Fort Griswold, in the State of Connecticut.

On motion of Mr. CUSHMAN, the subject of the Public Buildings and the Public Lands in the city of Washington, was referred to a select committee, and Mr. BLACKLEDGE, Mr. CUSHMAN, Mr. VAN WYCK, Mr. CASSEDY, Mr. BROWN, Mr. HOBART, and Mr. LERTWICH, were appointed the said committee.

Mr. COLDEN submitted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House such information as he may possess with regard to any hostile expedition which may have been prepared in the United States, and sailed from thence, within the present year, against the territory or dependency of any Power in amity with the United States; and to inform this House whether any measures have been taken to bring to condign punishment the persons who may have been concerned in such expedition, contrary to the laws of the United States.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day.

Mr. WILLIAMSON submitted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the several petitions, and the subject-matters embraced in resolutions, referred to the several

H. OF R.

Occupation of Columbia River.

DECEMBER, 1822.

standing and select committees the last session, and not reported upon, be again referred to the similar committees.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONDUCT submitted the following joint resolution, which was read, and laid on the table one day, under the rule, viz :

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary and Clerk of the respective Houses to lay before Congress, at the commencement of every session, a detailed statement of the expenditure of the contingent fund of each House, during the preceding session, stating the items, quantity, prices, and to whom payment is made.

On motion of Mr. CONDUCT, the Committee of Accounts were instructed to inquire and report whether any, and what, part of the contingent expenses of this House can be curtailed, without detriment to the public service, and that said committee revise the system pursued by the officers of this House, in disbursing the contingent fund, and report whether any further restrictions, responsibilities, or checks, are necessary for its disbursement.

The Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Michigan, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The resolution from the Senate for the appointment of a Joint Committee for Enrolled Bills, was read, and concurred in by the House; and Mr. DANE and Mr. LEFTWICH were appointed of the said committee on the part of this House.

The resolution from the Senate for the appointment of a Joint Committee to have the direction of the money appropriated for the Library of Congress, was read, and also concurred in by the House; and Mr. ALEXANDER SMYTH, Mr. WHIPPLE, and Mr. CUTHBERT, were appointed of the said committee on the part of this House.

The Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill to alter the judicial district of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The House, pro forma, to retain for the subjects their preference in the roll of orders of the day, went in and out of Committees of the Whole on the Georgia agreement resolution, and the Missouri land bill; but, not being prepared to act upon them, reported progress and obtained leave to sit again.

OCCUPATION OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

The bill of the last session, providing for the occupation of the mouth of the Columbia river, being next in order—

Mr. FLOYD said he was not at the moment ready to present the information on this subject, which he was prepared, at any time during the last session, to have laid before the House; but, not wishing the consideration of the subject to be long deferred on his account, he moved to go into Committee with a view to retaining for the bill its present place in the orders of the day.

The House accordingly went in and out of Committee upon it, leave was given to sit again, and the bill was ordered to be reprinted.

A similar course being proposed on another bill—

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, said he had no idea of sitting here, to receive motions to go in and out of Committee, and to reprint bills; and suggested the propriety of some step to put an end to this (as it appeared to him) wasteful consumption of time.

No specific proposition, however, being made by Mr. CAMPBELL, the SPEAKER proceeded in calling over the bills.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The first bill which the House agreed to go into Committee of the Whole upon, was the bill to fix the compensation and fees of the Registers of Wills of the counties of Washington and Alexandria, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEALE assigned, at some length, the views of the committee which had, at the last session of Congress, reported this bill. He showed the importance of a faithful and intelligent administration of the duties of those officers, and gave a view of the nature and extent of their labors and duties—all which, in his opinion, concurred to make the provisions of this bill, for a light increase of their present emoluments, just and reasonable, as well in themselves as by comparison with the compensations of other public officers.

Mr. HILL and Mr. WALWORTH made some queries as to some of the details of the bill, which seemed objectionable to them; and Mr. NEALE answered and explained.

Finally, after some amendment had been made to the bill—

Mr. COCKE made opposition to it on principle, believing the fees now allowed by law to these officers to be sufficient. He moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. He considered the fees proposed by the bill to be enormous, and particularly objected to the fee of one dollar for stating each account, and of six and a quarter cents for examining each voucher.

Mr. NEALE defended the bill, explained the bearing of these fees to the former fees, and showed the fees now proposed to be allowed to the Registers of Wills to be less than had been allowed by an act of Congress to the clerks of the courts, &c.

The question on striking out the enacting clause, (rejecting the bill,) was decided in the negative, by a large majority.

The bill being reported to the House, with amendments, was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

LAND OFFICE RECEIVERS, &c.

The House next resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill, reported at the last session, fixing the compensation of receivers of the public moneys, for their services in transmitting public moneys to safe places of deposit.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. RANKIN briefly explained the object of the bill, the propriety of passing which was sufficiently obvious, by a recurrence to the losses which had occurred under the former system.

No objection being made to the bill, the Committee rose and reported it to the House, and it was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

To the same Committee of the Whole had been also referred the bill "for the relief of the registers and receivers of public money of the several land offices;" which was also ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The next bill which the House went into Committee upon, was the bill to enable the proprietors of lands, held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of their papers.

The object of the bill was explained in a few words by Mr. COOK; and, no objection being made to the bill, the Committee rose and reported it to the House, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

The next bill in order was the bill "To abolish imprisonment for debt." Before taking it up, the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, December 12.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill for the relief of Nathan Branson, which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on the subject of the Militia, to which was recommended the bill for the discipline of the militia of the United States, reported the same with amendments; which were ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, all the bills, resolutions, and reports, committed to a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and to a Committee of the Whole House, not already printed, were ordered to be printed.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act to enable the proprietors of lands, held by titles derived from the United States, to obtain copies of papers from the proper department, and to declare the effect of such copies," was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENISON, the report of the Secretary of State on the petition of Lucy Lamb, made at the last session, was taken up, and, with a view to amendment thereof, was recommended to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. CONDIER, the joint resolution requiring from the Secretary and Clerk of the Senate and House of Representatives to make reports at each session of the mode and amount of the contingent expenses of the preceding year, was taken up, and read a first and second time.

Mr. COCKE then moved to lay the resolve on the table. It was understood that the Committee of Ways and Means had the subject of the contingent expenses of Congress under their consideration, and in all probability they would include a provision similar to this in the law which he supposed would pass during the present session. He thought it better, at least, to defer acting on this subject until the Committee of Ways and Means should make their report.

The resolve was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMSON called up the resolution which he yesterday submitted respecting recommitment to the committees of subjects not acted upon at the last session; which resolution was, by the House, modified and amended, so as to read as follows:

Resolved, That the several petitions and resolutions referred to the several standing and select committees, the last session, and not finally acted upon, be again referred to the same committees.

Mr. WALWORTH moved an amendment to the resolution, by inserting after the word "resolution" the words "upon the suggestion of any member to the Clerk of the House."

The resolution was then, on motion of Mr. CONDUCT, ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER then presented a memorial from T. McCORMICK, senior, proposing an improvement of the navigation of the Falls of the Ohio, by cutting a canal around the same; which, on the suggestion of the SPEAKER, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to whom was referred the bill for providing for surveys of certain canals, &c.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter:

BOSTON, July 4, 1822.

To the Hon. the SPEAKER of the Ho. of Reps.

SIR: The letter which I had the honor to address to you on the 4th July, 1819, and which Mr. Lowndes was so obliging as to take charge of and deliver, was intended to have been accompanied by the collection of medals therein referred to; but this was unfortunately lost on board the ship Factor, bound to New York, of which accident it appears that the House was duly informed by its committee. As soon as I heard of it, I endeavored to procure a duplicate of the collection, and succeeded a few days before I left Paris, in April last. This, together with the medals which have been struck at Paris, to commemorate some principal events of, and men distinguished in, our Revolution, I take the liberty through you, sir, of herewith sending and offering to Congress, for the use of the National Library.

With sentiments of the highest respect, &c.

GEORGE W. ERVING.

P. S. A printed catalogue of the French medals proper is enclosed in the case which contains them.

The American medals are but five proper, viz:

One of General Washington, at the siege of Boston;

One of Doctor Franklin;

One of Paul Jones; and

Two of the Battle of the Cowpens.

To these I have thought it well to add Columbus and Kosciusko, taken from the collection of illustrious men, deceased, now publishing in the French Mint.

The letter was, on motion of Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, referred to the Library Committee.

H. OF R.

Memorial of Revolutionary Soldiers.

DECEMBER, 1822.

MEMORIAL OF REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

On motion of Mr. CUSHMAN, the petition of sundry officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary Army, at present residing in the State of Maine, heretofore presented to this House on the 21st of January, 1822, was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions. The memorial is as follows:

The memorial of the undersigned, surviving soldiers of the Revolutionary Army, residing mostly in the State of Maine, respectfully sheweth—

That your memorialists, at an early period of their life, and at different stages of the war, engaged in the military service of their country, with that generous ardor of feeling which characterizes the youthful mind, glowing with the love of liberty, and contending for a noble object; and that they discharged the duties of the camp and field with a fortitude, fidelity, and zeal, adapted to the service in which they were engaged. Your memorialists would forbear to enlarge on the sufferings, hardships, and dangers, as well as the brilliant events of the war, undertaken to ward off oppression and to vindicate civil rights, and maintained for the attainment of national sovereignty and independence. These are recorded in the annals of our country—are emblazoned in the history of nations—are fresh in the memories of your honorable bodies, and will live in the grateful recollections of every patriotic generation. Your memorialists cannot, however, refrain from observing that the Revolutionary Army, from the circumstances of the country and the character of the war, actually endured a series of hardships and privations, and were exposed to perils unusual to the well appointed armies of nations, rich in resources, and abounding in all that can render war successful. There are many among the surviving soldiers who entered the service at the lowest ebb of their country's fortune, when no ally had espoused her cause, when resistance to British aggression was treason or rebellion; when there was no alternative but victory or death. Laborious and distressing were the scenes in which they were actors, and demanded all the active and passive courage of veteran warriors. Arduous and bloody were the battles which they fought; and when not conflicting with the public foe, they were forced to contend against the elements, or to encounter more formidable enemies, hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness. Without covering or shelter, they were frequently exposed to the inclemency of the seasons, and, on icy or frozen ground, they had to perform difficult and fatiguing marches, while the falling snow and rugged earth was stained by the blood issuing from their wounded feet.

But your memorialists will not dilate. Suffice it to say, that the Revolutionary army suffered and fought, and bled, not in aid of tyranny, but in defence of freedom—not to swell the triumphs of a proud oppressor, but to give splendor to the cause of liberty—not to enslave any portion of the human race, but to ameliorate the condition of their own countrymen and to vindicate the inalienable rights of mankind. Their achievement was as glorious as their sufferings had been distressing, or their conflicts severe. They obtained for an injured country its peace, sovereignty, and independence. The object for which the patriot army contended being obtained, your memorialists, in common with others who had been their fellow-sufferers in the war and companions in arms, retired from the field, to the laborious employments of private life—not, however, without indulging the secret hope that the country, watered by their blood, and made to flourish by the toils of heroes and patriots, would, at some future period, be mindful of those through whose sufferings and valor she had attained her prosperity and glory. This long-looked-for period seemed at length to be arrived. At the recommendation of that illustrious statesman, who, under God, presides over the civil destinies of the United States, who fought and bled for his country's rights, the services of the Revolutionary army came up in remembrance for good before the Representatives of the nation. Your memorialists were unable to express the joy which they felt at this unsolicited token of their country's bounty—viewing it as they did, not merely as alms to the needy, but, in a certain sense, a meed to merit—not as a gratuity to the extreme indigent and forlorn, but, in some sort, the long-delayed reward, or the appropriate boon for patriotism and valor, for uncommon perils endured, and uncommon exertions made in a glorious cause. And your memorialists were the more inclined to view the Pension Act, of March, 1818, in this light, as many of the officers and soldiers now surviving, enlisted in the service with little or no bounty, received their promised pay in a depreciated currency of small relative value: and also, as what is thus granted, is equally honorary to the donor and to the receiver; but especially as it would best comport with the magnanimity of a great and flourishing Republic. Your memorialists have further to observe, that, as they entered the service of their country at a most interesting period of human life, when the young mind takes its color and direction, by devoting themselves for a considerable length of time to the profession of arms, they not only lost, in some measure, the opportunity enjoyed by others, of laying a foundation for property, but to a certain extent became unqualified to make any considerable acquisition; it being well known to your honorable bodies, that the spirit of heroism, the feelings of gallantry, and the pride of a soldier, all which must be cultivated and nourished in an efficient army, are not the qualities or habits which, in civil life, lead to the attainment of wealth, nor hardly to a bare competency. To persons thus circumstanced, it is conceived something like generosity should be extended.

Believing it to be the best policy of every enlightened nation, to patronize rare merit, to reward uncommon exertions for the common weal, and to allure the patriotic and brave to exalted achievements, your memorialists derive the most sensible pleasure from every public testimony of respect, every tribute of praise bestowed, every encouragement given to those who have nobly endured, or bravely dared for the interest and honor of the country. It is, therefore, with the emotions of approving joy, that they reflect on the provision made by the preceding Congress, for the widow and children of the late Commodore Perry, for his signal victory on the Lakes at a fortunate crisis. But what was the consequence of this victory, as glorious as it was, compared with the brilliant exploits at Princeton, or Trenton, the well-fought battles of Bemis' heights, and the capture of a British army on the plains of Saratoga? The former rescued a territory from the possession of the enemy; the latter saved an aggrieved country from the galling yoke of oppression, and paved the way for its freedom, sovereignty, and independence. Some of your memorialists were concerned in these all-important achievements. And shall the brave exploits of modern heroes only be had in honor, while the noble achievements of past times, which constitute the very pivots on which the independence of the nation turned, remain unrewarded? The sentiments of policy, as well as of generosity, forbid! A magnanimous republic will not always be unmindful of the heroes on whose prowess, and sufferings, and blood, was laid the foundation of its existence and renown.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Land Offices, &c.

H. of R.

"A country rescued by their arms from impending ruin," said the Patriotic Chief of the Revolutionary army, "will never leave unpaid the debt of gratitude." Your memorialists would presume on the candor of your honorable bodies, while they further remark that the pension law, as now modified or construed, is of little or no benefit to the persons for whose relief it was intended to provide. It assists towns, parishes, or corporations, to maintain their own poor, or takes the poor off their hands. By the institutions in New England, at least, these poor have legal claims on the communities to which they respectively belong. The pension law, therefore, in operation, assists rich corporations which need no aid, and not poor individuals who, without public bounty, are entitled to a maintenance by law. Your memorialists, as yet, have too much pride of character to acknowledge themselves absolute paupers, and, in this capacity, to sue for the bounty of their country. The prime of their life was devoted to the profession of arms. After serving the time which they engaged, and being honorably discharged, houseless and homeless, they sought their fortunes in what was then the wilderness of Maine, or other unsettled territories. The vigor of their manhood has been spent in making those sections in which they fixed their residence, what they now are, comparatively, a fruitful field, and fitting them for an entrance into the Union of the States. By the dint of industry and great privations, they obtained, while active, somewhat more than a bare living, or daily subsistence of plain food and coarse garments. But in the decline of life, when bodily strength fails them, they are unable, by any labor that they can perform, to earn a competency. They did, therefore, as they do now, consider themselves as coming within the true intent and meaning of being in indigent and reduced circumstances, and needing the bounty of their country. Your memorialists are still emboldened to hope that your honorable bodies will again take their present circumstances and former services into your candid consideration, and so modify the pension law as that they may be entitled to its provisions, and have additional reasons to rejoice for themselves in those blessings of liberty, sovereignty, and independence, which their valor, their toils, and their blood, contributed to achieve for the enjoyment of their fellow-citizens, and posterity. Thus, will the closing scene of life be as consoling to them, as the opening was useful to their country. And, as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

DISBURSEMENT OF PUBLIC MONEY.

On motion of Mr. BASSETT, the House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill for imposing more rigorous checks on the disbursement of public money.

On motion of Mr. BASSETT, the bill was amended by adding to it the following, as a new section:

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That no security given to, or obligation entered into with, the Government, shall be in any wise impaired by the dismissing any officer, or from failure of the President to dismiss any officer, coming under the provisions of this act."

Another slight amendment being made—

The Committee rose, and reported the bill; and, on motion of Mr. BASSETT, who did not wish to precipitate the bill through the House, the consideration of the report was for the present deferred.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The engrossed bill for regulating the fees of the registers of wills in the two counties of the District of Columbia, was announced for its third reading; when

Mr. COCKE moved to recommit the bill to a Committee of the whole House. He had found he said, since the short discussion of this subject yesterday, that the good people of this District were very much opposed to the bill, and he wished that an opportunity might be given more fully to examine it. The bill proposed to establish fees which were, in his opinion, enormous, such as were to be found on the statute books of none of the States. He believed the effect of the law would be, in many instances, to strip the widow and the orphan of their whole estates. The fees, he said, had been for many years what they now are, and he believed, though they die sometimes, none of the registers had ever resigned on account of the lowness of their fees. He had been told, indeed, that Dr. Blake, the late Register, had leased out the office for five hundred dollars per annum, and had not the least trouble with it. If so, he said, he should suppose the fees were high enough.

The bill was ordered to be recommitted, as moved by Mr. COCKE, without a division.

LAND OFFICES.

The engrossed bill "for the relief of the registers and receivers of public money of the several Land Offices," was read a third time; and the question being "Shall it pass?"

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, said that this bill proposed to afford compensation to the land officers for services performed under the relief law. He did not believe that the additional compensation here proposed was necessary. They had complained, indeed, of the arduous duties they had to perform under that law, but he believed they were adequately compensated for their services. It was a subject of common conversation in the country where the land offices were situated, that the officers were making immense fortunes by the exercise of the functions devolved on them. Mr. V. made several observations to illustrate the sufficiency of the compensation at present allowed to the land officers, and concluded by saying that he had been in one of the land offices for a few minutes, whilst the business under the relief law was in transaction, and he had seen the officers receiving money faster than ever he had before seen money received, where it was to be converted wholly to the use of the persons who received it.

Mr. RANKIN stated, in behalf of the committee which had at the last session reported this bill, that it was bottomed on information received from the General Land Office, and on a request from the Secretary of the Treasury that some compensation might be provided for the extra services of these land officers. In addition to which, the committee had a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, describing the additional duties assigned to the land officers under the law extending relief to the debtors for public lands; and also a number of extracts of letters from the officers themselves, saying that the nature of the business devolved on them was such that they could not perform it for the fees allowed by law, but that, to save the individuals concerned, and to prevent the law from being wholly inoperative, they had progressed in the business, relying on the justice of the Government for indemnity for their extra services.

At the suggestion of Mr. R. the letters from the Secretary of the Treasury and Commissioner of the General Land Office, as well as several extracts of letters from the registers and receivers of the land offices were read.

Mr. CHAMBERS confirmed, generally, what had fallen from his colleague (Mr. VANCE) upon this subject. It had been generally understood, he believed, at the time the relief law went into operation, that it would be a profitable business to the land officers; and he had understood, incidentally, that the profits of the office at Zanesville from that business had amounted to $1500. Wishing further time to examine the subject of this bill, he moved that the bill be laid on the table—

Which motion was agreed to.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEY.

The engrossed bill "fixing the compensation of receivers of public moneys for their services in transmitting public moneys to safe places of deposit," was read a third time; and the question being "Shall this bill pass?" a debate arose on the bill, which can only be noticed briefly.

Mr. TRACY objected to the passage of the bill, because he was not convinced of its necessity. The House had been told, indeed, that the present compensation for this service was inadequate. That, Mr. T. said, was a matter of opinion, depending on each one's notion of what was or was not adequate. Before he voted on the question, he should like to know what were the actual emoluments of these land officers. Almost every day, he said, he received letters from old acquaintances of his who had migrated to the West, earnestly requesting him to procure them situations in these land offices, from which he presumed these employments were lucrative. Whenever he found these or any other public officers resigning their offices in consequence of the inadequacy of their compensation, he should become alarmed for the consequences, and willing to increase their compensation; but, under present circumstances, he did not feel any disposition to do so in this case, &c.

Mr. ROSS was in favor of the bill. It was well known to all who were acquainted with the business of the Land Office, and with the manner in which it is transacted, that the compensation for the transmission of public moneys is wholly inadequate to the risk and labor of the duty, which Mr. R. fully explained. Some of the land officers have now to travel two or three hundred miles to carry the public money to the place of deposit, at their own risk, and without compensation, the present compensation looking only to the receiving and safe-keeping of the money, &c.

Mr. WOOD rose for further information before he gave his vote on this bill. He said the result of the examination he had made into the emoluments of the land officers, as far as he had the means of examining them, was, that he found them to be, in some cases, very large. In the case of the Cahawba land office, for example, he found the emoluments must have been something like five thousand dollars in one year, to which this bill would add four thousand more, making something like nine thousand dollars, while at other land offices, the officers received comparatively very little compensation. He suggested these things for consideration only, that gentlemen might be prepared to give the necessary information on the subject at another day.

Mr. BARBER, of Ohio, called for the reading of the provisions of a law which limits the compensation of receivers and registers of land offices to $3,000 per annum.

Mr. WOOD said he had not before been aware of this provision; but it did not materially affect the objection which he had stated to the present bill, as adding too much to that compensation.

Mr. COOK examined, somewhat in detail, the subject of this bill, which he said appeared to him to be entirely misunderstood. The compensation proposed to be allowed for the transmission of money was to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and was not to exceed one per cent. If the necessary expense of transporting it should be but a quarter per cent., more than that could not be allowed. One per cent. was the maximum of the allowance to be made for this service. The bill would not, he said, put a solitary cent into the pockets of the land officers more than they now receive, and only proposed to defray the additional expense arising from the insolvency of most of the Western banks, and their ceasing to become places of deposit for the public money. The Secretary of the Treasury, who saw the evil of the present system, had come forward and recommended this measure, which Mr. C. hoped would be adopted.

Mr. SLOANE confirmed the statements which had been made of the law and the facts in favor of this bill.

Mr. RANKIN added further explanations on the subject. Notwithstanding whatever partial views might be taken of the emoluments of the land officers, yet, take one year with another, he believed the compensation now allowed to them to be wholly inadequate to the services rendered. The gentleman from New York had adverted to the number of persons who seek for those offices, as constituting an argument in favor of their lucrativeness. Mr. R. said he too had some experience of the nature of that stated by the gentleman from New York; but he asked that gentleman if he had ever heard of any public office that was not sought after. It was wholly immaterial what were the emoluments of any public office, applicants enough would be found for it. The effect of lowering the salaries annexed to public employment was not to diminish the number of applicants for them, but to get incompetent men to fill them. This, Mr. R. said, was false economy. He protested against it, as injurious to the best interests of the country. Immediately after the war, distraction seemed to have seized on all classes of the people in their rage for speculation in the public lands, as in every thing else. The quantity of land sold at some of the land offices was immense; in consequence of which Congress thought proper to diminish the per centage on the sales of public lands which had been allowed to the registers and receivers. But, since that time, things had retired to their natural channel, and the compensations of these officers had become decidedly inadequate to their duties.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Porto Rico Expedition.

H. OF R.

Mr. BARBER, of Ohio, stated the fact as to the land office in the district in which he resided. The money received had to be transported quarterly, often in specie, and on horseback, one hundred miles to the place of deposit; and, including the necessary expense of travelling, &c., the one per cent. proposed to be allowed would hardly pay the cost of transportation.

Mr. STERLING, of New York, was not ready, he said, to vote on this bill. By a report which was made at the last session of Congress, he had been perfectly satisfied that the expenses of the land offices were greater than necessary, and that the officers themselves were already abundantly rewarded for their services. At the Cahawba land office, he found the register and receiver charging, together, $4,000 for clerk hire alone, which was considered an incidental expense. High charges were also made for rent, &c., making the whole amount of "incidental expenses" at Cahawba for the year 1820, and the three first quarters of the year 1821, to be more than $8,000. It struck him there was something wrong in this—that the expenditures were larger than they ought to be; and, until he was satisfied on that point, he could not give his vote for the bill. He moved therefore, for the present, that the bill lie on the table.

On the vote, the bill was ordered to lie on the table as moved.

PORTO RICO EXPEDITION.

The House then resumed the consideration of the following resolution, yesterday submitted by Mr. COLDEN:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House such information as he may possess, with regard to any hostile expedition which may have been prepared in the United States, and sailed from thence, within the present year, against the territory or dependency of any Power in amity with the United States, and to inform this House whether any measures have been taken to bring to condign punishment persons who may have been concerned in such expedition, contrary to the laws of the United States.

Mr. LITTLE moved to strike out all that part of the resolution which follows the word "States," in the 7th line, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"And inform this House what amendments to the existing laws are necessary to punish persons who may have been concerned in any such expedition."

Mr. COLDEN said he had no objection to this amendment, as he understood it, though for his own part he believed that the existing laws were competent to the purpose of punishing this offence against the public peace. It was punishable, by law, by imprisonment not exceeding three years, and also by fine. It appeared proper, Mr. C. said, that he should ask the attention of the House for a few minutes, whilst he explained the considerations which had induced him to propose this resolution. It was well understood, he presumed, that it had reference to an expedition, said to have been fitted out from our ports against the dependency of a country with which we are in amity—he meant the expedition against the Island of Porto Rico. Although we have no further information on the subject than what is derived from the newspapers, he believed the information was of that sort to justify the proposition now on the table. In regard to this subject, Mr. C. said there had been various reports. It had been stated that a considerable hostile expedition had been fitted out from our shores—partly, it was said, from the port of Philadelphia; in part from the port of Baltimore, and in part from New York. The accounts of it were contradictory, but all agreed in this: that such an expedition had departed from this country. It appeared to him there were some considerations connected with this expedition, which deserved the consideration of the House. It must be recollected by all, that, not long since, the United States had taken possession of one of the dependencies of this very power, viz., Amelia Island. Our justification for doing so, was, that it was a harbor for pirates, or a place where expeditions were fitted out without the interference of the Government of Spain to prevent it. It was not long since, moreover, we had made applications to Spain and to her colonial government of Cuba, remonstrating to that Power, that she had not done her duty to us and to the world, inasmuch as she has not restrained the enterprises of individuals from her ports; and it was a remarkable circumstance, that at the very time this expedition was fitted out to wrest from the mother country this dependency of Porto Rico, we had a negotiator there remonstrating with the Governor of that dependency in strong terms, but with a courtesy and propriety of manner which did honor to the naval character (Captain Spence) who conducted the negotiation, against the unlawful expeditions fitted from that port to cruise on the high seas. Another singular circumstance, Mr. C. said, was worth notice: that one of the persons at the head of this hostile expedition, he who signed his name as Secretary of State, was a gentleman who, not very long ago, was diplomatic agent of this Government to

H. OF R.

Porto Rico Expedition.

DECEMBER, 1822.

the territories of that Government to which Porto Rico was a dependency. Mr. C. said it was not his intention, by this resolution, to cast censure on any one. We do know, said he, that expeditions may be fitted out from our ports without our Government having knowledge of the fact, or the means of preventing it. It was quite probable the President might answer, to this resolution, that he had no information on the subject; or, if he did not, he might tell the House that he has directed the proper officers to investigate the transaction in question. In either case, Mr. C. said, he should be satisfied. His great object was to show to other nations that, while we demand justice from them, we are not indifferent to the conduct of our own citizens.

Mr. C. on further reflection, and consulting members near him, declined assenting to the amendment proposed by Mr. LITTLE; and the question being on agreeing to that amendment—

Mr. CONDUCT objected to it as contemplating an alteration in the laws for the punishment of offences already committed, thus giving to them an ex post facto operation.

Mr. HILL had another objection to the amendment. It was the first time, he said, he had ever heard it proposed to apply to the President for his opinion what laws Congress ought to pass upon any subject.

Mr. TRACY objected to the amendment on the grounds taken by the two gentlemen who preceded him, and enlarged upon them.

Mr. LITTLE said his reason for proposing any amendment to this resolution was, that he felt no disposition to give his assent to a resolution which called in question the conduct of the Executive of the country in relation to an alleged violation of existing laws. He did not feel himself justified in voting for a declaration, in effect, that the proper authorities have refused or neglected to execute the laws of the Union. His amendment was drawn up in haste, on the suggestion of the moment, and certainly not with the most distant idea of passing ex post facto laws. His object was, to devise laws to punish offences of this description that may be hereafter committed, if such laws do not now exist. If the gentleman would consent to strike out the latter clause, Mr. L. said he would waive his proposed amendment, leaving the question of law to be examined by the proper committees of this House.

Mr. L. then withdrew his amendment and moved to strike out the latter clause of the resolve, without proposing to substitute any thing for it.

Mr. COCKE said he hoped the House would not agree to strike out the latter clause of the resolution. It only proposed to inquire of the President whether any measures had been taken by the Government to bring to punishment the persons, if any, who have been concerned in fitting out an expedition from our ports. If the President has been apprized of prosecutions having been set on foot against those persons, it will be necessary for this House to proceed further. But, suppose it should not be so, and the President should tell the House he had received no information to justify a prosecution; the subject would then be fairly before the House, and it would take such measures to punish those who shall be guilty of violations of public peace as it should deem necessary. For his part, Mr. C. said, he could not perceive in this resolution any imputations against any body. All that was asked for was information. There was no imputation whatever against the President in the clause proposed to be stricken out; and he hoped the House would retain it and get all the information on the subject which the resolution calls for.

Mr. WRIGHT did not approve of the idea of calling on the President to know what laws were to be passed, or what prosecutions had been instituted, in regard to this or any other matter. The proper course, he thought, would be, to refer these inquiries to the Judiciary Committee. It was the duty of this House to know what the laws of the country are, and not to go to the President for information on that head. Besides, to refer an inquiry of this sort to the Executive would be to blend and confound its duties with those of the Judiciary. Mr. W. protested against the idea of passing laws to punish those who have committed crimes not heretofore provided for. Every heart must revolt, he said, against a proposition of that sort. Even the Supreme Being would not inflict punishment for the disobedience of his laws, if he had not previously communicated it. No law can be violated which has not pre-existed and been divulged. With regard to the description of offences against the laws of nations embraced in this resolution, Mr. W. said we had gone farther in our provisions to prevent and punish them than any other nation in the world. We feel as much indignation at them as any other people on earth, and we have gone as far to show it. The presumption, Mr. W. said, was that the Executive had done his duty in this matter; and the House could find employment enough in the discharge of its own duty, without calling on the Executive to ask him whether he has done his duty. The presumption was, that the Executive had done its duty, and the House had no right, without information to that effect, to suppose otherwise.

Mr. RHEA thought that this resolution went upon a strange principle. It presumed in the first place that a certain fact had occurred; it then presumed that the President knew of that fact; and it further presumed that measures had not been adopted to punish the persons guilty of the presumed offence. If the Executive was to be called upon by resolutions of this sort, bottomed upon hypothesis and uncertainty, the House would be involved in an endless labyrinth of difficulties. Mr. R. said he conceived it to be incumbent on the gentleman from New York to show to the House what knowledge he himself has of the facts presumed. There ought to be some evidence for the House to go upon. This House cannot know that the President has any information of such an expedition being carried on. Mr. R. concluded by repeating his call on Mr. COLDEN to give to the House the personal knowledge which he possessed on this subject.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. LITTLE added a few words in favor of his motion to strike out the latter clause of the resolution; when the question was taken on his motion, and decided in the negative.

The question was then taken on agreeing to the resolution in its original shape, and decided in the affirmative, by a large majority.

FRIDAY, December 13.

Mr. BAYLY, from Maryland, appeared and took his seat.

Mr. ALLEN, of Tennessee, presented a petition of James Royal, of that State, as also, of sundry inhabitants of the said State, on his behalf; setting forth that the said Royal lost both his eyes by the explosion of a cannon, which he was assisting in firing on an occasion of public rejoicing, and praying that a pension may be granted him; which petition was referred to a select committee; and Messrs. ALLEN of Tennessee, REID of Georgia, and BALL, were appointed the said committee.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee of Commerce, reported a bill to repeal the third section of the act, entitled "An act supplementary to an act, entitled 'An act concerning navigation.'" [This bill provides, "That the third section of the act, entitled 'An act supplementary to an act, entitled 'An act concerning navigation,' passed 15th of May, 1820, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.]"

The bill was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-day; and was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which was recommitteed the bill supplementary to, and to amend, an act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," passed 2d of March, 1799, and to repeal an act supplementary thereto, passed 20th of April, 1818, and for other purposes, reported a new bill of the same title, which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the Message from the President upon the subject of piracy, reported a bill authorizing an additional naval force for the suppression of piracy; which bill was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the committee appointed on that part of the President's Message which relates to the Cumberland Road, reported a bill for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland Road; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the same committee, also reported a bill making appropriations for the Cumberland Road; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to this House all the books and reports of the several Boards of Commissioners, and of the Recorder of Land Titles, in relation to the adjustment of land claims derived from the French and Spanish authorities situated in the now State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day.

On motion of Mr. TATNALL, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were instructed to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the act of the last session of Congress, establishing the post route from "Pensacola to St. Marks, thence to Vullusia Dexter's on the St. Johns river thence, down the river, to Picolata, and thence to St. Augustine," as to submit the selection of the most practicable and convenient route between Pensacola and St. Augustine, to the discretion of the Postmaster General.

On motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, the Committee of Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the act passed April 26th, 1816, by which was allowed an additional compensation of fifty per cent. to the compensation of certain officers of the customs, therein named.

Mr. JENNINGS submitted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the committee appointed on the 10th instant on the two per cent. fund of Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing, by law, the emission of Treasury notes, to the nominal amount of — dollars, for the purpose of extending the Western National Road, and which notes to be received only in payment of public lands to be sold by the United States.

Mr. J. made a few remarks in support of his proposition, the purport of which was, that, as one of the objections of going on with the National Road was the state of the Treasury, it was worth inquiry whether a mode of prosecuting it could not be devised, which would take nothing from the Treasury, but be beneficial to the public interest. As the resolution proposed inquiry merely, he did not conceive further remark upon it necessary.

Without further debate, the question was taken on agreeing to the resolution, and decided in the negative by a large majority. So the motion was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERS submitted for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the time allowed by law for issuing and locating Military Land Warrants, to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary Army, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. RANKIN suggested that the subject of the resolution had been already referred, he believed, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHAMBERS said the subject which had been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, was that of Virginia Military Warrants, and not that which this resolution embraced.

The resolution was agreed to.

H. OF R.

Suppression of Piracy.

DECEMBER, 1822.

On motion of Mr. HILL, the Message from the President of the United States, communicated at the last session to this House, respecting the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands, the right of soil in which is claimed by individual States, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act to repeal the third section of the act, entitled An act supplementary to an act, entitled "An act concerning navigation," was read the third time, and passed.

SUPPRESSION OF PIRACY.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and took up the following bill, being that reported this day by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An Act authorizing an additional naval force for the suppression of piracy.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to purchase or construct a sufficient number of vessels, in addition to those now employed, of such burden and construction as he may deem necessary, and to fit, equip, and man the same for immediate service, for the purpose of repressing piracy, and of affording effectual protection to the citizens and commerce of the United States in the Gulf of Mexico, and the seas and territories adjacent.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of — dollars be appropriated to meet the expenditure to be incurred as aforesaid, and paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FULLER presented a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, embracing the details of force necessary to be provided, and an estimate of the cost thereof, which was read. In conformity to the suggestions contained in that document, and to the opinion of the Naval Committee, Mr. F. moved to fill the blank in the bill with the sum of $160,000—declining to urge any arguments in support of the measure itself, as not considering them necessary.

The motion to fill the blank was agreed to.

Mr. FLOYD, of Virginia, then rose, and moved to strike out of the bill the words "purchase or," so as to require the vessels therein mentioned to be built, and not purchased. If we are to embark in schemes for spending the three or four millions in the Treasury, Mr. F. said he should prefer that the objects of the expenditure should be such as were worthy of it. He was opposed to making this appropriation for purchasing the refuse commodities of unprofitable traders—those schooners and steamboats, referred to in the letter of the Secretary just read. The mania for steamboats prevailed for a while, but the paper mania had ruined that, and there were abundance of steamboats now to sell. If any vessels were to be procured, he wished they might be such as should be permanently useful, and not such as, according to the suggestion in the Secretary's letter, might be sold after the cut-throats of Matanzas were disposed of. Mr. F. assigned some grounds on which he placed little faith in estimates of the description now presented to the House. We have had an estimate of a building for a naval seminary, to cost ten thousand dollars, which is to be as large as one of the public offices, which cost the United States a hundred thousand dollars. Further, said he, we authorized at a former session an expenditure of ninety thousand dollars, under an act for the suppression of the slave trade. It was distinctly understood in that committee that the object of this appropriation was that the vessels of the United States should be employed on the coast of Africa, and that the necessary expenditure caused by this employment should be defrayed out of this fund. And yet the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, at the following session, wondered at the oversight of Congress in not having appropriated money for this very purpose, and the Executive gravely recommended to them to make an appropriation for it. Perhaps, after these vessels were done with that are now to be procured, they might be sold, for their having seen service, at an advantage, and put money into the Treasury! He wished it might be so; for he said he was radically fond of money, and wished to keep these three millions in the Treasury for this year, and for the next year, and for the next; and perhaps we might redeem our credit by the year 1825. He was not disposed to refuse any measure which might be necessary to put down the pirates. They ought to be destroyed, and he hoped they would. But, he said, we ought to build for ourselves, and not provide the requisite force by buying old steamboats and unserviceable schooners.

Mr. FULLER said, if the question was between purchasing and building vessels, and the one could be done in any thing like the same time as the other, he should agree with the gentleman in preferring the construction to the purchase of them. Vessels constructed for the purpose might, however, be as indifferent as any that could be purchased; and it was quite likely to be the case if they should be constructed in haste. If the gentleman meant to give six or eight or ten months' time to their construction, and in the mean time let the pirates have their way, (and such must be the consequence of the success of this motion,) Mr. F. was wholly averse to it. If the vessels were to be built suddenly, of green timber, they would be worse than any that were likely to be purchased. The service for which they were intended would be a short one; and, if the vessels escaped out of it, they would be so little deteriorated as to sell for nearly or quite as much as they will have cost; and it might be an argument in favor of this plan, at least with the gentlemen who are very fond of economy, that no great loss would be sustained by the employment of this additional force. Mr. F. did not believe with Mr. FLOYD in the existence, now or heretofore, of a steamboat mania. They were almost the only objects presenting an opportunity for the exercise of the spirit of speculation, on which there had not been a mania. He was convinced that, on this subject, not only this House, but the whole nation, was in possession of its sober senses, and that a beneficial use would be made of the agency of steam under this bill, which, however, would be passed to little purpose, if, before pursuing the pirates, time were taken to build vessels for the purpose.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Suppression of Piracy.

H. OF R.

Mr. COCKE, of Tennessee, said he was sorry that any alteration should have taken place between the gentlemen from Virginia and Massachusetts, on the subject of building or purchasing steamboats. Recollect, said Mr. C., that we have three steamboats on the Ohio, which can easily be taken down to New Orleans, and thence into the Gulf of Mexico. These boats had been purchased for the use of the Government some years ago, and he presumed were yet in its possession. He was surprised to have heard an application made to the House to appropriate money for steamboats, presuming that the gentlemen would have recollected those steamboats, which, Mr. C. said, were not now engaged in service.

Mr. TOMLINSON, of Connecticut, said, he was opposed to the amendment. He was certainly very well pleased that we have three millions in the Treasury, and he would go with the gentleman from Virginia in all reasonable measures to preserve and increase that sum. But the object of the measure now proposed was not only to protect the lives of those who are employed in the public service, but also to protect commerce; that commerce which has given to us this surplus of three millions of dollars. And, he asked, would gentlemen withdraw protection from this great source of our revenue? Would they delay the preparation of this expedition, when, by doing so, they would sacrifice one of the most important interests of the country? If these vessels were to be constructed, instead of purchased, every gentleman acquainted with the subject knew that it would require a considerable time to carry the bill into effect. During the Winter our commerce is the most exposed to the depredations which this bill is intended to repress. It was in the coming months of February and March that our commerce would suffer most from these piracies, because it was in those months that it was most extensively carried on. It was necessary that the small vessels to be purchased should be fast sailers; and vessels of this sort could be more readily bought than built. Unless the object was to prevent the adoption of sufficient measures to put down the pirates, this amendment ought not to be made.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, said, he did not understand his honorable friend from Virginia, as opposing the measures necessary to put an end to piracy, but as suggesting that it would be better to build the vessels than to purchase them. Mr. S. believed that the power of purchasing these vessels ought to be given to the Executive. He believed that vessels could be bought for this service as fit for it as if built for the purpose—such vessels as were constantly building within the Chesapeake Bay—such as are captured by the pirates themselves and converted to their use. There were no vessels of their class superior to this description of vessels which are built for sale on the waters of the Chesapeake. The object of the bill, he thought, would be better answered by leaving to the Executive the right of purchasing these vessels, and he hoped that, by an exertion of this right, such a force would speedily be organized as completely to suppress piracies.

Mr. FLOYD repeated that he was not in the least opposed to taking measures for the suppression of piracy, but only to the mode in which the Executive Department of the Government proposed to make that suppression. He had no notion, he said, of purchasing steamboats to catch pirates. He adverted to the premium given during the late war with Great Britain for catching Englishmen, and the speculations on this premium, drawing therefrom an inference which the reporter heard too indistinctly to sketch.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, said that the tragedy so recently acted in the West Indies furnished to his mind a conclusive argument against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia. He assented to the general proposition that it is better to build than to purchase vessels of war of every class. The experience and professional skill of those distinguished officers who fill the place of Commissioners of the Navy Board with so much honor to themselves and advantage to the nation, were appreciated by none more highly than by him. On all occasions when imperative necessity did not forbid, he should advocate the propriety of having our national vessels constructed under their superintendence. But, in our present exigency, said Mr. TAYLOR, we cannot wait the slow process of construction. We have no time to lose. Piracies are multiplied to an alarming degree. It is to the disgrace of civilized nations that they have been perpetrated so long, so wantonly, and under the eye of constituted authorities. Public feeling at length is aroused. But it required an invaluable sacrifice to effect it. The shade of the brave departed ALLEN invokes immediate protection for our defenceless seamen. This youthful hero is laid in his grave, distant, far distant from his native land, and from the protecting roof which filial piety had afforded to his now disconsolate friends. He was slain by ignoble hands, but he fell in a glorious cause. Humanity weeps over the tomb of her champion, and demands of his murderers an awful retribution. He poured out his life in conflict against the foe of God and man, and the voice of God and man cry for speedy vengeance. Let us, in justice to public feeling, which, in every portion of our country is deep and indignant against the inhuman, the unrelenting cruelties of the pirates in the West Indies, promptly organize a force adequate to their total extermination. Tempting measures would enhance the evil; they would invite to the perpetration of new atrocities, while another—another—and yet another brave seaman would be laid by the side of the lamented Allen. Mr. T., in conclusion, expressed a hope that the gentleman from Virginia would consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. FLOYD again repeated, that he was not willing to throw any impediment in the way of the chastisement of the pirates. Allen, it was true, had been slain by the pirates. That he was a meritorious officer, Mr. F. did believe; and he did not believe that, with very few exceptions, our Navy affords any other than meritorious officers. And if the nation and Government were always as mindful of that as gentlemen seemed to be on the present occasion, we should not have to witness the spectacle of brave officers applying at this time in vain for justice at their hands. The gallant Commodore Barron would not now be refused the opportunity of active service, nor should we bestow our eulogies on the dead while we stab the reputation of the living man. Was it a privilege of the dead that justice, or more than justice should be done them, while the living are left to weep over the injustice of their country? Mr. F. said he was disposed to cherish the Navy, and even the Army, wretchedly managed as it had been. No man was more disposed than he to do justice to the Navy, or to punish piracy. The only objection he had made was to the mode of doing it; and, lest his motion for amendment might be, by the most censorious, considered as an indication of opposition to the destruction of the pirates, he withdrew it.

The question recurring on the general principle of the bill—

Mr. EUSTIS said he was well aware that it was desirable that this bill should pass without any improper delay; but it was more desirable that no bill should pass this House without the deliberate consideration due to it. He did not know that the doubt in his mind, as to an expression in that bill, was well founded, but it was of such a nature as to make it necessary for him to call the attention of the House to it. He alluded to the expression in the bill alluding to the West India seas "and territories adjacent." He doubted, for himself, whether piracy could effectually be put an end to without giving authority to our naval officers to pursue the pirates on the land, and there make them prisoners. He did not know but such a provision was necessary; but, if so, it was proper that the House should know that such an authority was given. This bill, it appeared to him, went to authorize any hostile operations necessary to accomplish the object of the suppression of piracy. He had been one of those who was in favor of passing a bill even to that extent; but he had his doubts whether this House was ready to invest the Executive with a power amounting to that of making war. He supposed cases which might arise under this bill. Our officers might pursue pirates into the Island of Cuba, and the Spanish authorities might resist them. Here was at once the commencement of hostilities between us and Spain. He did not know whether it was not worth the hazard of a war to authorize our officers to enter the territories of other Powers in search of pirates. The power which he supposed to be conveyed by the bill was one which he had no doubt the Executive, and even our Navy officers, would exercise with discretion; but it was one which ought to be reflected upon well before it was given. The same argument might be drawn from the supposed entry of a British Island as of a Spanish territory. He did not rise to make a motion, but to suggest a doubt; and if that doubt were confined to himself, he should not object to the bill as it stood.

Mr. FULLER said, the committee which reported this bill, aware that there might be a difficulty on this point, had not reported a bill to authorize even the pursuing the pirates on the land, much less the entering the territories of foreign Powers to search for them. The bill was simply intended to provide for the suppression of piracy and the protection of commerce; and there was nothing in it which could by possibility warrant the construction that it was to give authority to the Executive to seek for pirates in the territories of foreign Powers. The question with regard to the law of nations on this subject, it was not necessary here to discuss; but Mr. F. confessed that he had entertained the opinion, that if an officer should find pirates escaping from his pursuit to a territory of a foreign Power, he might have a right to pursue them into the actual (not nominal) jurisdiction of that Power. Whether that was the law or not, this bill conferred no authority whatever on the subject. It was a question, the decision of which must depend on the laws of nations. On this point he had no doubt such instructions would be given by the Executive to our cruisers as would completely guard the amicable relations between the United States and foreign countries. This bill would not have the least tendency towards a different course of proceeding.

Mr. EUSTIS said, he did not understand that, according to the law of nations, any one Power has a right to make war on the territory of a neutral, for any purpose whatever. Every nation has a right to pursue pirates on the high seas, but Mr. E. very much doubted whether the officers of one nation had a right to enter the jurisdictional limits of another country for any purpose whatever. We have a right to execute our own laws, but not to undertake to make or execute law for another country. The power to pursue pirates into the territories of another nation was a very broad one: it was in fact a power to make war. If the bill were to pass in this shape, not only would the Executive and its officers feel disposed to fulfil the wishes of the Legislature, but they would be bound to do it. He did not wish to be considered as making unnecessary objections; but it appeared to him that Congress could not, consistently with the laws of nations, confer the power which this bill appeared to him to give.

Mr. WRIGHT hoped the House would give all the power which the bill proposed to give—he was sure it would not be abused. Mr. W. made some other remarks, in the course of which he intimated a wish that Congress would give to our naval officers a broader and more absolute power, in regard to the pirates, than any with which this bill could clothe them.

Mr. A. SMYTH, of Virginia, proposed an amendment, to constitute the third section of the bill, in the following words:

DECEMBER, 1822.

Suppression of Piracy.

H. OF R.

"And be it further enacted, That the President be and he is hereby authorized and required, to pursue the pirates by land, on any of the West India islands to which they may resort, as well as on the ocean, until they are exterminated."

Mr. S. said, as the power of doing this was doubted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, he thought it essentially necessary that the question as to the power should be met and decided here. He trusted Congress would not pass a law in which the duty of the Executive was undefined, so as to throw the responsibility from themselves upon the Executive. If any responsibility is to be borne in respect to this matter, Mr. S. said, let it fall here. He proposed, by his amendment, not only that the Executive should have the power, but that it should be its duty, to pursue the pirates wherever they may retreat. Pirates are to be considered as the enemies of all mankind; all nations should be considered as allies against them, and we should be considered as allies of all other Powers in pursuing the pirates in the West Indian seas. But, whether we were considered so or not, it is lawful, even in national war, where an enemy passes into a neutral territory, to pursue that enemy thither. Every nation, moreover, has a right to put down piracy. If we have a right to exterminate the pirates, we have a right to adopt the necessary means to accomplish the object, which cannot be effected without our allowing our Navy to go further than the gentleman from Massachusetts proposed. That gentleman would confine its operations to the ocean. According to that strictness of limitation, our officers are not to enter a bay or creek to pursue the pirates. Foreign nations, Mr. S. said, act too much by reason to take exceptions to our measures. But, said he, let us give a direct sanction to the necessary measures; let this amendment be adopted, that it may be understood the pirates are to be pursued until they are entirely destroyed, wherever found.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, felt as strongly as any one the necessity of effectual measures for the suppression of piracy; but we ought, in concerting our measures for that purpose, to be at least persuaded that they are calculated to effect the object in view, and not to involve us in more serious difficulties. By the amendment now proposed to this bill, the utmost scope is given—no limit is opposed to the power of the Government to authorize our cruisers to pursue pirates, or supposed pirates, wherever they please; and they may invade, at pleasure, the dominions of a friendly Power in pursuit of any whom they may suppose to be pirates. We have not the right, said Mr. McL., on any principle of the laws of nations with which I am acquainted, to adopt such a provision. Nor is it necessary for the objects in view that we should adopt any such provision. In framing our laws, we ought to have regard to the laws of nations, by which we ourselves profess to be governed in our conduct towards other nations, and by which we insist that other nations shall be governed in their conduct towards us. We have no right to pursue even a pirate into the territory of a neutral or friendly Power, until that Power has refused to interpose, or is incompetent by reason of its own imbecility to prevent and punish the crime. Has this House any information that the Government of Spain has refused its aid to suppress these piracies, or that she is incompetent to do it? We have no such information, nor any on which we could ground such a measure as that which is proposed by the amendment; and if we were to pursue pirates on her territory, the result would be an immediate complaint of such invasion of her territorial rights. And what answer could we return to such complaint? Could we say that the Government of Spain was unable or unwilling to interpose its aid to prevent the recurrence of such piracies? We could not, because on that point we have no information. But, was it necessary, for our purpose, to pursue these pirates on the land? Was it not almost certain they might be put down without our doing so? The documents upon the table state the opinion of the Executive and of the Navy Department to be explicitly that this object may be accomplished in the course of a few months, without any such desperate and dangerous remedy as is contained in this amendment, which it would be time enough to consider when its consideration was forced upon us by the necessity of the case. Let us, said he, give the Executive this appropriation. Let us enable it to send out this force, and after it has been employed promptly and to the utmost extent of its capacity—if, after the Executive has used every means in its hands, we find these pirates cannot be exterminated, let us remonstrate and call on the Spanish Government to expel them from its coasts and territories. If, after this, the Spanish Government refuses or is unable to do its duty, then I will go with the gentleman. But, Mr. McL. said, until it is demonstrated that our means proposed to be applied to this object are insufficient, he could not agree to a proposition which seemed to be fraught with so much evil as the proposed amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT thought the gentleman from Delaware had not taken a full view of this subject. Pirates, Mr. W. said, are enemies to all the world—hostes humani generis. As to going upon the shores of other nations to look for them, he was not for going quite as far as his honorable friend from Virginia. But as far as the law of nations could go, he would—wherever pirates were found, he would pursue them, within or without the jurisdiction of another Power, to the very shore—nay, he would go further, and capture them upon any shore. He should not be afraid of offending any nation by pursuing pirates, because no nation claims them. A pirate is a pirate; to whatever country he may have belonged, he offends by piracy equally its laws and those of every other nation. Mr. W. added some other remarks, as to what would be the proper destiny of the pirates, which the Reporter did not distinctly hear. It is believed, however, he proposed to send and exchange them with the Turks for the Greeks whom they have carried and sold into captivity.

H. OF R.

Suppression of Piracy.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Mr. COOK, of Illinois, suggested a modification of Mr. SMYTH's amendment, which, being adopted, he should be decidedly in favor of the amendment. His modification was to add, after the word "islands," in the third line of Mr. SMYTH's amendment, the following words: "permission being first had from the Government to which such island may belong."

Mr. C. said, in support of his suggestion, that on the atrocity of the crime of piracy, and the necessity for its suppression, there appeared to be but one opinion. There could be no member of this House who could believe that any Government would so far countenance piracy as to refuse to another Government, magnanimously stepping forward to arm and fit out a proper force to subdue the pirates—no nation would have so little regard to its own character as to refuse to that Government permission to take them wherever they might be pursued. Although this permission could not be immediately ascertained, there would be time enough to ascertain it before piracy could be entirely put an end to.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, of New York, said there seemed to be a fatality in every thing connected with these pirates. When our vessels capture them, ill-timed clemency saves them from the gallows; and when we capture vessels which are to all intents pirates, they make their escape from a just fate through the sinuosities of the law. Now, we have a bill before us for putting an end to piracy, which calls for prompt action, and its progress is impeded by needless propositions for amendment. This bill, Mr. C. said, did not call for any land force to take possession of any territory; nor were we now required to discuss any question of national law. This bill does not authorize the President to send a land force to pursue the pirates and break up their establishments. Whenever that great question comes up, it will be time enough to discuss it. At present, however, he hoped gentlemen would throw no needless impediment in the way of this bill. He should himself vote against this amendment, or any other resembling it. He liked the bill as it was; and he hoped our officers, when in pursuit of those pirates, would not pause at an imaginary line. He hoped, he said, that the pursuit of the pirates would not involve us in war; but, if war must be the consequence, he hoped every member of this House was prepared to abide by it. He hoped the bill would pass, and that the questions of law which do not belong to it would be deferred to a future day.

Mr. A. SMYTH, of Virginia, said if Mr. COOK would modify his amendment by substituting the word "requested" for the word "had," he would accept it as part of his motion. If permission were requested, whether it were accorded or refused, our course ought to be the same.

Mr. COOK agreed in opinion with Mr. S. on this point, and altered his amendment accordingly, which Mr. S. then accepted as a part of his motion to amend the bill.

Mr. C. made some further observations in favor of the amendment as amended. New Orleans, he said, was the only outlet for the whole produce of the Western country, all of which was in its transit exposed to these marauding pirates. No part of the country therefore was more interested in prompt measures against these depredators, than that of which he was one of the Representatives. He supposed several cases which might arise to make indispensable the exercise of such a power as this amendment would give, in doing which he took occasion to remark that our naval officers were the proudest of our public officers, most zealous of the honor of their country, and taking the greatest interest in protecting it. He concluded, by saying, that there would be time to ask the permission suggested in the amendment; if it should be refused, he should then be ready to go with gentlemen as far as they proposed, though war should be the consequence.

Mr. BARBOUR (the Speaker) was equally opposed to the amendment as now modified and as originally proposed. If, he said, the House were now legislating on a subject on which it had complete power unconnected with national law, they might give to it what direction they pleased. But the power of any nation in relation to pirates depends on the doctrines of the law of nations. We cannot, therefore, said Mr. B. by legislating here, impart any power to the Executive in regard to this subject beyond what is authorized by the law of nations. He put this question to the House: The President is Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States; in the execution of any duty in which he is to call the Army and Navy into action, he is to act according to his legitimate power. If the subject be one on which the legislation of Congress is binding, he will follow the law. If the subject be one upon which the law of nations prescribes the rule of conduct, he will follow that. Without this House, then, deciding the question of the law of nations, it is sufficient for us that the Executive has the question to decide, and that it is one on which this House ought not to attempt a decision. With regard to the idea of pirates being the enemies of the human race, there could be no doubt of it, and on the great highway of nations we have a right to take them and deal with them as we please. But it was another question how far we have a right to pursue them on the territory of another and a friendly Power. As to the idea of all nations being allies on such an occasion, the gentleman should recollect that there are no allies until the parties have determined to make war together. All nations have a right to make war; but whether they will actually engage in it, is a question for every nation to determine for itself. The argument of his colleague was therefore, Mr. B. said, in this particular, founded on a presumption which did not exist. Without having referred to the books on this subject, Mr. B. expressed his opinion to be, that we have not a right to enter into the territory of any neutral Power to suppress piracy, at least until it is ascertained that such nation has consented to our doing so. Whatever rule we apply, it ought to be recollected, may of right be reciprocated upon us; and he asked the gentleman whether he would allow any foreign Power to land troops on our shores, or march through our country, on the plea of seeking for pirates? Mr. B. concluded by expressing generally his decided objection to the amendment.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Suppression of Piracy.

H. of R.

Mr. FLOYD thought the objections which had been urged to the amendment were forcible. He could not vote for it himself. In the first place, it was little short of actual war. Was there any nation so object, he said, that it would not go to war with the United States rather than submit to the practical operation of a principle like that embraced in the amendment? The law of nations, he knew, provided for the punishment of bad neighbors, and provided even in some cases for the expulsion of them from their territory and the occupation of it by another Power. The shortest way for gentlemen, then, would be to go to the root of the evil, and take possession of Cuba! But, Mr. F. said, we have set out wrong, in regard to the suppression of piracy. The Constitution of the United States says Congress shall have power to define and punish piracy. Congress have never yet defined it, though they have undertaken to punish it. Mr. F. concluded by saying he was willing, as long as he was a member of Congress, to take upon himself his share of any responsibility which might pertain to this body; but he was not willing to put a power into the hands of the Executive, the responsibility for the exercise of which would apply to this body, and not to the Executive.

Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia, objected to all parts of the amendment. He objected to it on several grounds; among which, one was, that it proposed in effect to divest Congress and give to the Executive the power to make war. Nor was this all. No nation, though having just cause of war, has a right to make war, until the grounds of the war have been submitted to the adversary Power, and the demand for reparation of the injury has been found unavailing. This amendment, however, said Mr. A., goes to give the Executive the power to make war, in a case in which even we, the Representatives of the People, could not have the power. From mere wantonness, or volition of any officer, under the amendment, war might be made on the territories of Spain or any other Power. There is no such power even in us, said he; no such power could be given to us by the people whom we represent, and we could not confer such a power. We have been told, by recent advices from Europe, that application has been made by the British Government to that of Spain for the very permission to pursue the pirates which is contemplated by this amendment. Now, Mr. A. put it to this House, whether it would not only give power to the Executive to make war upon a foreign nation, but also authority to depute that power; whether it would do so without any necessity whatever, when we know too that permission has been obtained by another Power from that foreign Power to pursue the pirates on its territory, and may be obtained for this Government also if desired. The amendment he considered therefore to be not only inconsistent with the principles of public law, but with the necessity in which we are placed at this time, &c.

Mr. FULLER concurred generally in the sentiments of the gentlemen who had last spoken, and added, further, that so far from giving more power to the bill than it contains, the amendment will lessen the power of the Executive, by obliging it to stop short in pursuit of the pirates on arriving at the jurisdictional line of another Power, until an opportunity may occur for asking of that Government permission to pass it, &c.

Mr. COLDEN said, referring to Mr. EUSTIS's suggestion, that, as he understood the bill, no power was proposed to be communicated by it to the Executive which the Executive does not possess—not power which he is not in the exercise of as an authority derived, not from this House, but from the law of nations. Mr. C. adverted to the phraseology of the bill: the only thing which looked like giving power was that sentence which defines the purposes for which the force about to be created is to be employed. Did this enlarge the powers of the Executive? Surely not. Whence was derived the power which is now exercised by the Executive in regard to piracy? There has been no law passed by Congress defining piracy: it is under the law of nations that we pursue and capture pirates. Under this law it is not necessary that we should be on land to be in the territory of another Power. We are in his territory when within the limits which define the extent of his jurisdiction over the sea, viz: the distance of cannon shot (or three miles) from the shore. By the use of the word "territories," therefore, no power was intended to be given by this bill. The President will exercise the same power, after the passage of this bill, that he does now, and to the same degree, under the law of nations. Mr. C. then directed his attention to the amendment which was now before the House. It proposed to extend the power of the Executive beyond the law of nations, and would be so far nugatory. Was it possible such a right could exist as was there assumed? Our own feelings tell us, said he, that this right can be no part of the law of nations. That law is founded on the common feeling and common consent of all mankind; and it would be at once acknowledged, on reflection, that there could be no common feeling or common consent in favor of such a provision. You cannot pursue a pirate on the inhabited territory or in the towns or fortifications of another Power; but still, said Mr. C., I do not believe the law of nations ties up the hands of those who are in pursuit of these common depredators, so that the moment they put their foot on the territory of a nation in amity with us, we must cease to follow them. Whatever is the power in this respect, however, the President now possesses it under the law of nations. The modification of the amendment, Mr. C. considered worse than the original amendment, because, by that, if he was right, an unjust limit was proposed to be set to the power of the Executive; for, it would be easily conceived that, if it was made the duty of the cruising officer to ask the permission there referred to, there would be no such thing as giving effect to the armament about to be fitted out. Mr. C. supposed cases to show, without theorizing, its practical effect. The true line of right, in this case, was so plain, it might be said to be written by the finger of God on the hearts of men, and might be thus rendered: You shall not pursue these pirates on my territory where I have a force sufficient to correct them; by doing so, you violate my rights; but, when the depredator flies into that part of my territory where I cannot exercise authority, you may pursue him. So that, if the pirates land on one of the keys in the West Indies, can any one doubt our right to pursue them, whoever claims dominion of the naked soil? The simple object of this bill was, to put into the hands of the Executive the means of executing the laws of nations with regard to pirates, and he hoped it would pass without amendment.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, said he did not know but he should be disposed to legislate to the utmost verge of the powers of this House for the suppression of piracy; but he was not perfectly satisfied what that verge was, or that this Committee was at this moment well advised of it. He thought himself that the character of the country was concerned in the passage of any legislative act which may in itself violate national law. He did not say that any proposition now before the House did so. He was ready to vote for the bill as it stood; but he thought it advisable that more time should be taken to consider its provisions—that it might be voted upon on Monday with more fixed opinions than gentlemen appeared now to entertain. The law of nations, he said, was not very occult; but whilst gentlemen learned in the law had, in this debate, differed in opinion as to what the law is, was it not due to the character of the House and the nation to take care, whilst legislating to the very verge of its powers, they did not go beyond that point. He proposed, therefore, that the Committee should rise.

Mr. MALLARY earnestly urged the House not to rise and leave this business in suspense. If acted upon at all, it should be promptly. It was important, moreover, that in this bill there should be involved no point of law to delay its passage and execution. The points of national law might be reserved, and yet discussed, if gentlemen chose, before the expedition sailed.

Mr. SMITH, yielding to the suggestion of Mr. MALLARY, and considering this properly and merely an appropriation bill, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. FLOYD moved to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting the following, (being a copy of the bill on the same subject, reported in the Senate:)

“That, for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States to afford more efficient protection to the commerce of the United States, from the depredation of pirates in the Gulf of Mexico and the West Indian seas, the sum of one hundred and sixty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated; which sum shall be used by the President in providing such an additional force as, in his judgment, shall be best calculated to answer the end aforesaid.”

This motion was negatived.

The bill was then reported to the House in its original form (as given in the beginning of the debate) and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

It was accordingly read a third time, passed without a division, and ordered to be sent to the Senate for concurrence.

Adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 16.

Another member, to wit: from Pennsylvania, Mr. BUCHANAN appeared, and took his seat.

Mr. MERCER presented a memorial of Robert Young and Richard Bland Lee, judges of the orphan's court of the respective counties of Alexandria and Washington, in the District of Columbia, praying that the said courts may be reorganized upon the plan proposed in the code of jurisprudence, prepared in pursuance of an order of Congress, of the 29th April, 1816, by William Cranch, Chief Justice of said District.

Mr. M. also presented a petition of John Wheelwright, of the District of Columbia, praying to be divorced from his wife, Caroline Eliza Wheelwright, on the ground of her insanity at the present, as well as at the time of their marriage.—Referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. RHEA, from the Committee of Pensions and Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill concerning Invalid Pensions; which was twice read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of Lucy Lamb; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The resolution submitted by Mr. SCOTT on the 13th instant was taken up, and agreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. NEWTON, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing a light vessel at or near Cape Hatteras, in the State of North Carolina.

Mr. COCKE submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before this House a statement, showing the amount expended for the current expenses of the Ordnance department, during the years 1817, 1818, 1819, 1820, and 1821; and as much as can be shown of said expenditure for the year 1822; with the particular items for which the money was expended, the place where, and the persons to whom paid: What quantity of timber has been procured for gun-carriages and caissons, its cost annually, and where deposited; the quantity of ordnance of every kind that has been procured during those years, or paid for; the sums expended in the purchase of sites for arsenals since the peace; the cost of the buildings erected thereon, and whether all those arsenals are necessary for the service of the United States.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Clothing the Militia.

H. OF R.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, of New York, the reports from the several public offices respecting the expenses of the said offices, were taken up, and referred, respectively, to the several committees on the expenditures of the different departments.

On motion of Mr. BASSETT, the House then resumed the consideration of the bill concerning the disbursement of public moneys, and the amendments made in Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. B., the bill received a further small amendment respecting the settlement of particular accounts in the War Department; and then the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMSON submitted the following resolve for adoption:

Resolved, That the Library Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, that a single copy of all such laws, resolves, reports, and Executive communications, of the National Government, as may be printed by order of either House of Congress, be hereafter, from year to year, allowed, and sent gratis, to the oldest principal or other college corporation, or some literary incorporated society in each State.

And, without debate, the question being taken on agreeing thereto, it was decided in the negative. So the resolve was rejected.

THREE PER CENT. FUND.

Mr. WOODCOCK called the attention of the House to the rejection, on the last day's sitting, of a resolution proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, respecting the three per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of public lands in Indiana, &c., against which resolution, Mr. W. said, he had voted. Mr. W. rose to move for a reconsideration of that resolution. The state of this fund, he said, was a proper subject of inquiry, though he would not pledge himself to vote for the specific proposition contained in that resolution. That the gentleman, however, might have an opportunity of bringing the subject fairly before the House, Mr. W. wished to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BASSETT reminded the gentleman from New York, that this resolution did not propose an inquiry into the state of the fund referred to, but an issue of Treasury notes to be in some manner or other connected with it.

Mr. JENNINGS said his object was not, should the vote of Friday be reconsidered, to ask the House now to act upon his proposition, but to move to lay it on the table, with a view to call it up at a future day, by which time it would probably be more reflected upon and better understood than now.

The question on reconsidering the vote of Friday was then taken and agreed to; and, on motion of Mr. JENNINGS, the resolution, now again before the House, was ordered to lie on the table.

17th CON. 2d SESS.—13

ROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. STEWART moved the following:

"Resolved, That the subject of roads and canals be referred to a select committee."

Mr. BASSETT suggested that the subject was already before a committee, appointed on a part of the President's Message.

The SPEAKER stated, that the committee referred to was appointed on so much of the Message as relates to the Cumberland Road.

Mr. STEWART said he had received petitions looking to an improvement of a different description from roads; and, until a committee were appointed on the general subject, he was at a loss how to dispose of them.

The question was then taken on agreeing to Mr. STEWART's proposition, and decided in the affirmative; and Messrs. STEWART, REED of Georgia, HAWKES, MATSON, BALL, BURTON, and VANCE, were appointed the said committee.

LIEUTENANT PIERCE.

Mr. FARRELLY submitted the following motion for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of making some provision for the support of the widow and child of Lieutenant George Pierce, of the United States Navy, who lately died of the yellow fever, contracted on board of the frigate Macedonia, when in the service of his country.

Mr. FARRELLY accompanied this motion with a few observations. It was, he conceived, of a nature analogous to that adopted the other day, proposing to provide for the support of the mother of the late Lieutenant Allen. It was true, he said, that Lieutenant Pierce did not fall in battle, but he lost his life in the service of his country, pursuing the common enemy of all nations into a pestilential climate. Mr. F. said it was his fortune to know Lieutenant Pierce when on service at Erie, where he was distinguished for the strictness of his discipline, and for every trait which distinguishes a gentleman, which endeared him to all who knew him. His wife (whom he married at Erie) and his child were now, he understood, in Virginia, without even means of returning to the place of her nativity. Mr. F. said he could not see any thing in the circumstances of this case, which made the duty to provide for the family of the deceased less incumbent than it would have been had he fallen by the hands of the robbers whom he was in pursuit of, in which case, by the existing provisions of our laws, his family would have been entitled to a pension, &c.

The question was taken, without further debate, on agreeing to the resolution, and decided in the affirmative by a small majority—57 votes to 54.

CLOTHING THE MILITIA.

The House proceeded to consider the bill to provide for clothing the militia when called into the service of the United States; the first section whereof is as follows:

"That the non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, of the militia, who may hereafter be called into the service of the United States, shall, in addition to the pay and emoluments heretofore allowed by law, be entitled to, and receive, the value of a full suit of clothing, in all cases where they shall perform a six months' tour of duty, and furnish themselves with clothing sufficient for the said term of service; and, in all cases where they shall be called on for a shorter period, or shall be discharged from the service before the expiration of the time for which they had been required, they shall be entitled to receive such proportion of the value of a suit of clothing as may be equal to the time they may have been in service."

H. OF R.

Clothing the Militia.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Mr. CANNON, conforming to the suggestion of a gentleman, made the other day, proposed an amendment to the bill, the object of which was, that the clothing to be provided by the militia and paid for by the United States, should be of such an uniform as should have been adopted by the respective States and Territories.

Mr. McCoy objected to this amendment, on the ground that the uniform provided for the militia by the State laws was in general adopted with reference to its cheapness, and composed of such light and flimsy materials as were not suited to actual service in the field.

Mr. CANNON replied to this objection, declaring at the same time that he felt himself no anxiety on the subject of this amendment.

Mr. WALWORTH took occasion to make some observations on the bill, the general principle of which he approved. He had one objection to the details of the bill, which was, that, although the militiaman was to be paid the value of his clothing, there was no means of ascertaining what that value was. He gave a brief account of the sufferings of the militia during the late war from the want of clothing, and showed how necessary it was, with a view to their entire efficiency, that they should be better provided for when in actual service than they have hitherto been.

The question was taken on Mr. CANNON'S amendment, and decided in the negative.

Mr. A. SMITH, of Virginia, moved an amendment to this effect: "Provided, That the amount to be allowed shall not exceed the cost of a full suit of clothing for non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of the United States." This amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON then made a few general observations on the bill, and recapitulated its provisions, the object of which was, that, whenever the militia were called into service, the officer calling on them should give notice to them to appear prepared with sufficient clothing for the campaign; that, when assembled, their clothing should be inspected and paid for according to its value. With regard to the principle of the bill, Mr. C. said it would be admitted by all, that clothing was almost as necessary as arms to the efficiency of an army. In more than one instance during the late war, he had seen militia who had not been in service more than twenty or thirty days, who, owing to their poor clothing and the inclemency of the weather, had become wholly unfit for service. The measure proposed by this bill was one of the foremost of those which ought to be adopted to build up the great defence of the country. He was aware, he said, that there are many who believe that no reliance ought to be placed upon the efficiency of a militia force for any national defence. The experience of the last war, Mr. C. said, had been sufficient, in his opinion, to convince the people of this country that the militia were, at last, the only safe reliance for the defence of the country in war. He hoped that this measure would be adopted and followed by others, which would make the people the efficient and safe defence of the country, as they were intended to be by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. COLDEX, of New York, considered it no more than right and just that the militia should be paid, whilst in the service of the United States, the expense of their clothing. But, inasmuch as the United States were to pay for the clothing, it appeared to him the Government ought to reserve to itself the right of prescribing what that clothing should be. There was no other way of controlling the value or quality of this clothing. The clothing of a militiaman might be very valuable to him as a citizen, and yet very unsuitable for the service in which he was engaged, &c. Mr. C. rose to propose an amendment, in the shape of a new section to be added to the bill, which he thought would obviate all difficulties in this particular. His amendment was in the following words:

"That the clothing to be furnished or provided in pursuance of this act, shall be in conformity to a uniform which the President may, from time to time, prescribe for the militia called into the service of the United States; and, unless such clothing be such uniform, no pay shall be allowed therefor."

Mr. CANNON opposed the amendment at considerable length.

Mr. FLOYD objected to this principle, as going enormously to increase the expenses of the militia service. The cost of the uniform of a soldier of the United States, he believed, was about thirty-four dollars. Of the whole number of the militia of Virginia alone, seventy-one thousand had been, at one time or other of the late war, called into the field. The expense to be incurred under such an act as this would be, in case of war, enormous. Mr. F. stated other objections to the proposed provisions of the bill, one of which was, that it would have a tendency to prevent the volunteer corps from clothing themselves, &c.

Mr. FARRELLY, adverting to the fact that the volunteers of Pennsylvania and he presumed of other States, clothed themselves, moved to add to the amendment of Mr. COLDEX an exception in the following words: "Except as to those companies of volunteers who have provided their own uniform."

This motion was negatived.

After some further observations from Mr. CANNON, against the motion of Mr. COLDEX, to which Mr. COLDEX replied—

The question was taken on agreeing to Mr. COLDEX'S motion, and decided in the negative.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. WHIPPLE thought the allowance for clothing, proposed by the bill, ought not to be made, unless where the militiaman serves out a tour of six months' duty in the field; and proposed an amendment, the object of which to make the full allowance for six months' service, and, for a less term of service, such allowance as shall be proportioned to the term actually served.

This motion was opposed by Mr. CANNON, and decidedly opposed by Mr. METCALFE, and was negatived.

Mr. A. SMYTH, of Virginia, moved an amendment to the bill, which was, to substitute for its principal provision another, viz: that the militia, when called into actual service, shall "receive three dollars per month as a compensation for furnishing their own clothing; and, if it shall be necessary, articles of clothing shall be furnished by the commissary department of the United States, to be deducted from the allowance for clothing, or from the pay of the militia at the contract prices thereof."

This motion was debated by Mr. S. SMITH, Mr. METCALFE, and Mr. ALEXANDER SMYTH, and was finally negatived—73 votes to 46.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

TUESDAY, December 17.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, it was Ordered, That the petition of James H. Clark, a pursuer in the Navy of the United States, praying to be allowed, in the settlement of his accounts, for a considerable sum of money, of which he was robbed in Marseilles, in France, while on public duty; be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

[It appeared, from a conversation between the Speaker and Mr. FULLER, that all the bills received from the Senate at the last session, and not acted upon at the last session, are defunct, and cannot be resuscitated without being originated anew. All bills originating in this House, however, at the last session, and not finally acted upon, are taken up at this session, and acted on in the order in which they stand on the roll of orders of the day.]

Mr. GOLDEN presented a memorial of Lawrence Kearney, commander of the United States brig of war "Enterprise," on behalf of himself, the officers, and crew, of said brig, setting forth, that, in execution of the orders of the Navy Department, he captured in the month of October, 1821, five piratical vessels, with two of their prizes; that he destroyed two of the piratical vessels, and with the remaining three and the two prizes arrived in the port of Charleston, in South Carolina, where the former were libelled for condemnation, and the latter for salvage; that the condemnation took place, and the claim for salvage was allowed, but that the costs of prosecution were so enormous as to amount to upwards of seven hundred dollars more than was received for the sale of the prizes, which deficiency he has been compelled to pay; and that the costs of prosecuting the claim for salvage amount to almost as much as the proceeds of said claim, leaving but a small balance to be distributed among his crew as prize-money; that the merchandise libelled for salvage paid upwards of nine thousand dollars duties into the Treasury, and praying that such part of said duties may be refunded as will make a reasonable compensation to himself, his officers, and crew, for the risk and trouble they have had in the capture aforesaid.—Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, who were instructed, on the 6th instant, "to inquire into the expediency of continuing for a further time the act, entitled "An act to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office," and to whom was also referred the petitions of Robert Wilkins, Peter Faulkner, John Hill, jr., and of the heirs of William Smith, deceased, reported a bill, extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and returning surveys thereon to the General Land Office; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made a report on the petition of John Jenkins, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EUSTIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to continue the present mode of supplying the Army of the United States, (that is, the Commissariat system;) which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EUSTIS, from the same committee, by order thereof, reported the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, requested to cause a survey to be made of the bay and river Penobscot; and to determine on the expediency of constructing a battery or other fortification in or near the town of Prospect, on the west side of Penobscot river, and in case such fortification shall be judged necessary, to cause a plan thereof, together with an estimate of the expense of erecting the same, to be laid before Congress at their next session.

The resolution was read, and, on the question to concur with the Committee on Military Affairs therein, it passed in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER communicated to the House the following letter, to wit:

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17, 1822.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have been appointed a Senator to represent the State of Maryland in the Senate of the United States, and in consequence do resign my seat in the House of Representatives. I have the honor to be, &c.

S. SMITH.

HON. PHILIP P. BARBOUR,
Speaker of the House of Reps.

Ordered, That the said letter do lie on the table, and that the Speaker of this House be directed to communicate the resignation of Mr. Smith to the Governor of the State of Maryland.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, the Committee on Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of renewing a law, granting a pre-emption of back lands in Louisiana, which expired in May last.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the Committee of Ways and Means were directed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation to defray the expenses of holding a treaty with the Cherokee nation of Indians, for the purpose of extinguishing their claim to land within the limits of North Carolina.

The bill to provide for clothing the militia of the United States when in actual service, was read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

ORDNANCE EXPENDITURES.

The House took up the resolution yesterday moved by Mr. COCKE, calling upon the President to cause to be laid before the House a particular statement of ordnance expenditures, &c. Mr. C. modified his motion so as to require in addition a statement of the whole amount of ordnance of every description now belonging to the United States.

Mr. COCKE said he wanted to know what the ordnance of the United States consisted of, at the close of the late war, and what it was now. It would be recollected, he said, that at the last session a counterpart of his resolution had been presented to the House and received its sanction. After an interval of some months, during which the information might have been obtained, the House was told that the information could not be furnished at that session. The object which Mr. C. had was to bring this motion before the Administration at as early a period as possible in the present session, that an answer might be obtained to it. Mr. C. said, it was well known that, every year, large sums of money are appropriated for the Ordnance department. How that money was disposed of he should like to know. One circumstance, however, forced itself on the mind; that, after several months' notice being given at a previous session, all the answer given to the House was that the required information could not be furnished. The conclusion, to his mind, was, that that department was, to say the least of it, a little deranged.

The resolve of Mr. COCKE was then agreed to, without objection.

DISBURSEMENT OF PUBLIC MONEY.

The engrossed bill "concerning the disbursement of public moneys," (forbidding advances on contracts) was read a third time; and the question being "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. NEWTON, of Virginia, said, he was opposed to the bill, for reasons which he would briefly state. The present system had been in operation for two and thirty years, and had been amended, from time to time, until it had been made such as to compel those who had the disbursement of public money to account for it promptly. He believed, he said, notwithstanding a considerable noise had been made about the loss of public money in its collection and disbursement, it would be found, when the subject was fairly considered, and all the facts fully known, that the total amount of losses, from the commencement of the Government, would not amount to more than about two millions and a half of dollars. In the port of New York, in which most of the duties on imports were collected, he did not know that the total loss would amount to $600,000. Mr. N. was satisfied, he said, that the Government is going on extremely well; that the accounting officers are extremely vigilant in the discharge of their duty; that all those into whose hands the public money goes, are called strictly to account for its expenditure. Why, then, he asked, pass new laws upon the subject? Things are going on very well; let us be satisfied with them as they are. Mr. N. said he believed that the greatest curse which could befall a republican people was the multiplication of unnecessary laws. Besides this general objection, however, he had other serious objections to this bill. The bill provides that no money shall be advanced to contractors but for articles furnished, the value of which shall be ascertained, and for services actually rendered. Then comes a proviso, authorizing the officers of Government to make advances when they think them necessary to the public service. Thus, Mr. N. said, the proviso neutralizes the enactment of the bill, and leaves things exactly as they now are. But suppose it does not leave things as they are. By excluding advances you put an end at once to competition, by which the public interest is so much consulted. Your most valuable citizens are at once excluded from engaging in the business of supply for the public service. The wealth of the mechanics of the United States, Mr. N. said, consists in their honesty and their enterprise; they have no other capital. They cannot make contracts, if you forbid advances to them. By doing so, you throw the business of contracts into the hands of a few men who have capital, and who will make the Government pay as high as possible for that they furnish. So far from producing the delightful system of economy which the supporters of the bill imagine, it will produce the opposite effect, of prodigality, and, in addition, will be a proscription of a large class of our fellow-citizens. This, however, was not his only objection to the bill. This House, he said, was the Grand Inquest of the nation, whose business it was to arrest and punish usurpations of power. But the House was about itself to usurp power, in dismissing persons from public offices by law, (on their failure periodically to settle their accounts, &c.) This, Mr. N. said, was an Executive power; it was one of the prerogatives of the President. If he do not do his duty in removing from office those who may neglect their duty, he is amenable to this House for his misconduct. For these, and other reasons, which he would not fatigue the House by stating, Mr. N. believed that the bill was unnecessary and ought not to pass, and should give it his decided negative.

Mr. BASSETT said that to the whole of the objections adduced by his colleague to this bill, it would be a sufficient answer, perhaps, that the

DECEMBER, 1822.

Georgia and the United States.

H. OF R.

present practice in the Government approached as nearly as possible to the system proposed in this bill. If his arguments, therefore, were well founded, they formed no objection to the bill; inasmuch as, that what was now practice in the Government could not be worse if it were made law. Mr. B. referred to the letter from the Secretary of War, yesterday read to the House, from which it appeared that that Department had found it necessary to bring the public business as nearly as possible to the system proposed by this bill. Mr. B. had further understood, in conversation with the Secretary of War, that it was desirable that the system now established in practice should be fixed and made permanent by a legislative act; because every new officer coming into the Government, unapprized and unacquainted with the difficulties of this sort which he would have to encounter under the former system of advances, &c. was thrown, before he knew it, into the very vortex of them. Was not this, Mr. B. asked, a demonstrable argument in favor of this bill and against his colleague? Mr. B. quoted the late Message of the President, to show the quantities of public money which were at one time in the hands of public agents. Are the moneys of the country, said he, to be thus thrown abroad, subject only to the accountability of individuals? Was this necessary? Could not Government be supported but on principles fraught with destruction to the public interest? And if there be an individual who is benefited by profligacy in the public expenditure, is that a reason why this bill should not pass? Mr. B. said he knew his colleague too well to suppose that he would support the principle that any individual in the Government, let his situation be what it will, is to be sustained at the public expense. Mr. B. defended the bill from the charge of partiality. The causes of discrimination between persons seeking contracts are, said Mr. B., beyond our control. Did the gentleman suppose the Government was to make contracts with persons who are paupers, and put large sums into their hands, relying upon their accountability? The gentleman would be himself one of the first to blame the Government for doing so. This bill, besides, Mr. B. said, would save the public money from being lost, and, from what appeared from the President's Message, it was high time some steps were taken to prevent further dilapidation of the public money. Mr. B. took further views of the subject, of the same import with the preceding. He particularly denied that the bill bore on the less wealthy more severely than on others, inasmuch as their contracts, he urged, would give them credit for as much money as was necessary to enable them to comply with them. And with regard to usurpation, which had been charged upon the bill, Mr. B. said he had supposed the very essence of legislation to be to lay down general rules under which those who perform the Executive functions are to act. If the Legislature were cut off from this authority, the Executive was supreme as to every thing relating to public offices, and no act of Congress could affect him, which was a doctrine which he presumed the House would not sustain, &c.

Mr. WRIGHT delivered his opinions against the bill, for a variety of reasons, some of which, from his distance, escaped the reporter. He said, however, that on inquiry it would be found that, in a variety of cases of contract for timber, the Navy Department had been obliged to advance money, in defiance of a desire to do otherwise, before the contracts could be complied with. In some instances, by accident, persons willing to contract might be found in a different station, but it was so rare as only by an exception to prove the rule, &c. Mr. W. concluded his remarks by moving that the bill lie on the table.

This motion was negatived.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill, and it was passed, by a large majority, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

GEORGIA AND THE UNITED STATES.

The House, then, according to the order of the day, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the resolutions respecting the articles of cession and agreement between the United States and the State of Georgia, as affected by the Creek and Cherokee treaties.

The resolutions are in the following words:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the above treaties as pretends to grant to the Indians fee simple titles to lands within the limits of Georgia, is a violation of the sovereign rights of that State.

2. Resolved, That so much of the said treaties as purports to grant to the Indians the rights of citizenship, is a violation of the rights of Congress.

3. Resolved, That the sum of — be appropriated for the purpose of holding treaties with the Creek and Cherokee Indians, for the extinguishment of their title to lands within the limits of Georgia.

4. Resolved, That so much of the treaty, made the 27th of February, 1819, as directs a large portion of the public lands to be sold, and the proceeds to be vested in some public stock, by the President of the United States, and to be disposed of by him for the benefit of the Cherokee Indians, does not accord with the general policy of this Government, and the power of Congress over the public property in the United States.

Mr. TATNALL, of Georgia, moved to strike out the first three of these resolutions, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

1. Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the several treaties, made between the United States and the Creek and Cherokee Indians, as provides for reserves to the Indians, of lands in fee simple, within the territory ceded to Georgia, is calculated to interfere with the sovereign rights of that State, and is in direct violation of the "articles of agreement and cession between the United States and the State of Georgia," concluded on the 24th of April, 1802.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient and proper that an appropriation be made by Congress, of a sum, adequate to the extinction of the Indian title, to the

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

{7 DECEMBER, 1822.

"reserves" embraced within the treaties above referred to.

Mr. TATNALL said it was not his intention, nor did he believe it was that of his colleagues, to detain the attention of this House by remarks upon this subject. It had been so fully discussed at the last session by one of his colleagues, and the views which he had taken of it had been so decidedly supported by the vote of this House making an appropriation for the purpose referred to in the third resolution, he should say no more on the subject now, than that the resolutions now submitted were a mere modification of those for which he proposed to substitute them. The only subject involved was that of the lands reserved to the Indians in fee simple. It would be remembered by all, that, by the articles of cession and agreement of 1802, between the United States and Georgia, it became obligatory on the United States to extinguish the fee simple, as well as the national rights of the Indians. Through the inadvertence of those who were authorized to make the treaties in question, or from some other cause, among other provisions, certain reserves in fee simple were made to particular Indians. The consequence of this was, a state of things perfectly unparalleled. For it was a fact that it was now a question agitated in the courts of Georgia whether there existed over those reservations, at this moment, any national jurisdiction whatsoever. According to his view of the matter, Mr. T. said, these spots are not at present subject to any national jurisdiction whatsoever. These resolutions called upon the House simply to enforce the agreement between the United States and Georgia—to recognise the principle that an appropriation ought to be made for this purpose. The amount of it would be a matter to be settled by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WOOD professed himself to be in want of some further information than he now had on this subject. He wished to know what was the amount involved in these reservations, &c. He suggested, also, that, as the first resolution was merely an abstract declaration, which could have no legal effect, it was calculated to embarrass the House without any correspondent advantage to the State of Georgia, &c. Mr. W. concluded by moving, in order to allow further time to examine the subject, that the Committee now rise and have leave to sit again.

Mr. TATNALL said he was not tenacious as to the first resolution. But, when money was asked to be appropriated, there appeared to be a propriety in stating the grounds of the appropriation. But, said he, give us the money, if the House choose, and we will relinquish the declarations. Give us justice, and we care nothing about resolutions. Mr. T. said he had no objection to giving further time for consideration, being well assured that, when well understood, these resolutions would not meet with the least objection.

The Committee then rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again upon the subject.

The bill to authorize certain persons in Missouri to try the titles to their lands, was next in order, and, on motion of Mr. RANKIN, was recommended to the Committee of Public Lands.

OCCUPATION OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

The next bill in order was the bill to provide for the occupation of the mouth of the Columbia river, and the House went into a Committee of the Whole on the subject.

On motion of Mr. FLOYD, the blank for the number of miles square to which the Indian title is to be extinguished was filled with thirty; and the blank for the number of acres to be allowed to each actual settler who is the head of a family was filled with three hundred and twenty.

On the suggestion of Mr. WRIGHT that the word "occupy" did not seem to him proper to apply to the settlement of a territory already ours,

Mr. FLOYD thought the word proper as implying military occupation, but, to accommodate the views of the gentleman from Maryland, moved to insert the words "with a military force" after the word "occupy."

This amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FLOYD, the blanks in the bill were filled; respecting which there was no contest, except as to the one which fixes the salary of the Governor of the proposed Territory of Oregon.

Mr. FLOYD moved $3,000; Mr. McCoy $2,000; and Mr. COLDEN $5,000.

Mr. COLDEN supported his motion by a variety of pertinent arguments, derived from the peculiar importance and seclusion of this trust; to which Mr. FLOYD did not so much object as apprehend an agreement to it might make others unfriendly to the bill.

The sum moved by Mr. FLOYD was finally agreed to.

The bill having been gone through—

Mr. FLOYD, of Virginia, rose and said that after the labor which had been bestowed upon this subject by the Committee on the Occupation of the Columbia River, and the long report which they had presented to the House, it could not be expected that he should say much that was new or interesting in support of the bill: all that he desired was to claim the indulgence of the House for a short time, until he offered a few facts which were in his possession, and such reflections as had presented themselves in support of the measure.

I know, said Mr. F., that much has been said relative to the occupation of the Columbia, or Oregon, and that the measure has been by some called fanciful, and I a bold projector; against which in the outset I must protest, as I have always conceived persons of that character to be often governed by motives other than the good of their country, though the nation may sometimes even be benefited by them. I hope, however, to show in this that benefits will result to the public; and at most it is only acting promptly, upon precisely the same principle which has directed the progress of population from the moment the English first landed in Virginia, until it has penetrated far into the bosom of the forest. I will, in the first place, notice its course.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

The first charter granted to Virginia, by King James the First of England, bears date the 10th of April, 1606, which limits the settlements to one hundred miles. In his subsequent charters the boundary is extended. But, some time after that, the authority of the Crown was used to prevent any settlement west of the Alleghany mountain; which proved to be altogether a fruitless attempt, as (to use the words of the celebrated Voltaire) "the ball of empire was rolling to the West;" no power of Government could resist its progress.

Tennessee, I believe, was settled contrary to the command of Government; and Governor Sevier, a gentleman of great enterprise, high integrity and honor, was even outlawed for having the temerity to go beyond the limits assigned to the people by their Government. I do not profess to be well acquainted with the history of that State, but I see enough of her intelligent members to correct me if I am in an error.

Kentucky, it is true, was afterwards settled by Virginia, but her citizens occupied the country at their own hazard, maintained it by their own wars, and brought it to its present state of grandeur and improvement. A more recent example is afforded us in the settlement of Boon's Lick—the finest, fairest, and most fertile part of the State of Missouri. Individual enterprise sought that country, and occupied it contrary to the wishes and authority of this Government. Of this fact I have not the proof, but have not heard the charge denied. Thus it is with those who hold authority, whether Republican, Imperial, or Royal; all take upon themselves the exclusive privilege of thinking for the people; of checking the progress of population in one direction, and fixing boundaries to it in another, beyond which they are not permitted to pass;—all must quadrate with the Executive notion of military defence. This disposition of Government checked, but the flood rolled slowly onward—"the ball of empire" is indeed "rolling to the West."

In the year 1755 the population of Virginia had spread three hundred miles into the interior of the country, comprising a period of one hundred and forty-nine years. From the year 1755 to the year 1779, owing perhaps to the war, no great change was visible in the Western frontier. At this period the Western country began to be inhabited; and down to the year 1822, comprising a period of forty-three years, we find that the population has spread over the country to the distance of one thousand and forty-one miles. The war of the Revolution put power into the hands of the people; they were not disposed to be kept cramped on sterile soil, because the military aspect of the country would better please the notions of their oppressors. Every man had a right, by our principles, to "seek his own happiness in his own way;" and the mandates which would have kept Boon's Lick a wilderness were disregarded. This short space of time is less than the life of many individuals in this House. This is not "a tale of the times of old;" it has taken place in our own day. There are strong proofs that the people perceive their own interests long before the Government can be prevailed upon to relinquish to them the privilege of acting.

The settlement on the Oregon, as contemplated by this bill, connecting the trade of that river and coast with the Missouri and the Mississippi, is to open a mine of wealth to the shipping interests and the Western country, surpassing the hopes even of avarice itself. It consists principally of things which will purchase the manufactures and products of China at a better profit than gold and silver; and if that attention is bestowed upon the country to which its value and position entitle it, it will yield a profit, producing more wealth to the nation than all the shipments which have ever in any one year been made to Canton from the United States.

These three magnificent rivers water a tract of country where the best furs in America are taken, of three thousand miles in extent, spreading from the forty-second to the forty-ninth degree of north latitude. But as the convention of London, entered into on the 20th October, 1818, does not extend beyond the Rocky mountain, the claim of the United States is believed to be much broader on that side, comprehending the most valuable copper mines on the Continent—so pure that the natives form their utensils and their ornaments of it without difficulty, and it is to be had in profuse abundance.

Most of the hunting ground on the Missouri has been for a long time in the hands of the British traders; and, until within a few years, that of the Mississippi was in the same condition, and so entirely have they been convinced of its importance that no expedient was left untried to secure the prize. They have advanced far into the interior, to make their establishment, and resorted to every means in their power to impress the Indians with unfavorable opinions in relation to the United States, which the paltry peddling factory system, with all its knavery was well calculated to fix on their minds. Under all the disadvantages which the American trader had to labor, encountering the hostility of the English, and still greater hostility of our factory system, there was produced from the Mississippi trade with the Indians, about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually; and from the Missouri below the Mandan villages, about one hundred and twenty thousand dollars a year. The capital which produced this result was small, and composed of things of little value: by opening too, a trade, far into the interior, conducted by enterprising individuals, you produce a corresponding influence, which will strongly tend to preserve the peace and good understanding which now exists with the Indians. They are a proud high spirited people: when once deceived are rarely reconciled; but as the trader's safety, his life, and his hope of gain, and prospect of success, depends upon his influence with them, and the existence and continuance of peace, you have the strongest possible assurance from him, to cultivate a good understanding with them: and in this way you will preserve peace on the frontiers more effectually than by all the laws you can pass: In war the trader is always plundered, and murdered: the more wealth he has, the less his chance of escape.

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

DECEMBER, 1822.

I will, Mr. Chairman, in this place, take some notice of the value of this trade in the hands of the English, when it has been encouraged and attended to—what a contrast! with the finest rivers in America, and almost all the fur districts, we have reaped but a scanty benefit from a trade, capable of enriching an empire. Whilst ours has yielded us only three hundred and seventy thousand dollars annually; theirs has amounted to millions for export. In the year 1803, there were exported from Quebec alone, the skins of 650,729 quadrupeds, 93,778 of which were of the beaver. A respectable and intelligent hatter of Washington City gives the following as the price here: Beaver, first quality, $5 to $6 per pound; a skin will weigh from three-fourths of a pound, to one pound and an half; muskrats, from 45 to 55 cts. per skin; raccoon 65 cts. per skin. For the year 1820, I have only the notice taken of the trade of Canada by a New York paper, it bears all the marks of an official document, and, I think, may be safely relied upon. It makes this statement: Notwithstanding the general depression of trade, the commerce of Lower Canada seems to be prosperous, and, from a list of exports and imports for the year 1820, we conclude the colony is gradually becoming a very important and valuable addition to the British Crown. In the last year 585 vessels, 147,754 tons, and 6,767 men, entered the port of Quebec, bringing wine and spirituous liquors, sugar, coffee, and tobacco, with other articles, amounting to 1,165,993 pounds, Halifax currency, four dollars to the pound: exporting timber of all kinds, ashes, grain, fish-oil, furs, peltries, &c., to the amount of £790,521, exclusive of the furs and peltries, which is estimated at one million of dollars. This year there was exported 106,517 martin skins, 57,192 beaver, 36,115 muskrat, with various other skins, besides casks and kegs of castorum. For the year 1821, I hold in my hand an official statement of the imports and exports of Quebec. In that year there were exported the skins of 164,330 quadrupeds, of which there were 75,562 martins, which, I am informed, were worth at a low estimate, $188,305; there were also 56,080 beaver skins. For this official paper, I am indebted to the kindness of a gentleman whose integrity, personal worth, and sound understanding, are well known to this House, of which he was lately a member. I allude to Mr. Ezra Meech, of Shelburn. In his letter to me, of the 20th of January, 1822, he makes this statement: "The exports of furs is about one-half less in 1821 than in 1820. Since the Hudson's Bay Company and the Northwest have united, the furs are mostly exported from Hudson's Bay; in future nearly the whole will go from that place. The furs cannot be calculated at less, from both places, than two millions of dollars annually."

How valuable, then, must that trade be, which can export to the amount of two millions of dollars, after supplying all the demands at home, which, from the habits of the people and the length and severity of their Winters, we must suppose to be very great!

There is, in contemplating this trade, something to encourage us, but much to humble our boasted spirit of enterprise. We have no exports from these rivers worth recurring to, and the supply is but small in amount for home consumption. Whilst we might trade through long, deep rivers without interruption or difficulty, from St. Louis to the mouth of Oregon, or Columbia, the British take their goods with difficulty through more than sixty lakes, and numerous rivers. Their means of transportation are bark canoes: the rivers through which they pass are interrupted in at least a hundred places by falls and rapids, and over one hundred and thirty places the trader has to carry both his canoe and cargo on his back. Moreover, it is three years before their complete circle of trade can be made: whereas, in the United States, the results occur from the May of one year until the September of the year following. Yet do we wonder at their wealth, and pause at fancied difficulties. This is the trade I would turn to the Oregon, and from the mouth of that river make the shipments, and return with the rich exchange to our Atlantic cities, and save much of the gold and silver which is now sinking in Asia—according to the opinion of some, never to return.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I shall presently be able to show that, were this trade cherished, and pursued in connexion with our whale fisheries, we could purchase the whole supplies of the United States, in the Canton market, without carrying one dollar out of the country. Other benefits would be gained as important to the Republic as the trade itself. This would become the school in which to bring up our seamen; and every voyage would add many to the list of sailors, ready, in war, to defend the rights of the nation: a single voyage into those seas would be sufficient to make them seamen; and, in any future emergency, they would support the well-earned character of the Navy. It was these hardy sons of the sea, who had been nursed in the fisheries and the whale trade, who first, during the late war, shed a blaze of glory over the arms of this nation, and taught the British lion to crouch to the banners of the Republic.

The principal part of the whale ships are owned in New Bedford and Nantucket; and in point of real value, is second alone to the fur trade. Here there is some capital vested in the purchase of a ship, which is often from three to five hundred tons burden, and of the best workmanship; the active capital is the labor of the hands in taking the whale, with the profit they make on articles of hardware, which is taken on board to trade with the Indians on our western coast; the return is great, and ought to be considered created rather than the gain of commerce.

Formerly, the finest whales were taken on the coast of South America; but now, the fishing ground is off the Columbia river. At that point, and northward, is likewise the place most resorted to for taking the sea otter, which is here most abundant, and of the finest kind. These enterprising seamen observed, with the eyes of a lynx, all the avenues to gain, and have found a profit in cutting timber on the Columbia river, and shipping it to Chili and Peru. This trade, at no distant day, is destined to employ many individuals, and to contribute largely to the wealth of the Territory of Oregon.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

In order to give as short and hasty a sketch of the whale trade as possible, as it has been pursued for some years on that coast, I will only recur to the voyages made in the years 1819 and 1820: the lateness of the hour will induce me to be brief.

From New Bedford there sailed this year fifteen ships, seven brigs, and one sloop; they numbered five thousand one hundred and eighty-four tons, and were navigated by four hundred and sixteen seamen. One cargo of sperm oil, in this year, amounted to two thousand three hundred and sixty-four barrels; whale oil was also brought in to the amount of one thousand seventy-two barrels, sperm seven hundred and thirty-three, in another.

From Nantucket, there went out this year, seventy-five ships, amounting to eighteen thousand seven hundred and sixty-five tons, navigated by one thousand three hundred and fifteen seamen; seven brigs, amounting to nine hundred and eighty-nine tons, having on board one hundred and three seamen; two schooners, measuring one hundred and seventy-two tons, with twenty-eight seamen; and one sloop, of eighty-two tons, with fourteen seamen;—making eighty-five vessels, twenty thousand two hundred and twenty-six tons, and one thousand four hundred and sixty seamen. Other vessels, I am informed, have every year been added to the number of those engaged in that trade. One brig and five ships, the year following, followed to the Pacific, navigated by one hundred and fourteen seamen; and we sometimes find a vessel out in this trade three years, before she returns. Why is it not cherished? What can be better calculated to produce seamen?

From a memorandum which I hold in my hand, presented to me by a member of the last Congress, it appears that Nantucket is believed to be interested in this trade, to the amount of four millions of dollars; and New Bedford two millions of dollars. This trade, it will be remembered, employs more tonnage, and a much greater number of seamen, than the Canton trade, which has been so prized by the rich merchant.

I will now, Mr. Chairman, take some notice of the China market, where we procure many of our supplies. It has been severely remarked upon, throughout the country, more particularly by those engaged in the European trade, and even in this House, no very favorable impressions of it, at one time, existed. But, from aught I can see, it is a trade rather to be cherished than deprecated; and if it has not yielded us all we wanted, it has been owing to the manner in which we ourselves have carried it on. I hope the House will indulge me a short time, that I may take some notice of the document furnished by the agent of the United States, at Canton, to this Government; it is official.

It appears from this paper, that the trade of China has fluctuated very considerably, from the season of 1804-'5, to the present time, owing, no doubt, to the various causes which have influenced this Government during that period. In the course of that year, there were thirty-four vessels, which made up the sum of 10,159 tons; they carried, in specie, $2,902,000, yet the total amount of value that year entered in Canton, was $5,555,818; the whole of which, exclusive of the specie, and excepting also $1,080 in ginseng, was furs, seal skins, ebony and sandal wood, making their value amount to $2,653,638. In the season 1805-'6, the result is different—forty-two vessels entered that year, making the number of tons 12,480, carrying $1,176,000. The total value of the trade was, that year, $5,326,358, which was produced by the furs, seal skins, sandal wood, and ebony; making the amount $1,176,358; but in this must be reckoned 1,334 peculs of ginseng, 102 of opium, 48 of quicksilver, 140 of lead, 346 of iron, and 600 of copper. There were that year sent 17,445 sea-otter skins, and 140,297 seal skins. In the season of 1806-'7, there were entered at that port, thirty-seven vessels, making 11,268 tons. They had on board $2,895,000. The total value of trade that year, was $3,877,362; of which, there was about the same proportion of ginseng, quicksilver, iron, lead, &c., that there was the season before; but this year 14,251 sea-otter skins and 261,330 seal skins; this would make the furs, seal, &c., amount, this year, to $981,362. I will skip over some of these years, and present to the House a few of those most worthy of notice. Here is the return for the season of 1808-'9; this year, as our difficulties in Europe increased, our trade declined, though the result is worthy to be remarked. There were but eight vessels entered at Canton, numbering 2,215 tons, carrying $70,000; the total amount of trade that year was $479,850; the amount this year, over the $70,000, was $409,850. This amount was produced by 7,944 sea-otter skins, 31,000 seal, 3,400 land otter, 5,170 beaver, 480 peculs of ebony, 2,050 of cotton, and 4,800 peculs of sandal wood.

The season of 1811-'12 gives this result: $1,875,000 in specie, sent to that market; the total amount of the trade was $3,132,810; consequently the $1,257,810 was made up of furs, seal skins and sandal wood, with the exception of 1557 peculs of ginseng, 200 of opium, 29 of quicksilver, 5,814 of iron, and 2,798 of copper.

In the season of 1812-'13 there was taken to Canton $616,000, and the total amount of trade that season was $1,453,000, made up of furs, seal skins, and sandal wood, with the exception likewise, of 250 peculs of ginseng, 100 of opium, and 5,629 of copper.

During the whole of the years 1813-'14, and 1814-'15, there was not one dollar sent to China—there was, with the exception of 430 peculs of ginseng, nothing sent but furs, sea-otter, seals, land otters, fox, beaver, and sandal wood, these were taken in the forest, or hewn down with the axe in the Sandwich Islands; yet the amount is $151,500.

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

DECEMBER, 1822.

The season of 1815-'16 is favorable. That of 1816-'17 gives $5,609,600, as the total amount of trade, though there was of this $4,545,000 in specie.

The season of 1817-'18 gives 39 vessels, 14,325 tons, $5,601,000 in specie; the total amount of trade that year was $7,076,228, making $2,675,828 in furs, sandal wood, &c., with 1,601 peculs of ginseng, 448 of opium, 105 of steel, lead, quicksilver, iron, copper, nearly in the same proportions.

The estimate of our trade, for the season of 1818-'19, states the amount in specie to be $7,414,000, and the total amount $10,217,151, of which sum, the sandal wood forms an item of $91,368, sea-otter tails $10,136, beaver skins $70,065, seal $100,300, sea-otter $124,068, besides all other furs, &c., with ginseng, lead, opium, &c., which forms this season large items in the imports.

In the season 1820-'21, there was taken to Canton $2,995,000, though the total value of the trade that year is $5,392,795; sandal wood this year amounted to $67,133; sea-otter skins to $176,548; land otter to $44,550; beaver $68,000, and sea-otter tails, to $14,422; seals $22,078, &c., &c.

Having, sir, exhibited this view of the subject to the House, I will now trespass upon their time for a moment, to present one other point in this trade, which will place the whole subject in such a light, that I hope it will be easily understood. We have been constantly in the habit of exclaiming against the Canton trade, as ruinous to us, as draining the country of its specie, without once referring to the indirect trade, by which many of the dollars here exhibited have been taken from Europe, and the Mediterranean. During the season of 1818-'19, there arrived at Canton from the United States, forty-six vessels, amounting to 16,022 tons, with 934 seamen. From Boston there cleared that season thirteen vessels—four touched at Europe, five at South America and the Northwest coast, four went direct, employing 260 seamen. From Salem three cleared, two touched at South America and the Northwest coast, one direct—69 seamen. From New York, seven vessels cleared, two touched at Europe, one at South America, and the Pacific, four direct—140 seamen. From Providence, six vessels cleared, five touched at Europe, and one at South America and the Pacific—132 seamen. From Philadelphia, there cleared eleven vessels, two by Europe or the Mediterranean, one at South America and the Pacific, eight direct—199 seamen. From Baltimore, two vessels cleared, one by Europe or the Mediterranean, one direct—with 47 seamen. Amsterdam, three vessels, two touched at the Mediterranean, one by South America and the Pacific—57 seamen. One vessel purchased at Whomford, with 30 seamen.

In the season of 1819-'20, there arrived at Canton forty-three vessels, making 15,139 tons, navigated by 829 seamen. Eleven cleared at Boston; one touched at Europe, one at South America, one at the mouth of the Oregon, or Columbia, one at the Sandwich Isles, one at Batavia, and six direct, navigated by 208 seamen. From Salem, two vessels cleared; one touched at Europe, one at Manilla, with 33 seamen. From New York, nine vessels cleared; two touched at Europe, one in the Pacific, six direct—193 seamen. From Providence, there cleared six vessels; two touched at Europe, three in the Pacific, two direct—93 seamen. From Philadelphia, there cleared ten vessels; four touched at Europe, one in the Pacific, and five direct—navigated by 195 seamen. From Marblehead, there cleared one vessel; touched at Manilla—navigated by 20 seamen. From Newburyport, one vessel, touched at Batavia—15 seamen. From Rotterdam, by Portsmouth, having 24 seamen. Valparaiso, one direct—28 seamen. South America, one touched at the Sandwich Isles—20 seamen.

During the season of 1820-'21, there arrived at Canton twenty-eight American vessels, amounting to 9,387 tons, conveying $2,995,000. From Boston, six cleared, one touched at Europe, one at South America, and four at Columbia river and the Pacific. From New York, four cleared, one touched at Java, three direct. From Salem, two cleared, touched at Sumatra. From Providence, six cleared; four touched at Europe or Java, two direct. From London, four cleared, direct. From Liverpool, two, touched at Sumatra. From Philadelphia, three direct. From Gibraltar, one; touched at Sumatra.

Such, Mr. Chairman, is the aspect of our Canton trade, and in all instances of a vessel's taking any other course than the direct route, it has been for the purpose of exchanging the commodities of our own country for silver, either in Europe or in South America, or by obtaining the furs of the Northwest Coast, the sandal wood of the Pacific, for the products of the United States; thence to Canton, and return with the richest cargoes. In this way much of the silver which is entered at Canton is obtained, and has at first view the appearance of having been taken from the United States. In the seasons, for instance, of 1819 and 1820, the schooner Flying Fish, of 285 tons, Fitch, master, belonging to a company of merchants, cleared from South America, touched at the Sandwich Isles, probably for sandal wood, carried specie to the amount of $100,000. The schooner Packet, Hill, master, 281 tons, cleared from Valparaiso, Thorndike, owner, went direct with $140,000. During the season of 1820 and 1821, of which I have just now spoken, it will be observed that four vessels cleared from London and two from Liverpool. From London, the Robert Edward, Sherburn, master, went direct to Canton with $107,000 on board. The ship Canton Packet, King, master, owned by Perkins, cleared from London with $200,000. The ship Hongqua, Nash, master, owned by Perkins, cleared from London, direct, with $50,000. Ship Augusta, Giles, master, owned by Perkins, cleared from London, with steel, cotton, furs, &c. From Liverpool the ship Columbian cleared this season, Sherman, master, owned by Evans, and sailed direct to Canton with $60,000. Ship Addison, from Liverpool, took no specie. This at least we know, that $317,000 went this season from London and Liverpool, and how much else, by our vessels touching for the purpose spoken of, at different ports in Europe, the islands, &c., is not known, but it is presumed to a considerable amount.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Columbia River.

H. of R.

Besides this, it does appear that much of the profit of this trade is gained by our merchants in carrying the products of Canton to Europe, and vending them there, and either returning home with the manufactures of Europe suited to our wants, or bringing with them the specie—hence the drain of specie is from Europe in proportion to the goods shipped from Canton for that country. If the House will indulge me a little longer, I will show the proportions shipped to the United States and to Europe, by our traders. In the seasons of 1815, and 1816, there was destined for Europe 2,731,010, lbs. of tea, 1,650 peculs of cassia, and 185,000 pieces of Nankeens. The proportion destined for the United States, was 4,514,280 lbs. of tea, 1,695 peculs of cassia, and 455,000 pieces of Nankeens. The proportion of exports for the season of 1816, and 1817, destined for Europe, was 2,880,000 lbs. of tea, 172,533 lbs. of cassia, 600,000 lbs. of sugar, and 360,000 pieces of Nankeens. The proportion destined for the United States was 6,074,100 lbs. of tea, 660,000 lbs. of cassia, 333,000 lbs. of sugar, 1,434,000 pieces of Nankeens. The proportion of exports destined for Europe in the season of 1817, and 1818, was 2,086,245 pounds of tea, 73,300 lbs. cassia, 160,000 lbs. sugar, 46,600 lbs. sugar candy, 10,600 lbs. rhubarb, 66,000 lbs. gallinal, 22,600 lbs. raw silk, 6,600 lbs. vermillion, 650 pieces of silks, 241,000 pieces of Nankeens, 2,600 lbs. of gamboge. That destined for the United States, was 7,535,885 lbs. of tea, China ware, 11,487 peculs, 272,933 lbs. of cassia, 1,428,933 lbs. sugar, 37,200 lbs. rhubarb, 1,603 peculs of mats, 200,886 pieces of silks, 76,800 lbs. sewing silks, 37,600 lbs. vermillion, 14,000 lbs. gallinal, 6,933 lbs. China root, 1,333 lbs. camphor, 33,000 lbs. of sugar candy, 1,228,000 pieces of Nankeens.

It should be borne in mind that this season the value of all the China ware exported by American vessels, is estimated at $172,305; and all the sandal wood sold this year in China, taken from the Sandwich Islands principally, is estimated at $171,075. All the imperial tea exported this season by American vessels from China, is estimated at $316,152. And the sea otter skins, land otter, beaver, and seal skins, alone, imported this season, are estimated at $318,530.

During the season of 1820, and 1821, there was exported from China for the United States, China ware to the amount of $138,266. There were imported that year by our vessels, sea otter skins, valued at $176,548: Thus may it be seen that the whole of the China ware of the United States is purchased by that which we fish from the sea on our western coast, at or near the mouth of Columbia, or it is cut from the Sandwich Islands in the shape of sandal wood.

I will not fatigue the House with any thing more relative to our trade in the Pacific ocean and at Canton. Enough has been unfolded to call the attention of gentlemen to that subject; their own reflections will supply more than I could say. Were this trade cherished as it ought to be, new benefits would every day develop themselves, and fresh sources of wealth be opened to the Republic. Our whale ships are annually on that coast with no other cargo than some hardware, and ornaments, to traffic with the natives. Perhaps the greatest value on board their vessels would not amount to more than two thousand dollars; the rest is made up by their labor, in fishing it from the ocean. Yet we witness their return every year, enriched by the products of their voyages. The best fishing ground is known to be on our Western coast, and our commerce in those seas, every day increasing, it is now so important as to require a ship-of-the-line, and smaller vessels, to protect it; and we have reason to believe, that three ships of war will soon be wanted for that purpose. Nor have we a place to refit our ships, on that side the continent, or to even drive a nail in one of our vessels, should it be wanted, though we have many excellent harbors. For any accommodation of that kind, we must be obliged to the good dispositions of other nations, or sail back to our own ports on the Atlantic, near twenty thousand miles round Cape Horn. The catastrophe on that side, during the late war, ought to have taught us wisdom. While our ships cut up and destroyed the enemy in that sea, there was no place to rest secure, with the vessels they captured, or we would not have witnessed the destruction of so many which have been taken. Neither should we have felt the effect of that terrible scene at Valparaiso. The coast on that side can be more easily defended than any in America; the entrance of Oregon, or Columbia, is easy, affording seventeen fathom water; the whole extent of the river, below the Falls, is deep, placid, and, near its mouth, there are points which altogether command the entrance, with perpendicular rocks on either side, where forts may be constructed so strong as to bid defiance to all the military science of the world.

On a former occasion, Mr. Chairman, a gentleman on the other side of the House, expressed some surprise, that I should be in favor of reducing the Army, when I had a proposition to occupy the mouth of the Columbia. This, sir, was the reason. I am thoroughly persuaded, that the post at the Council Bluffs is not wisely chosen, and that the troops now at that point, would render more service to the country at the mouth of Columbia, than where they are: they are too far to protect the white population of Missouri, and not far enough either to check the British trader, or render any other service. One of the principal crossing places of the Indians is some distance below that post, the other far above. But, if I were to suggest a plan to awe the Indian and keep him at peace, it would be, to show him your troops occasionally, penetrate into his country, and let him witness their display; then return; prove to him by this conduct that you have no disposition to take his country, and he will respect and fear you. The Indian is the proudest man that has ever lived, and loves his country as ardently as man can.

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Three hundred years of war has proved to the white man that he can be killed, but never subdued; war is the road to fame with him; the warrior is the proudest title he can prize, the only one of value; wherefore, the moment your soldiers lay off their military dress, and appear in their fatigue clothes, and commence their labors, that instant, all respect, all apprehension is banished from his mind, and is succeeded by ineffable contempt and disgust; for they, like the nobility of every country, hold labor as disgraceful.

The route to the mouth of the Columbia is easy, safe, and expeditious. We all recollect, distinctly, the delays, dangers, and difficulties, which attended the merchant, on his first opening the trade to Kentucky; in those days, much preparation was necessary, and from thirty to thirty-five days were exhausted in getting to market; his goods were then transported to Fort Pitt, or Wheeling, by wagon, creeping on with appalling slowness; if there was a freshet in the Ohio he arrived in the season, but sorrow and ruin attended him, if his goods did not arrive in time for this advantage; his Spring supplies arrived in the Fall, and his Fall goods detained sometimes until the Spring. Even now, an intelligent friend from Tennessee, who usually sits on the other side of the House, tells me, that the merchants of Nashville take their wagoners' receipts, to deliver their goods at that place in from 30 to 50 days. From Louisville, in Kentucky, down to New Orleans, formerly required a voyage of from 30 to 40 days, and using, on the voyage up the river, what they called a barge, it required them 90 days to make the trip, in what they called good time; the distance is estimated, I believe, at 1500 miles. Now, however, by steamboat navigation, they make the voyage down, in seven days, and up in sixteen days. This, I believe is the average voyage, between those places; if I am in error, I can be corrected, as I see in the House some of the steamboat owners on those rivers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we cannot be mistaken, when we apply the same calculations to the route to the mouth of the Oregon; as steamboat navigation we all know to be safe and sure. Wherefore, it will take a steamboat 24 days to arrive at the falls of the Missouri; thence, I allow a wagon 14 days to travel two hundred miles, to the mouth of Clark's river, thence 7 days to the mouth of Oregon; making the time necessary for that trip 44 days. To return, the boat would reach Clark's river in 14 days, double the time she would go down; the wagon would return to the falls of Missouri in 13 days; thence the boat would arrive at St. Louis, in half the time necessary for her upward voyage, which would be 12 days; making the whole time 39 days.

If there were any doubt existing in the mind of any gentlemen, surely it might be done away, when we recur to the fact of a wagon having already passed from St. Louis to Santa Fe, and returned in the course of the last Summer, bringing with it, the sum of ten thousand dollars, as the profit of the trip; this information I get through the medium of the newspapers, alike known to all, and the fact, I believe, has never been doubted; another party returned from the direction of the Rocky Mountains, with a profit of fourteen thousand dollars, making twenty-four thousand dollars, where none existed before, and making that easy, which, but a short time ago, was thought an impossibility.

I am apprized that something is said relative to the probability of the settlement of the Oregon, contemplated by this bill, producing, in the end, bad consequences to this country, if not, finally, a separation of these States. The great distance has also been urged as a reason for its rejection. Sir, I would look with as much fear upon a measure which might, even at a remote day, produce a separation of these Republics, as any man; but no result can take place of that kind; all contemplate with joy the period when these States shall extend to the Rocky Mountains. Why not, then, to the Pacific ocean? Would that country, cut off from this, be benefited by the change, pressed, as it would be, by two powerful foreign nations, both to the North and to the South? Rather would not that prevent so fatal a step, as it would be to Oregon? Or, if we consulted our own interests, and believed the separation inevitable, would it not be wisdom in us, to have a people there who were descended from us, speaking the same language, admiring and maintaining the same laws, Constitution, and Government, than to have English, Russians, or French, with all their disgusting notion of monarchy, which degrades the noblest intellect, and makes the man a slave? You cannot choose—you must have your children's enemies, the occupants of Oregon. As to distance, I have shown that, in point of time, the mouth of Oregon, or Columbia, is not further distant than Louisville was thirty years ago, from New York, or St. Louis was twenty years ago from Philadelphia. The whole expense of carrying one hundred and fifty tons of cannon to the mouth of that river, and making a survey of all our harbors on that coast, is estimated by the Secretary of the Department of the Navy, at $25,000, a sum small, indeed, to accomplish an object of such importance to the Republic. On that side there can be no fear of those collisions which we are constantly in danger of from the constantly varying policy of Europe. On the east of the Atlantic ocean there is continual strife, and their Governments appear to be administered according to the angry passions of the man, rather than according to the spirit of the laws, which have no passion. On the west side of the Pacific there is peace, and an uninterrupted calm, which not even English policy can disturb. All the supplies which man can want are there to be had in plenty, purchased by us with the products of the forest and the sea, which require no labor, no skill of the artisan to give them value. Is it not worthy the consideration of the statesman and the merchants, whether our citizens might not lay Europe under contribution, by increasing the fur trade through these rivers? This, with the products of that sea, would purchase in Canton all we want to consume; the residue might be sold in Europe, which would at once employ many tons of shipping, and bring us the money of that country which now they send to China. In other words, the occupation of the Oregon would offer so many facilities to the Canton trade, where a voyage can be performed in fifty or seventy days, the products of the sea and forest so vast, the copper of the North so pure and abundant, the sandal wood immediately on the route to market, that the wealth of those regions, and that trade, seem to implore you only to stretch forth your hands and receive it.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

This would soon drive the English out of market, as their East India privileges benefit them merely because it prevents other of their subjects from getting rich; it could not reach us, or affect our trade. Young as our commerce is, and unfriended as it has been, its total value, as shown by this paper, was, in the season of 1817-18, $7,076,828; whilst that of the English, for the same year, was $16,126,700—but a sorry account of their charters and institutions, pampered to suffocation. In the season of 1818-19, I have shown, by this document, the total value of our trade to have been $10,217,151, whilst that year, the same paper shows the English trade to have been nearly stationary, amounting to $16,297,922.

One other advantage presents itself to us, by occupying the Oregon, as proposed by this bill, and I speak of it with the more satisfaction, as it concerns the plough, which is, at last, the great benefactor of mankind. The lands of the Oregon are well adapted to the culture of wheat, rye, corn, barley, and every species of grain; that position will enable them to sell their surplus produce with certainty, and purchase the manufactures of China, by an exchange of labor. I know it is the common belief that the Chinese will not take anything but silver, gold, and a few articles prized by them; but, from all I can learn, this would seem to be a common error, produced by the circumstance of the impracticability of taking flour or breadstuffs to that market. From Europe or the United States, there would be no hope of their arriving in any tolerable condition; the climate is so warm, the voyage so long, that they must spoil on the way. Besides, the merchant would not risk a voyage with such bulky, heavy, low-priced articles; consequently, the commerce of Canton is carried on in all the richer productions, as they yield a profit commensurate with the expense, length of voyage, and great delay in prosecuting it. Many, likewise, of the neighboring countries, carry on trade in the richer products of the soil, as cotton, sugar, coffee, &c., wherefore, there is little surplus breadstuffs to dispose of. This, then, would operate almost as an exclusive privilege to the farmers of Oregon, to supply their wants on that side; and, by so doing, obtain for themselves the comforts which all mankind are in search of.

When Mr. F. concluded, the Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

WEDNESDAY, December 18.

Mr. ROCHESTER presented a petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Ontario, Seneca, and Cayuga, in the State of New York, praying for the erection of a lighthouse at or near the entrance of Great Sodus Bay, on Lake Ontario.—Referred to the Committee of Commerce.

Mr. KENT presented a petition of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, and others, of the city of Washington, praying that certain repairs may be made to the buildings lately occupied by Congress on the Capitol Hill.—Referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. McCoy, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of William F. Nimmo, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the heirs of the said Nimmo; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported the following bill:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the third section of an act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, entitled "An act for an addition to Georgetown, in Montgomery county," as prohibits the proprietors of lots fronting on the north side of Water street, from setting or erecting buildings on the south side of said street, or on wharves made on the south side of the aforesaid street, be and the same is hereby repealed: Provided, That the proprietors aforesaid shall not have power to erect any building or buildings, on the south side of said street, not authorized by an ordinance of the Corporation of Georgetown: And provided, also, That, after being thus authorized by said corporation, the proprietors aforesaid may sell and dispose of their property on either side of the said street, without affecting the title to that on the other side, as effectually as they could have done before the passage of the aforesaid act of Maryland.

This bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. COOK, from the committee appointed on the 10th instant on the subject of the public lands within the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, reported in part a bill to authorize the laying out and opening of a road from Wheeling, in Virginia, to the seat of government in Missouri; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. HARDIN, a committee was appointed to inquire what further retrenchment can be made in the expenditures of the Government, without detriment to the public service; and Messrs. HARDIN, WHIPPLE, TRACY, HOLCOMBE, ROSS, WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, and WILLIAM SMITH, were appointed the said committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to lay before the House so much of the letter of Mr. Prevost as relates to the establishment at the mouth of the Columbia river, and such information as he may have in his possession in relation to the arrangements made about the year 1814, by the Northwest Company, with the proprietors of a settlement made by citizens of the United States at the mouth of the Columbia river, by which that company became possessed of that settlement.

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

DECEMBER, 1822.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day.

On motion of Mr. COCKE, a committee was appointed to inquire what number of public lots, in the city of Washington, have been sold by the agents of the United States; when sold, by whom, to whom, and for what price; what part of the purchase money has been paid, the amount due, and when payable; whether the debts are well secured; whether the money received has been applied to objects authorized by any existing law; how much thereof has been paid into the Treasury; when, and by whom paid; and what disposition has been made of all the money arising from the sales of said lots; and that the said committee have power to call for persons and papers; and Messrs. COCKE, WOODCOCK, WARFIELD, FLOYD, and LINCOLN, were appointed the said committee.

Mr. METCALFE submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House what progress has been made in the execution of an act of the last session, entitled "An act to abolish the Indian Trading Establishments," with a report from the factories, respectively, as the same may be made to him.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day.

Mr. WALWORTH submitted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before this House, the several laws which have been made by the Governor and Legislative Council of Florida; together with such information relative thereto as may be in possession of the Executive, not improper to be communicated, showing the necessity, propriety, and practical effect, of such laws.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day.

On motion of Mr. GILMER, the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the joint resolutions for carrying into effect certain articles of agreement entered into between the United States and the State of Georgia, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and the said resolutions were committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

OCCUPATION OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

The House then, according to the order of the day, again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to authorize the occupation of the mouth of the Columbia river.

No debate or proposition being offered thereon, the Committee rose and reported the bill to the House with the amendments.

The amendments were severally taken up and agreed to by the House; and the bill being further amended,

Mr. WHIGG addressed the Chair as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped, from the ardent and luminous remarks of the Hon. Mr. FLOYD, of Virginia, who reported this bill, and from its vast importance to the enterprising navigating interests of the United States, frequenting the Pacific ocean, to whom this establishment must be all-important, that this measure would have received the warm support of this House; but, sir, the seeming apathy that I have thought I discovered, has alarmed my fears for its fate, and induced me to trespass on the time of the House, at least to elicit a discussion, whereby the subject may be perfectly understood, and the passage of the bill thereby secured. Sir, this territory has been fairly purchased from France by the United States, and its limits recently and distinctly marked by our late treaty with Spain. By the compact by which we acquired this territory, the inhabitants of it were, by its letter, secured in the protection of their legitimate rights, and, becoming thereby a portion of these United States, were entitled to the benefits of our Constitution: Protection and allegiance are reciprocal obligations. Every territory is, by the Constitution, entitled to, and has been protected by, a territorial government, progressing with its population, in the progressive grades of territorial governments to which it will be found this territory is, both by the letter and spirit of the compact, clearly entitled. I felt it necessary to make these remarks to awaken the attention of the House, to the Constitutional claims of the people, who, with the Senate, form their legislative organ, to give practical operation to such measures as are necessary to the lawful government of the inhabitants of that region, who have no means of recovering the smallest debt, but by physical force. Sir, the indissoluble ties of the Constitution, I cannot doubt, will be duly regarded; the interest of this nation, particularly of the Northeast, I had presumed, would have bound the Representatives from that quarter to its firm and united support; particularly on examination of the very interesting documents presented by the chairman that reported that bill. The fur trade, even in its incipient stages, appears to be of great value. We know that the great Creator has, in his providence, graduated the habits of the fur-clad tribes, by the climate, and the further North they are found, the better the furs. The fisheries in the Southern ocean, are, also, even in their first stages, shown to be of great value; and who can cast his eye upon the map, and not pronounce the proposed establishment to be of great advantage to the Americans trading in the furs and fish of the Pacific ocean? And who that has any regard to our hardy American seamen, who have so often covered this nation with glory, will deny them this facility, whose enterprises in the acquisition of coffee, under the restrictions of St. Domingo, elicited the rough compliment of the then sable Prince Regent of that Government. Sir, not long since, one of our ships in the whale fishery was destroyed by the stroke of a whale, and the crew compelled to take to their boats for safety. What a convenience would such an establishment have been to them! what relief would it have ministered to their awful bodings! But, sir, independent of the advantage to the citizens engaged in this trade, I have no doubt a custom-house there would, in a little time, repay all the expense of this establishment in a ten-fold ratio, and form the best means of exploring the character of the people, the soil, and climate of that region, now little known to us, and thus learning what may be of great importance to us. In 1795, Great Britain prohibited the importation of cotton from the United States—now so important to her. Sir, such has been the enterprise of this Republic since its establishment, and such its success, especially in canals, and such the spirit of improvement elicited by our example, that I am surprised that the union of the Atlantic with the Pacific, at the Isthmus of Darien, has not yet been undertaken. But, sir, its vast importance to the world cannot long permit it to be neglected. The stock in that canal would be of great value, and suggests the pleasing anticipations of its completion. The preposterous claim of Russia to the vicinage of the river Columbia, speaks loudly the value of the trade in that region, which, united with the evidence in possession of this House, I hope will induce them to pass this bill, and thereby protect and govern our people there by law, and not leave them to the government of savages, in violation of that compact that made them American citizens.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Columbia River.

H. of R.

Mr. BAYLIES, of Massachusetts, said that, as one of the committee who had reported the bill, he felt himself impelled, by a sense of duty, to present to the House some views which he had taken of this subject. All the objections to the provisions of the bill which he had heard, he had heard out of the House; and he had indulged himself in the hope (as no serious opposition had been manifested in the Committee of the Whole) that the luminous view which had been taken of this subject by the chairman of the committee (Mr. FLOYD) would have induced its adoption without further discussion.

Of the objections which he had heard, he would, however, say that some were weighty, and all were plausible. The objects which the bill contemplated were of much importance to a portion of the country which he represented, and its vicinity, from which there is the most extensive whale fishery in the world, and that he was induced to believe that the state of that fishery was now such as to require a port on the shores of the Pacific ocean, or on the waters connected with that ocean.

The expense of the territorial establishment contemplated by the bill had been urged as an argument against it. He admitted that the measure would be attended with some expense, and that, for some years, the prospect of revenue, from a settlement so remote, would be but small; but the utility of this undertaking ought not to be measured by its expense. Measures, creating more expense, have frequently been adopted by this nation, whose utility was far more questionable than this. If there is one branch of the mercantile industry of the country which deserves encouragement more than another, it is the whale fishery. It is an employment of a peculiar character; it creates its own capital. It does not come upon the country for specie, to purchase the cotton and woollen manufactured goods, the wines, the brandies, and the silks, of Europe. Its capital is created by labor; it is dragged up from the bottom of the ocean; it has now become a business of national importance. With a view to elicit some information on this subject, he had addressed some inquiries to Mr. Hawes, the Collector of the Customs at New Bedford, a gentleman of great respectability, whose knowledge was practical, who had visited the seas where whales are taken, and whose peculiar information would entitle his statements to much consideration.

Here Mr. B. read the communications, which were in substance as follows:—The first letter which Mr. Hawes had addressed to him was dated January 5, 1822. In this letter he stated that sixty-five vessels were employed in the whale fishery, from the port of New Bedford, tonnage 16,222, navigated by 1,350 men and boys; that thirty-six of the largest of these vessels were employed in fishing for spermaceti whales in the Pacific ocean, tonnage 9,942, and navigated by about 800 men; that, since the late war, the greater number of the whaling ships of New Bedford had been employed on the coast of Patagonia and the adjacent waters, in fishing for right whales; but oil of that description having fallen in price within the last two years, many vessels had been taken from that fishery, and had been despatched to the Pacific, to fish for spermaceti whales, as the oil made from them had fully sustained its prices. From the Pacific it was spermaceti oil which had been obtained principally, and not more than seven or eight hundred of the black oil. The black whale oil was taken on the coast of Chili, in the bays and harbors. He estimated all the oil and bone brought from the Pacific to the port of New Bedford, since the late war, at $1,713,600—to January 1, 1822. The number of the ships in the fishery to the west of Cape Horn had increased, and would increase; that the sperm oil was now manufactured before it was carried to market; and the manufacturing of it was considered very profitable. Mr. Hawes estimated the annual value of the whale fishery to New Bedford, in the Pacific alone, at $500,000, exclusive of the profits arising from the manufacturing of spermaceti candles. The capital he estimated at $850,000. The bills of some of the ships employed in the Pacific ocean were as high as $32,000 or $33,000. Spermaceti oil was generally from 80 to 100 cents; sea elephant, from 45 to 50, and right whale or black oil, from 30 to 35 cents per gallon. The price of the sperm oil he had estimated as it was when in its crude state; after pressing, it would average one dollar per gallon. The ships employed in the whale fishery from Nantucket, since the last war, according to the estimate of Mr. Hawes, considerably exceeded those of New Bedford; and all the Nantucket ships, except one, were in the Pacific ocean. He estimated the annual value of the fisheries in the Pacific ocean, to Nantucket and New Bedford alone, at $1,500,000, and the oil and bone which had been brought to both places, since the last war, exceeded $6,000,000; and that the number of seamen employed was 2,500. He also stated that there were three fine ships from Martha's

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Vineyard, employed in this fishery. He, also, stated that sea elephants and cod had been found in abundance on the coast of California.

In answer to one of the queries of Mr. B., respecting the number of mechanics to whom this business gave employment, Mr. Hawes said, that he did not know that he should overrate, if he said that it gave employment to all the mechanics of both places. And he expressed his conviction that he had not in his estimates of the value of this fishery, exceeded the truth. He also stated that the whale fishery in the South Pacific was failing; and that, in future, they must look to the North Pacific for successful fishing, where there were spermæti whales, right whales, and sea elephants, in great abundance. He concludes his letter thus:

"A settlement at the Columbia river, if properly conducted, would insure to our nation an immense source of wealth. A company of traders and navigators, there settled, might have small vessels of from 100 to 150 tons; with these vessels at home, they could explore the coast, and each fishery could be pursued in its proper season. The right whales come into the harbors and bays on that coast to bring forth their young; at that season they will make the most oil. The sea elephants are there found in abundance. I have no doubt seal skins can be obtained in plenty in their season; this I am certain of, if we are permitted as far north as the Fox Islands, latitude  $52^{\circ} 53'$  north, if we have proper vessels for taking them. The seals are nearly all destroyed in the South Pacific, where the weather is warm and mild; large ships could send there open boats, and take them; but to the north the business cannot be carried on in the same manner. There must be small vessels to search out the harbors. Seal oil is an important article, if taken near a settlement; to save this oil in its purity it must be handed and put into vats; like other blubber, it must not be boiled. Great quantities of different oils might be procured by the settlers, in their neighborhood, and preserved in the ground; it is the best way to preserve oil, and saves the expense of casks; it would be an object for our merchant vessels to take their cargoes from the tanks of the settlement. The fisheries in the South Pacific are failing: it is from the North we must look for good voyages; this will lengthen voyages already too long. It is my opinion that a settlement on the Northwest will greatly increase our fisheries, our commerce, our seamen, and the revenue; and, if I was twenty years younger, I should like to be one of the first settlers."

Mr. B. then produced another letter from this gentleman, of a subsequent date, from which he read the following extract: "Since my last I have learned, from a very intelligent shipmaster who has recently arrived from Valparaiso, that a vessel loaded with spars from Columbia river had arrived there, and found a good market. I am led to believe with him that the lumber trade from the settlement at the mouth of that river to Peru and Chili must be made profitable, as there is not any wood in either of those places proper for spars. I have known spars carried from the island of New Zealand to those places, which paid a very great freight."

Mr. B. then read another statement, addressed to the collector by a gentleman in his vicinity, in which the number of ships employed in the whale fishery of the Pacific Ocean, from all the ports in New England and New York, were estimated at one hundred and twenty-nine, averaging about three hundred tons each, valued at the time of sailing, at one hundred dollars per ton, amounting to three millions eight hundred and seventy thousand dollars; and confirming the statement of the collector that the most profitable whale fishing was now in the North Pacific, between the latitudes of thirty-eight and forty-eight. Yet, sir, notwithstanding the immense value of the whale fishery in the Pacific ocean; notwithstanding the immense value of the fur trade on the long line of its shore, from Cape Horn to Analaska; there is not a solitary port at which our vessels can enter, to refit or procure supplies, unless it be by permission and the payment of duties. To the courtesy of the Spaniards and the fears of the native Indians we have hitherto been indebted for all the facilities which have been afforded to our shipping. I should have thought, sir, that during the last war, this country had received a lesson at Valparaiso which would have induced us to establish some place on this coast for the security and protection of our ships. In the event of another war with Great Britain, it may be relied on as a certain truth that in Chili, Peru, and Mexico, the influence of Great Britain will be the predominating influence, and the miserable Creoles who inhabit these shores will connive, as they have done, at the violation of their independence and their neutrality: they will suffer our vessels to be captured under the guns of their batteries. Nay, they will do more—they will permit the titled marauder, who commands their navies, to plunder our merchants, and will share in the plunder. If we neglect those means of protection which we have in our power, let us not complain if the bloody flag of the pirate should wave in triumph over that mighty ocean, if it should be lighted up with the blaze of our burning vessels, and if the whole of that trade which now gives employment and wealth to thousands of our citizens should be annihilated.

I have heard it said, Mr. Speaker, as well out of as in the House, that by the adoption of this measure the limits of our empire would be extended too far, and that the Union itself would be exposed to the danger of dismemberment. If it were so, it would be well worth consideration whether the experiment would justify the hazard. But, sir, in my opinion, the unity of this nation depends in some measure upon its extension. There is less danger of separation in a confederacy of twenty or thirty States than in one of a smaller number. If the Union were composed of but two States, they would inevitably separate, or one of them would conquer the other. In like manner, if there were only two interests in the country—a Northern and a Southern interest—a slaveholding and a non-slaveholding interest—the hazard of separation would be greatly increased. But, by multiplying and extending the States of the Union, you will create so many different interests that they will neutralize each other. On some questions the interests of the Eastern and Southern States might be found to be the same; others the Eastern and Western; others the Middle States and the Southern, Eastern, and Western, and so on; and so conflicting interests which might arise from time to time (so great at times as to threaten dismemberment) be rendered less dangerous, and the angry passions of the few be controlled by the sober feelings of the majority.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

Sir, continued Mr. B., I have heard another objection to this measure. It is said that the chances of war might be increased by the establishment of this post on the Pacific. I have indeed heard that the Emperor of Russia has claimed all the Northwest coast, down to the fifty-first degree of North latitude, and one hundred Italian miles south of that; and that he has also set up a claim of a character so monstrous that no people in their senses can admit it. He claims, sir, all the Pacific ocean, from that degree of latitude on the American coast, to a corresponding point on the Asiatic, under the pretence that it is a close sea. A close sea! and four or five thousand miles in width! and by his Imperial ukase has subjected all vessels to confiscation which shall be found within those limits! If this be the fact, (and there is no doubt of it,) the time has arrived when we are bound to strengthen ourselves in that region. This measure is one, not of expediency, but of necessity.

Mr. Speaker, we have the ability to protect our trade on that ocean. During the last war, Commodore Porter, with a single frigate, for a long time effectually protected our trade, and had materially annoyed that of the enemy. It is unwise in us to despair of our ability to do this. Arguments founded upon what may happen would go equally to prove the futility of establishing a navy, which might be captured by the adversary, and so add to his naval strength as to evince the fruitlessness of building vessels for trade, because they may be taken. If a measure be right in itself, it is unwise to reject it because its beneficial effects may be defeated by a war. Had we always acted from such policy, we should never have built a navy, nor suffered a merchant vessel to cross the ocean.

The maxim of the Romans, never to despair of the Republic, was a maxim of wisdom as well as of courage. If we are to suffer this territory to remain a barren waste, the desire we had to extend our nominal limits to the western waters was vain and childish. Were it not ours some other nation would have occupied it; civilization would have commenced, and the means of increasing the happiness of man would have been extended. It is the duty of civilized nations, who have acquired a savage country, to cultivate it, to reclaim its wandering aborigines, to draw them from their forests, to condense their population, and to convert them, if not into farmers, at least into shepherds and herdsmen; and if, after making every honest effort to improve their condition, they still continue to be obstinately hostile, never to hesitate at the adoption of means necessary to secure the civilized race in their possessions.

Mr. BAYLIES adverted to the importance of that branch of our commerce which is known by the name of the Northwest trade. He said he did not know but that it was of more value than the whale fishery; and, like that, it grew out of nothing; labor was its capital. The foundations of some of the most princely fortunes in Boston, were laid in that trade. Vessels would sail from ports in the United States sometimes, as he was told, with small assortments of hard ware, scarcely exceeding $5,000 in value; with such articles a traffic for furs is carried on with the natives of the Northwest Coast; in their passages from that coast to China they have touched at the Sandwich Islands, and completed their lading with sandal wood; those articles and ginseng being the only ones which were saleable in the Canton market, with the manufactured goods and teas of China. They had proceeded to South America, and, with the specie obtained from their sales there, would return again to China; and, after performing a circuit of adventure, perhaps for five or six years, return home with their original five, six, or ten thousand dollars increased to two hundred thousand dollars.

But more magnificent prospects, Mr. Speaker, open upon our view in relation to the commerce of the Pacific Ocean. The practicability of a water communication which should unite the two oceans, the Atlantic and the Pacific, has been alluded to by the gentleman from Maryland, (Mr. WRIGHT.) To some, this scheme may appear visionary; but the Baron Humboldt, one of the most scientific and intelligent of travellers, has pointed out five places at which the junction of the different waters might be effected; he had no doubt of its perfect practicability. In less than thirty years, this communication will be made. If a broad and capacious ship-channel cannot be formed, it will certainly not be difficult to make a channel for boat navigation. In either case, a change will be effected in the affairs of the world more stupendous in its consequences than any which has happened since the discovery of America. Two great cities at the extremities of this canal would be the depots of the commerce of both hemispheres. A voyage from Pensacola or New Orleans to China could be effected in less than fifty days. Space and distance would be conquered, and the ends of the earth would be brought together. There never was a fairer field for the enterprise of the mariner than that which the Pacific Ocean presents. It is seldom disturbed by storms; over an immense space a perpetual summer reigns; and it has been demonstrated to be susceptible of navigation for nearly five thousand miles in an open boat. The mutiny on board the British ship Bounty, must be well recollected, and the passage of Captain Bligh from the South Sea islands to Timor. It would afford the safest steamboat navigation in the world, and the time would come when the fires of thousands of those conquerors of time, and the elements, would illuminate the long tract of its waters.

It has been said, Mr. Speaker, continued Mr. BAYLIES, that this is a colonizing plan, and that colonizing is not good policy for this nation. The bill under consideration does not contemplate a colonial settlement. The territory proposed to be occupied, is already a part of the United States. But suppose it is such a plan. Let us look to history and see what have been the effects of systems of colonization. The colonizing States of ancient times were the most powerful. Carthage was one of the most considerable of them, and it was with the wealth which she derived from her colonies, that she was enabled to contend so long against the colossal power of Rome.

The great colonizing nations of modern Europe, have been Spain, Portugal, Holland, France, and England; and which of these nations has suffered in consequence of the extension of their colonies? It has been said that Spain has lost her strength, her population, and her riches. By referring to the history of that monarchy it will be found that it was originally divided into a number of independent and petty kingdoms, possessing neither strength nor consistency, and were finally united by the marriage of Ferdinand and Isabella, in whose reign America was discovered. In the reign of their successor, the Emperor Charles V., Spain began to colonize America. From the great actions in which that Monarch was engaged, a fictitious grandeur was thrown over Spain. He was rather the Emperor of Germany, King of Bohemia, and Sovereign of the Low Countries, than King of Spain. Upon his abdication his successor was left with dismembered territory and diminished power, yet the colonies of Spain continued to flourish and increase, and Spain remained a principal Power in Europe. It is now undeniably true, that the weight and influence of Spain have been materially diminished; yet the colonies, instead of exhausting, have furnished the aliment of her existence, the wealth which for a long time she drew from America, upheld her tottering power, and recruited her wasting strength. The population of Spain is as great at this day as ever. There are as many men to fill the ranks of her armies, as there were in the proudest day of her glory. But, sir, her moral energy has departed; it has been buried in the cells of the Inquisition; it has been prostrated at the feet of the Priests. Bigotry has sat upon the bosom of that nation like the nightmare, and every noble and patriotic feeling has been paralyzed; but, sir, her colonies have not diminished her wealth, her population, or her power. Portugal, a kingdom scarcely exceeding the smallest of our States in territorial extent, with a population less than 2,000,000; in consequence of the wealth and strength of her magnificent colonies, has always maintained a high standing amongst the nations of Europe. When the storm which recently desolated that Continent burst upon her head, the mother was protected by the child; her fallen throne was reared, and her wandering Monarch was sheltered in America. Brazil has worn the metropolitan honors of Portugal. Holland, in extent, was scarcely equal to the State of Maryland; yet she soon became the first of the colonizing nations, and by her wise and sagacious policy, she gave bread and riches to her people, when her territory could have hardly afforded them subsistence: she ravished the India trade from the Portuguese, she established her colonial system on a solid basis; "her merchants were princes," and in the continental wars of the last century, the Bank of Amsterdam was more terrible than "an army with banners." Her wealth enabled her to hold the balance of European power; she supplied the world with money, and the coffers of her merchants materially aided the cause of American Independence. Holland has passed for a time under a foreign yoke; but colonization certainly did not produce that degradation. She became too rich, and with the fear of losing, and with the hope of preserving her wealth, she submitted; she yielded her independence in the vain hope that her dollars might be spared.

France, in looking back to the numerous and powerful colonies which once acknowledged her dominion, must feel, one would think, the most poignant regret. Canada, Nova Scotia, Louisiana, St. Domingo, the Isle of France, Pondicherry, &c., were the brightest jewels in the Crown of the Bourbons, and, in the proudest day of her revolutionary and imperial triumphs, her people sighed when they remembered that the days of her colonial grandeur were the days of her happiness. The restless ambition of her Kings lost many of these colonies to France; and after the restoration of one, which now forms one of the fairest portions of the American Republic, the necessities of the Emperor Napoleon, (perhaps the necessities of ambition,) induced him to sell it to the United States for money! Yet, Napoleon never uttered words of more wisdom, than when he said, "I want ships, commerce, and colonies." The elasticity of the French character, is one of its finest traits. A Frenchman never despairs; he never loses sight of the smallest national advantage; and France is even now, after the exhaustion produced by a war of twenty-five years; after the burdens which have been imposed on her people, by the unsuccessful termination of her contest with United Europe, preparing such means as she has to establish another colony in the Island of Madagascar.

Was Great Britain more powerful, wealthy, and happy, before she began to colonize, than now? I think not. The magnificent system of colonization commenced in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. During the reign of that extraordinary female, the minds of her subjects received a new and momentous impulse. The romantic spirit of adventure was abroad. Religion, ambition, enterprise, and avarice, all conspired to lead the pious, the aspiring, the bold and the rapacious, to explore those vast, but distant regions, which had been opened to the view of Europe, and from that time she has been growing in wealth, in grandeur, in population, and in power, in a ratio which almost defies calculation. Thirteen of her colonies now form a powerful nation, glorying in their independence, and defying her power; and notwithstanding all her exhausting wars, and all the drain of her colonial emigration, she was never more populous, more wealthy, or more powerful, than she is at this day. I know, sir, that much has been said of the magnitude of her national debt, and her ruin has again and again been predicted. The debt, sir, in my opinion, is a proof of the wealth of the nation. It is due from the nation in the aggregate, to its individual subjects, and surely they must have been a rich people who were able to lend to their Government an amount of money so enormous. Is this nation in debt to other nations? Half the nations in Europe have been, and still are, indebted to her. Inspect the balance sheets of her merchants, and the whole trading world will be found to be their debtors. She has riches on her surface, she has riches under her surface; and cultivation has exhausted all its powers on her soil.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

I have advanced these historical facts, Mr. Speaker, to show, as I think I have conclusively shown, that colonization does not impair the strength, or diminish the wealth of nations.

I hope, sir, I shall not be considered too enthusiastic on this subject; it is one which I have much at heart. Afflicted as I am with a severe cold, it is painful for me to speak, yet I will make an effort to add a few words more.

If the worst that has been predicted should happen; if the population beyond the Rocky mountains should wish for independence, and should be able to effect it, would it not be better that it should be amicably conceded? And ought we to regret it? Sir, I think not. Most of the nations of the earth have been anxious to transmit the evidence of their greatness and renown to posterity. It is a natural desire and passion; for this purpose the triumphal edifices of the Romans were reared; for this purpose the pyramids of Egypt were erected; for this purpose the world is filled with the monuments of art; but, with a nation of kindred blood, governed by laws similar to yours, cherishing your principles, speaking your language, and worshipping your God, you may rear a monument more magnificent than the Arch of Trajan, more durable than the pyramids; a living, animated, and everlasting monument of your glory and your greatness. I should delight to know that in this desolate spot, where the prowling cannibal now lurks in the forest, hung round with human bones, and with human scalps, that the temples of justice and the temples of God were reared, and man made sensible of the beneficent intentions of his Creator.

Will none of the living witness scenes like these? There are now living witnesses of scenes more wonderful—I might say more miraculous.

Every gentleman within these walls will recollect the splendid sally of eloquence which was elicited from Edmund Burke when describing the progress of North America from a state of colonial infancy to manhood. Yet we have now living witnesses of scenes which even the glowing mind of Burke could not have imagined or conceived: Men who have seen the country of which they were natives rise from the rank of humble colonies to that of a mighty empire; who have seen a commerce which, in their youth, crept along our shores in miserable boats, gleaned a few wretched articles from a poverty-stricken country, spreading their sails to every breeze, and "invading the ice of either pole;" Who have seen a population of scarcely six hundred thousand swelled into ten millions; a population which, in their youth, extended scarcely an hundred miles from the ocean, spreading beyond the mountains of the West, and sweeping down those mighty waters which open into regions of such matchless fertility and beauty.

Some now within these walls may, before they die, witness scenes more wonderful than these; and in aftertimes may cherish delightful recollections of this day, when America, almost shrinking from the "shadows of coming events," first placed her feet upon untrodden ground, scarcely daring to anticipate the grandeur which awaited her. Let us march boldly on to the accomplishment of this important, this useful, and this splendid object, and, my word for it, no one who gives his vote for this bill will repent. On the contrary, he may consider it as one of the proudest acts of his life.

Mr. TUCKER said, that he had intended to give assent negative to the bill; but when he witnessed the singular spectacle of three long and eloquent speeches made in support of it, and no member rising against it, though there were such strong symptoms of opposition to the measure, he thought it due to a frank and manly course of legislation, and respectful to the friends of the bill, to state his objections to it, regretting, however, that the task had not devolved on some person more competent and better prepared than himself. Mr. T. said he did not object to the occupation of the mouth of Columbia river because he considered it visionary and unfeasible, for he thought it but too practicable, but because it was calculated to draw off our population and capital to a point where they will be less efficient and useful than at present, and where they must eventually be lost to these States. I also agree, said Mr. T., with the gentleman who introduced the bill, (Mr. FLOYD,) that we cannot arrest the progress of our population to the West. In vain may the Government attempt to set limits to its course. It marches on, with the increasing rapidity of a fire, and nothing will stop it until it reaches the shores of the Pacific. We have some data by which we may estimate this progress. Our population has been found to double in something less than twenty-five years. Now, if our settlements have advanced westwardly five hundred miles in that period, (and few would estimate it so low,) then, in the next twenty-five years we shall have advanced one thousand miles, and, in the twenty-five years after, two thousand miles; which, in a right line, would bring us in the Pacific Ocean. Thus, in less than half a century, the people of these States will have spread themselves across this continent, and many now living will see the vision of the gentleman from Massachusetts realized, of Christian churches and temples of justice reared in the wilderness, now exclusively occupied by savages. But while I consider this progress of our population to the West as inevitable, I have no wish to accelerate it, because, in the nature of things, the people on the east and the west side of the Rocky Mountains must have a permanent separation of interests.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1822.

The whole country, said Mr. T., lying east of the Rocky Mountains, is bound together by the strongest and most indissoluble ties. It is all Atlantic country, and that extensive commerce which is so beneficial to the different parts must all be carried on on the Atlantic. Nor is this all. Those immense and fertile regions which are drained by the Missouri and Mississippi, have but one outlet for their surplus products, one channel for their trade, and they must owe the secure enjoyment of it to the States lying on the Atlantic, as they alone can furnish the seamen which a navy requires. We are thus held together by the strong bands of commerce and mutual defence. But not so with the population west of the Rocky Mountains. Their rivers, emptying themselves into the Pacific, their trade will naturally be with China, Japan, and the Philippine Islands. They will not only be invited to this trade by their local position, but by the circumstances of their situation. Commerce is never so profitable as when it is carried on between a newly settled country in which land is fresh and easily obtained, and one in which a dense population has made manufactures cheap and abundant. The people on the Pacific will then find their best employment in exchanging their lumber, and bread stuffs, and provisions of all sorts, for the manufactures of China and Japan. They can have no inducement to trade with us. What common interest can they have with us on the Atlantic? The connexion would be an inconvenience and a burden to both. If we invite people there, we must protect them until they are able to protect themselves, and this protection would be to us expensive, and to them, on account of the distance, often tardy and inadequate. If the proposed settlement is to be incorporated into the Union, it is without example for a country to have a part of its territory so remote from the rest. From the mouth of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Columbia, I believe the distance to be about four thousand miles by any route that is now known.

Mr. T. said, the gentleman from Massachusetts has endeavored to derive aid to the bill by insisting on the advantages of colonies. Sir, when the mother country has a monopoly of their trade, they may increase its maritime strength and its commercial wealth, but in other respects they are uncongenial to our Republican institutions. To preserve their independence, it would be necessary to give large discretionary powers to those who govern them, and I have no wish to see introduced among us those distant pratorships whose effects were so pernicious in the Roman Empire.

Mr. T. said he was aware of the great advantages of the whale fisheries and the fur trade; he believed that no employment of our ships or seamen was so gainful as these. But he thought that the communications read by the gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. BAYLIES,) showing that most of the whales and seals were now taken in the South Pacific, though, from the growing scarcity of whales in that ocean, they might be obtained in greater abundance in the Northern Ocean. [Mr. BAYLIES said the gentleman from Virginia was mistaken, and made an explanation.] Mr. T. continued: Admitting that I am mistaken in that fact, and that our whale and seal ships are in the neighborhood of the mouth of Columbia river, this trade requires not your protection or encouragement. There has been no document laid before the House to show that it is required, or even asked for. If protection were required, I should be as ready to vote for it as any member of this House; but even then I should only be for establishing a military post. The advocates for this bill say there is no port on the whole coast of the Pacific in which our vessels have a right to enter and refit. But, if I am not mistaken, our citizens have not only found it practicable to refit their ships on the Columbia river, but they have even built vessels there. At all events, those who are concerned in the trade have not complained of this inconvenience, and, until they do, I am not for inviting a settlement which, before very long, must, in the nature of things, be lost to this nation. Mr. T. said such were his honest views of the bill, and he felt himself bound to disclose them, professing himself ready to abandon them if they should be shown to be erroneous.

Mr. FLOYD rose, and, in order to accommodate the wishes of some gentlemen, who desired time to consider this subject, and also because a resolution had been this day laid on the table calling for further information on the subject, moved that the further consideration of this bill be postponed to the second Monday in January.

This motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, December 19.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, the report of the Committee of Claims, made at the last session, on the petition of Andrew Bartle, together with the said petition, was recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. COLDEN, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing to the widow and child of the late Captain James Lawrence, of the United States Navy, the pensions heretofore allowed to them.

On motion of Mr. COOK, the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill confirming certain claims to land in the State of Illinois, were discharged from the further consideration thereof, and it was recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. JENNINGS, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act, entitled "An act for the relief of John D. Hay," approved April 18, 1814, as to exonerate the said Hay from any demands which the United States had against him as a deputy postmaster,

DECEMBER, 1822.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

prior to the passage of the aforesaid act; as likewise any costs that may have accrued.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report of the Secretary of War, on the petition of George W. Titus, which was read and ordered to lie on the table.

An engrossed bill, entitled an act to repeal part of an act passed by the State of Maryland in the year 1791, and now in force in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, entitled "An act for an addition to Georgetown, in Montgomery county," was read the third time, and passed.

Among the petitions this day presented, was one by Mr. STEWART, from sundry inhabitants of the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the aid and patronage of Congress in a plan for the improvement of the navigation of the river Potomac, from tide-water to Cumberland, in the State of Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. TRIMBLE submitted for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House what appropriations will be required to enable him to fortify Thompson's Island, usually called Key West; and whether a naval depot established at that island, protected by fortifications, will not afford facilities in defending the commerce of the States, and in clearing the Gulf of Mexico and the adjacent seas of pirates.

This resolution lies on the table one day, according to the rules.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the bill to provide for disciplining the militia of the United States, now lying on the table, was referred to a Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the books containing the decisions of the commissioners on the claims to land, derived from French and Spanish titles in the late Territory of Missouri and the Territory of Arkansas, called for on the motion of Mr. SCOTT; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. BRECKENRIDGE, the Committee of the Whole, to whom was referred the bill to authorize the holding a district court at Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, was discharged therefrom, and it was recommitted to the Judiciary Committee.

The bill for the relief of William Sayles was then passed through a Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be read a third time to-day, and was subsequently read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate.

[The case of William Sayles is this: He became security, in the year 1807, for the Postmaster at Peterboro, in the State of New York. In 1815, the Postmaster removed from that part of the country. In 1821, William Sayles was sued for the money due by his principal to the Government, and judgment was recovered against him for upwards of $300, upon which he is now confined in the limits of the county prison. Sayles is eighty-two years of age, and miserably poor. The bill proposes to discharge him from confinement on his delivering up all the property he has or may hereafter acquire.]

The House then proceeded to the roll of the Orders of the day. The first subject was the bill "to abolish imprisonment for debt;" which was recommended to a select committee; and Messrs. SMITH of Kentucky, NELSON of Virginia, and CUTBERT, were appointed the said committee.

The bill for making a road from the Miami of Lake Erie to the Connecticut Reserve, was for some time in Committee of the Whole, but was deferred to another day until the report accompanying the bill could be printed.

The bill securing to mechanics and others, in the District of Columbia, payment for materials and labor employed in building, passed through a Committee of the Whole, and was amended, on the motion of Mr. LATHROP, so as to require the contract, constituting the lien on the property, to be in writing, and recorded in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court, before the completion of the building. Thus amended, the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time on Monday next, by a vote of 65 to 40.

Several bills were passed over without any one calling them up; among which were the bills to make perpetual the act to regulate the collection of duties, of 3d March, 1815; the bill to regulate the entry of merchandise from adjacent territories; the bill to provide for the survey and disposal of the public lands in the Territory of Florida; the bill to enable the people of the District of Columbia to form a frame of government, &c.

The bill to provide for instructing and disciplining the Midshipmen of the Navy, being next in turn, was, on motion of Mr. FULLER, recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The resolution moved yesterday calling upon the President for the laws, &c., passed in the Territorial Government of Florida, was also taken up, and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. REID, of Georgia, the report of a committee of the last session, adverse to the long standing claim of the Georgia militia, for services rendered in 1792, '3 and '4, and the report adverse to the petition of General Thomas Glascock, were taken up, and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LITTLE, in moving the following resolution, said that it was represented to him that the relief intended to be afforded to sick and disabled seamen, by the laws of the United States, was not now afforded in all cases. Whether this was owing to a defect in the law, or to a deficiency of funds, he knew not. Certain it was, the fact was so; and, deeming it a proper subject for inquiry, he moved the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the laws as will more effectually afford relief to sick and disabled seamen.

The resolution was agreed to.

H. OF R.

Medals.

DECEMBER, 1822.

MEDALS.

Mr. ALEXANDER SMYTH, from the Joint Library Committee, to whom was referred the letter of George W. Erving, Esq., accompanying a collection of medals, reported that they have had the same under consideration, and recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker be directed to express to George W. Erving, Esq., the thanks of this House for the liberal donation of French and American medals made by him to Congress, for the use of the National Library.

The report being read, the question was taken to concur in the resolution therein submitted, and passed in the affirmative unanimously.

The following letter and catalogue accompanied the report:

Boston, July 4, 1822.

SIR: The letter which I had the honor to address to you on the 4th July, 1819, and which Mr. Lowndes was so obliging as to take charge of and deliver, was intended to have been accompanied by the collection of medals therein referred to, but this was unfortunately lost on board the ship "Factor," bound to New York; of which accident it appears that the House was duly informed by its committee. As soon as I heard of it, I endeavored to procure a duplicate of the collection, and succeeded, a few days before I left Paris, in April last. This, together with the medals which have been struck at Paris to commemorate some principal events of, and men distinguished in, our Revolution, I take the liberty, through you, sir, of herewith sending and offering to Congress for the use of the National Library.

With sentiments of the highest respect, &c.

GEORGE W. ERVING.

To the Hon. the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

P. S. A printed catalogue of the French medals is enclosed in the case which contains them. The American medals are but five, proper, viz: One of General Washington at the Siege of Boston; one of Doctor Franklin; one of Paul Jones; two of the battle of the Cowpens. To these I have thought it well to add Columbus and Kosciusko, taken from the collection of illustrious men deceased, now publishing in the French Mint. G. W. E.

MONNAIE DES MEDAILLES.

Collection des Médailles en bronze, des campagnes et du règne de l'Empereur Napoléon.

DESIGNATION DES MEDAILLES.

- 1796 Bataille de Montenotte.*
Bataille de Millésimo.
Bataille de Castiglione.
- 1797 Reddition de Mantoue.
Capitulation de Mantoue.*
Passage du Tagliamento.
Traité de Campo-Formio.
- 1798 Conquête de la Basse-Egypte.*
Conquête de la Haute-Egypte*
L'Egypte Conquise.*
- 1799 Retour à Fréjus.*
- 1800 Passage du Grand Saint-Bernard.*
Bataille de Marengo.
Mort du Général Desaix.

- 1800 Colonne Départementale.
Colonne nationale.
Le Quai Desaix.
Honneurs rendus à Turenne.
Attentat du trois Nivose.
  - 1801 Paix de Lunéville.
Autre sur le même sujet.
  - 1802 Paix d'Amiens.
Autre sur le même sujet.
Rétablissement du Culte.
Organisation de l'Instruction publique.*
  - 1803 Négociations avec l'Angleterre.*
Conquête du Hanovre.*
La Vénus de Médicis.*
Les Ecoles de Pharmacie.*
La Fortune Conservatrice.*
Le Musée Napoléon, { Salle de l'Apollon.*
(2 medals.) { Salle du Laocoon.*
La Légion d'Honneur.*
L'Ecole des Mines du Mont-Blanc.*
Le Camp de Boulogne.*
Construction des deux mille Barques.*
Le Code Napoléon.*
  - 1804 Le Couronnement à Paris.* (4 medals.)
Le Sacre.*
Repas donné par la ville de Paris.
Fêtes du Couronnement.
Distribution des Aigles.*
La Monnaie des Médailles rétablie.*
Société Centrale de Vaccine.*
  - 1805 Visite du Pape Pie VII.*
Couronnement à Milan.*
Le Tombeau de Desaix.*
Autre, avec inscription.*
La Ligurie réunie à la France.*
Les Ecoles de Médecine.*
- Première Campagne d'Autriche.*
- 1805 Levée du Camp de Boulogne.*
Allocution sur le Pont du Lech.*
Capitulation d'Ulm et de Memmingen.*
Prise de Vienne et de Presbourg.*
Reprise des Drapeaux à Inspruck.*
Bataille d'Austerlitz.*
Les trois Empereurs.*
Entrevue des deux Empereurs.*
Députation des Maires de Paris et Schoenbrunn.
Paix de Presbourg.*
Cathédrale de Vienne.*
Conquête de Venise.*
  - 1806 Conquête de l'Istrie.*
Conquête de la Dalmatie.*
Conquête de Naples.*
Souverainetés données.*
Mariage du Prince de Bade.*
Colonne de la Grande Armée.*
L'Arc de Triomphe.*
- Campagnes de Prusse et de Pologne.*
- 1806 Confédération du Rhin.*
Bataille d'Iéna.*
Autre sur le même sujet.
Entrée à Berlin.*
Capitulation des quatre Forteresses de la Prusse.*
Alliance avec la Saxe.*
Occupation de Hambourg.*
  - 1807 Les Aigles Françaises sur la Vistule.*

19 DECEMBER, 1822.

Columbia River.

H. of R.

- 1807 Bataille d'Eylau.*
 Séjour à Ostrode.*
 Bataille de Friedland.*
 La Victoire du 14 Juin.*
 Occupation des trois Capitales.*
 Conquête de la Silésie.*
 Paix de Tilsit.*
 Le grand Duché de Varsovie.*
 Le Royaume de Westphalie.*
 Mariage du Roi de Westphalie.*
 Réunion de l'Etrurie à l'Empire.*
 Le Simplon.*
 Route de Nice à Rome.*
 L'Aigle couronnée.*

Campagne d'Espagne.

- 1808 L'Entrée à Madrid.

Seconde Campagne d'Autriche.

- 1809 Rupture du Traité de Presbourg, et Batailles
 d'Abensberg et d'Eckmühl.*
 Départ de Paris, et entrée à Vienne.*
 Bataille d'Essling, et passage du Danube.*
 Prise de Raab.*
 Attaque d'Anvers, et Séjour à Schoenbrunn.*
 Réunion de l'Etat Romain à l'Empire.*
 Rome seconde Capitale.*
 Conquête de l'Illyrie.*
 Bataille de Wagram.*
 Paix de Vienne.*
 Visite du Roi de Saxe à la Monnaie des Médailles.*
- 1810 Visite du Roi et de la Reine de Bavière à la
 Monnaie des Médailles.*
 Mariage de l'Empereur.* (4 medals.)
 L'Amour emportant le Foudre.*
 Visite du Grand Duc de Wurtemberg à la
 Monnaie des Médailles.*
 Statue de Desaix.*
 Le Canal de l'Oureq.*
 Orphelines de la Légion d'Honneur.*
 Pompe Funèbre du Duc de Montebello.
- 1811 Naissance du Roi de Rome.*
 Baptême du Roi de Rome.
 Le Roi de Rome.* (3 medals.)

Campagne de Russie.

- 1812 Prise de Wilna.*
 Bataille de la Moskowa.*
 Entrée à Moscou.*
 Les Aigles Françaises sur le Borysthène.*
 Les Aigles Françaises sur le Wolga.*
 Retraite de l'Armée.*
 Fondation de l'Ecole des Beaux Arts à Rome.*
- 1813 Bataille de Iutzen.*
 Bataille de Wurtchen.*
 Le Monument du Mont Cenis.*
- 1814 Février, 1814.*
- 1815 Retour de l'Empereur.*
 L'Impératrice Marie Louise.*
 La Princesse Elisa.*
 La Princesse Pauline.*
 La Reine de Naples.*
 La Reine Hortense.*

NOTE.—Those marked thus (*) were ordered by the Government, and designed and executed under the direction of M. Denon.

OCCUPATION OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

The House having taken up the resolution yesterday moved by Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, requesting the Secretary of State to communicate certain information respecting the territory at the mouth of Columbia river—

Mr. COLDEN suggested that the letter of Mr. Prevost had been already published.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, said he was aware the letter was published. The information in that letter was not a material part of the resolution. It might be dispensed with, though it was desirable to lay all the information on the subject before the House together. He said, the British Northwest Company had extended their trade through Canada, to the westward of the Rocky Mountains, so that it had been necessary to supply their factories by the Pacific. The goods had been usually sent to Boston, and then shipped to the mouth of Columbia, and thence to their factories. It was generally understood that, about the year 1814, the proprietors (our citizens) made an arrangement with the Northwest Company, by which they became possessed of the establishment, and through that channel their factories are now supplied. He wished to know the nature and character of this arrangement; what sort of possession they had obtained; and what measure was necessary to assert our claim to the country.

Mr. FLOYD said, he was glad to find the gentleman favorably disposed towards the bill for establishing a government at the mouth of the Columbia. He objected, however, to the phraseology of the resolution. The Departments of the Government, as they are called, exist merely as the creatures of a law of Congress, and the language of Congress to them had always been that of command or instruction, not of request. As the readiest way of amending this resolution, Mr. F. moved so to alter it as to address the inquiry to the President of the United States, instead of the Secretary of State.

Mr. JOHNSTON assented to this amendment. He had not made up his mind, he said, what measures were necessary to be adopted with regard to the country in question. When the information was before the House he should be disposed to do whatever was necessary to maintain our rights in that quarter, to prevent any intrusion on our limits, especially to secure the duties on goods imported through that channel, and to prevent any right being acquired there by our acquiescence, &c.

Mr. FLOYD adverted to the information on the subject given in the report of the committee which accompanied the bill at the last session. That information, he said, had been collected from the best sources; from the Executive, from books in the public library, and from two highly respectable and intelligent gentlemen, (Messrs. Crooks and Farnum,) to whom he ought, before now, to have acknowledged his obligations, &c.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

INDIAN TRADING ESTABLISHMENT.

The House then took up the resolution yesterday laid on the table, calling on the President of the United States for information what steps had been taken by the Executive to carry into effect the act of the last session, to abolish the Indian Trading Establishment.

H. OF R.

Additional Judge of Michigan.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Mr. MALLARY suggested that the President, in his Message to the two Houses of Congress, stated that measures had been taken to carry that act into execution; and that, when the information should be received of the manner of its execution, he would transmit it to Congress. Mr. M. doubted, under these circumstances, the propriety of passing the resolution.

On motion, the resolution was laid on the table; but, subsequently,

On motion of Mr. METCALFE, the resolution was again taken up, and, on his representation that its passage would facilitate the discharge of the duties of the Committee on Indian Affairs, by procuring for it such information as may be at this time received, without waiting until the whole should be received, the resolution was passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE OF MICHIGAN.

The House then, on motion of Mr. SIBLEY, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill to provide for an additional judge in the Territory of Michigan.

On the details of the bill, (the general necessity for which was fully explained by Mr. SIBLEY,) some debate arose between Mr. SIBLEY and Mr. COOK.

Mr. COOK moved to strike out a proviso in the bill, which is in the following words:

"That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to give cognizance to the court hereby established, of cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, nor of cases wherein the United States shall be plaintiffs."

The motion to strike out this proviso was decided in the negative.

After some small amendments, the Committee rose, and reported the bill to the House; and the question being on ordering the bill to a third reading—

Mr. RANKIN stated his objections to the bill, which were, first, that the other judges of the Territory, now three in number, ought to be compelled to discharge the duties proposed now to be conferred on this fourth judge; and that the powers of this judge were to be different from those of the other judges of the Territory.

Mr. MCCOY was not satisfied that this bill ought to pass. If it passed at all, he was of opinion, with Mr. COOK, that officers should be appointed to constitute a complete court. For the present he moved that the bill do lie on the table.

This motion he withdrew, to allow of a motion for recommitment of the bill to be made.

On this motion a debate took place, in which the recommitment was advocated by Mr. LITTLE; and opposed by Messrs. SIBLEY, WILLIAMS of North Carolina, COLDEN, PLUMER of New Hampshire, and J. S. JOHNSTON.

The recommitment was supported on the ground of a necessity for further inquiry, and also on the objection to unnecessarily multiplying public offices.

The recommitment was opposed, on the ground that the case in contemplation of the bill was one which imperiously required a remedy—the people of the country now suffering from the want of a court, had at present to travel some one thousand miles, some six hundred, some four hundred, &c., to Detroit, where the supreme court now holds its sessions, which was such a denial as to amount to a refusal of justice, &c.

The bill was not recommitted, but was finally ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. McLANE, the bills concerning the collection of the revenue, &c., passed over this morning, were reinstated in their place in the orders of the day.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on that subject.

No debate or objection being made to the bill to make perpetual the act of 3d March, 1815, for regulating the collection of the duties on imports, it was reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow; and the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, December 20.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, praying for a grant of two small tracts of land belonging to the United States, to be applied to useful and important public purposes; which memorial was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, to which was recommitted the bill to authorize the establishment of a Penitentiary within the District of Columbia, reported an amendatory bill, which was committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of James Smith, paymaster, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made a report on the petition of Woodson Wren, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON, of Virginia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the subject had been committed, reported a bill concerning the apportionment of Representatives in the State of Alabama; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Hogg, and it was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Committee on Military Affairs were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Dodge, and it was referred to the Committee on the Militia.

20 DECEMBER, 1822.

Arming the Militia with Rifles.

H. OF R.

Mr. FULLER submitted the following resolution, which was read, and ordered to be laid on the table one day.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy Department be directed to inform this House what rules and regulations have been prepared by the Board of Commissioners, and approved by the President, for the government of the Navy of the United States; and how far a revision of the same may be necessary.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, the Commissioners of Navy Hospitals were directed to report to this House the amount of the sums received by them by virtue of the act of the 26th of February, 1811; the balance remaining in their hands, and what measures have been taken by them to effect the objects pointed out in the third section of said act.

On motion of Mr. McCARTY, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing to the widow of the late Colonel Electus Backus, who fell at Sackett's Harbor, during the late war, the half pay pension heretofore allowed to her.

A motion was made by Mr. CANNON, that the House do now proceed to consider the resolutions submitted by him on the 10th instant, and laid on the table, upon the subject of the militia; which motion to consider was disagreed to by the House by a vote of 59 to 56.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles, viz: An act concerning the lands to be granted to the State of Missouri, for the purposes of education, and other public uses; an act for the relief of Jacob Babbitt; and an act for the relief of Samuel H. Walley, and Henry G. Foster; in which bills they ask the concurrence of this House.

Bills from the Senate, of the following titles, to wit:

1. An act concerning the lands to be granted to the State of Missouri, for the purposes of education, and other public uses;

2. An act for the relief of Jacob Babbitt; and

3. An act for the relief of Samuel H. Walley and Henry G. Foster, were, severally, read the first and second time, and referred: the first, to the Committee on the Public Lands, and the second and third, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The engrossed bill to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Territory of Michigan, was read a third time, and, on motion of Mr. NELSON, of Virginia, it was ordered, for the present, to lie on the table.

The engrossed bill to make perpetual the act of March 5, 1815, to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, was read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

ARMING MILITIA WITH RIFLES.

Mr. WRIGHT submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Militia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of arming the militia with rifles, except those residing in cities, towns, and villages, and report thereon by bill or otherwise.

In offering this resolution, Mr. WRIGHT said he had submitted it in confidence of the attention of the House to the subject, it being one of the first importance, the protection of the liberties of the people, and from his own experience in the use of fire arms, having taken a hand in two wars, he hoped for the attention of the House to his remarks. The militia in the country, said Mr. W., in their dispersed situation, can never be taught the use of the musket, and manœuvres necessary to fit them to contend with a regular foreign army. The labor they undergo in their periodical meetings, their marchings and counter-marches; their lugging their rusty muskets five or six miles, or, peradventure, the using sticks for firelocks, is truly painful to a spectator skilled in arms, I know vastly distressing to the country militia. They, sir, have such disgust to this business, and such antipathy to the duties of militiamen, have so little confidence in their fitness to contend with a regular army, that they consider themselves as sacrifices to the liberties of their country, when thus compelled to fight. But, sir, arm the country militia with rifles, and possess each of them with a rifle, compel them to meet as often as may be thought necessary, and distribute the fines and forfeitures into premiums for sharp shooting—taking care to have the fourth day of July, perpetual, one of those days; and, sir, you will relieve the militia from an intolerable burden, give them a perfect confidence in their strength and power, and make them, as I have always thought they were, the real bulwark of the liberties of their country. They fight for themselves, and not like mercenaries for pay; they in a little time, a hundred or two hundred yards, would be sure of their object; and riflemen need not be told of the vast certainty to which the use of the rifle may be brought. The havoc made at New Orleans, near the close of the last war, leaves no doubt on this subject. I have been told of a case, of two riflemen there, who shot at the same officer, and each claimed him—one said that he shot to hit him under the left eye; the other that he shot at his head; he was found to have been shot just under the left eye, and also in the head; so that he would have been killed by either. The immense carnage at New Orleans seals the truth of all I have said. I have been told, further, that, after the battle, a bet of a supper was made between the officers of two rifle corps from Georgia and Tennessee, of six shots aside, an hundred yards; that they shot at a paper on the mouth of a musket, that the Tennesseans shot their six balls into the musket, on which the Georgians gave up the bet. When the British took possession of Kent Island there were said to be three rifles in the hands of the militia of the Island, and though concealed to avoid their getting them, kept them in a constant state of caution, for fear of being taken off; and which they were anxious to buy. Besides, the economy in the supply of rifles is of great consequence; the rifle barrels can be kept good for a long time; can be rebored, and by constant use of oil in their patches, are not liable to rust—when muskets, with the greatest care, are liable to rust,

H. OF R.

Fortifying Key West.

DECEMBER, 1822.

and may be bent, and thereby destroyed. Sir, I have no doubt if our militia shall be thus armed and thus prepared, and their feats of sharp shooting published to the world, that all the Powers of Europe would not be able to press their officers to land on our coasts; but, sir, if they shall, notwithstanding, have the hardihood, I have no doubt they will pay for their temerity. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table, that the subject thus broke, may be acted on at an early day, understandingly, and the liberties of this country be thus preserved till the last trump.

Without further debate the motion of Mr. WRIGHT, was ordered to lie on the table.

FORTIFYING KEY WEST.

The resolution yesterday moved by Mr. TRIMBLE, requesting from the President of the United States information and estimates of the expense of fortifying Thompson's Island, commonly called Key West, on the coast of Florida, was then taken up; and the question being stated on agreeing thereto—

Mr. EUSBS submitted whether it would not be expedient to let this resolution lie on the table for the present. It was well understood, he said, that a survey of the coast of Florida, &c., had been ordered, and was now in a train of execution. That being the case, it not being possible that the President could yet give the information required, he thought the adoption of the resolution would at this time be premature.

Mr. TRIMBLE said he had supposed it would have been entirely unnecessary for him to make any explanation of the object of this resolution, and that any such explanation, upon a motion for inquiry, would be a mere consumption of time. He was decidedly of opinion that this inquiry ought not to be postponed. We ought, said he, to act upon this subject at the present session. His own opinion was, that the President ought in his message to have recommended this subject to the attention of Congress; the surveys not having been made, however, was certainly a sufficient reason why the recommendation was not introduced into the message. Mr. T. said that he should himself have brought forward this subject at the last session of Congress, but for the very circumstance that he had expected that the Board of Topographical Engineers and Naval Officers would have been sent during the last Summer, to survey that position. The frequency of piracies in those seas, the necessity of putting them down, and the importance of holding this position for naval purposes, and for a more important purpose, concurred in his mind to recommend this object to the consideration of the Government. But what does this Board of Surveyors say? That they have examined the Rigolets, and the localities of Mobile Bay, and carried their reconnoissances as far as Dauphin Island, and that their former opinion on that subject was fully confirmed. And why, Mr. T. asked, did they not carry their reconnoissances further South? He did not mean to cast blame on them, however, but to express his opinion that Key West ought to have been surveyed in preference to the other points. If the House waited for the report of the surveyors, as suggested, they would not be able to act upon the subject the present session, and of course nothing could be done towards this work during the ensuing Summer. Let any one look at that point, in its relation to Florida and to Cuba, and he would be satisfied that the United States ought to expend two millions of dollars, at least, if necessary, in fortifying it, not to guard against pirates, but for the more important purpose of defending the commerce of the United States against the island of Cuba, if that island should ever fall into the hands of a Power hostile to the United States. Mr. T. said he had carried his reconnoissances, on the map, so far as to satisfy him of the importance of this station. He wanted the information upon the subject now, and he hoped the House would sustain the call, in order, that, after it shall be received, an appropriation for this object may be inserted in the General Appropriation bill—he himself being prepared to vote for such an appropriation, unless there should be a report against the expediency of it. The House would recollect, he said, that this body must rise on the 3d of March, and it was necessary, in his opinion, that this subject should be previously acted upon. Besides, the report, if we wait for it, will not, when it comes, bring with it the estimates and other information asked for by the resolution.

Mr. FLOYD said he was very well convinced, from his reflections on the subject, that the fortification of the island, of which the gentleman had spoken, ought not to take place. The island in question is distant at least thirty miles from the main land of Florida. Now, said he, if we are to have naval depots, let us have them on land—on portions of our territory that can be approached without recourse to the ocean. To maintain a depot or fortified station on this or any island, would require that we should also have command of the sea. If not, our enemy could easily find his way between the continent and the island, and intercept all communication between them. All the armies of the United States, brought into Florida, would avail nothing to defend an insular station against a naval force. For this reason, he was entirely opposed to this project of establishing a naval depot on that island.

Mr. TRIMBLE said he did not pretend to be particularly conversant with matters of this description, nor was he sure that finally he should vote to establish a naval depot at Key West, or to fortify that island. It was information that he now asked for, and not a disbursement of money. His present impression was, that the establishment of a naval depot on that island would not increase but would diminish one half the expense of the fortification of that quarter of our country. The island is distant more than thirty miles—it is distant seventy miles from the main land. From Cape Florida to West Key is seventy miles; from West Key to Havana is seventy-five miles; and the island lies about thirty-five miles west of a direct line drawn from Cape Florida to Havana. It commands the commerce of the Gulf Stream better than Havana itself. Its harbor is sufficiently capacious for the whole Navy of the United States to lie in, supposing it to consist of fifteen ships of the line, and a due proportion of vessels of a smaller class. He begged the gentleman to understand that the fortification of that island, instead of increasing the general expense of fortifications, would diminish that expenditure. It was the only spot worth fortifying for the defence of the Gulf of Mexico. As to Dauphin Island, Mr. T. said now, as he had occasion to say before, that it would not answer the purpose for which it was undertaken. Nay, if he were living in New Orleans, he would give an invading enemy food and raiment to induce him to land on Dauphin Island for the purpose of attacking New Orleans.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Naval Fraternal Society.

H. OF R.

Mr. FLOYD said he could not conceive how the fortifying of Key West was to diminish the expense of fortifications, generally. If he had understood the gentleman, he had supposed it an object worthy of an expenditure of two millions upon it. Now, Mr. F. said, he could not conceive how fortifying an island, fifty miles from the main land, could diminish expense, when he himself had witnessed, during the late war, a British seventy-four, a frigate, and two or three tenders, blocking up the whole of Chesapeake bay. Imagine this island fortified and stocked with naval stores, &c., and the whole Army of the United States marched to the shore of Florida opposite to the island; and let an enemy's superior naval force occupy the intermediate space, what would become of our fortifications and naval stores on Key West? All intercourse would be cut off with it, and the place must eventually fall into the hands of the enemy. He had heard fault found with General WASHINGTON by military men for establishing a post on Long Island during the Revolutionary war. At any rate, to fortify an island fifty miles from land, when our enemy might have a naval force superior to ours, seemed to him not to be accordant with military principles.

The question was then taken on agreeing to Mr. TRIMBLE's resolution; and, on a division, seventy-nine rose in favor of it, being a majority of the members present. So the resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL FRATERNAL ASSOCIATION.

The House then, on motion of Mr. FULLER, took up the bill, lying on the table from the last session, for incorporating the United States Naval Fraternal Association for the relief of the families of deceased officers; and the question being on ordering the bill to a third reading—

Mr. COLDEN, professing the most perfect respect and best wishes for the object of this bill, expressed his apprehension that the beneficial objects of the institution would induce the House, in passing the bill, to transcend any power given to it by the Constitution of the United States. He asked, if Congress was competent to incorporate an association of this description, how benevolent or excellent soever its purposes? If so, why would they not be competent to incorporate other associations for the same or any other purpose. This corporation, said Mr. C., is to extend throughout the United States, and to have force through every State. Why not, on the same principle, incorporate an association of farmers, of merchants, or of any other class who shall tell us they have the same benevolent objects in view? He should be told, in all probability that this power of incorporation had been heretofore in some cases exercised by Congress. No doubt it had; but, Mr. C. asked, upon what principle? On the principle that in those cases the power was impliedly given to Congress. There is no express power of incorporation given to Congress by the Constitution; and whenever acts of that description had been passed, it was upon the ground that the Constitution by necessary implication affords the power. He had never heard the incorporation of the Bank of the United States by Congress advocated on any other principle than that the power was an implied one, the exercise of which was necessary to the due management of the fiscal concerns of the Government, to the establishment of a currency of equal value, which could not be maintained without a fountain head, such as the bank, from which the currency might issue, &c. Could any such argument be produced in favor of incorporating this association? He apprehended not. What he had advanced, Mr. C. said, was probably sufficient to show the foundation of his objection to this bill, which appeared so important to him at least as to induce further examination before the House determined to sanction the principles of the bill. He asked gentlemen to draw the line at which Congress were to stop in the exercise of the power of incorporation, if they passed this bill. To give further time for inquiring into this subject, Mr. C. wished the bill to lie on the table.

Mr. FULLER said that, when this bill was first reported, the same grounds of objection had been taken to it as were now taken by the gentleman from New York; and, to obviate that objection, an amendment had been adopted to the bill, so as to limit the power of the Corporation to the District of Columbia. He presumed, therefore, when the bill was properly understood, it would be found that the argument of the gentleman did not apply to it. There had been a variety of acts passed, Mr. F. said, within the last twenty years, precisely of the nature of the present act. Mr. F. referred the gentleman from New York, and other gentlemen who might entertain the same views, to the act incorporating the Columbian College; the act incorporating the Association of Clerks, for an object perfectly analogous to that of this bill; to the acts establishing banks within the District, which, he presumed, would not be considered as meriting so much the favor of the House, as this bill. He should not object to any postponement of the bill which gentlemen might ask, but he suggested these examples for the consideration of gentlemen when the bill should again come before the House.

Mr. COLDEN stated, further, the doubts which had arisen in his mind respecting this bill, though he confessed he was not aware, when up before, of the amendment which had been made to the bill since it was reported. The objections to it were now said to be without foundation, because of its being a local incorporation, the authority for which was given by the Constitution, for this bill as well as for others of a similar nature. Mr. C. said he had no doubt of the authority of Congress to establish Corporations under the local and special powers given to Congress, not as legislators for the Union, but as legislators for this particular District. But what constitutes, in this case, the locality of a corporation? It must be, either the object of the corporation, or the persons connected with it. If, said Mr. C., we cannot legislate on a matter which does not attach itself to this District over which we have exclusive legislation, where, I ask, is the locality connected with this institution so as to place its incorporation within the power of Congress? You incorporate whom? Persons who are not even professedly citizens of this District, but persons connected with an establishment as extensive as the Union—as extensive, indeed, as the world; for, in whatever quarter of the earth our naval officers are found, this incorporation extends to them. If, in virtue of the powers of Congress over this District, they may do this, why may they not make corporations for any other object? Why might not the people of the city of New York desire Congress to incorporate a bank for their use, to be established within this District? Suppose it to be proposed: the question would naturally be asked, where will you transact your business? In New York. Where do you live? In New York. How, then, do you clothe yourselves with the property of locality here? So with this Association, &c. [Here an explanation took place; Mr. C. being apprized that the bill contained a provision that the property of the Association should be confined to this District.] Mr. C. said, that his suggestions went only to establish the propriety of further time to examine, which was confirmed by the misapprehension as to the provisions of the bill. If, on proper examination, it should appear that the bill was not liable to Constitutional objections, he should with all his heart support it.

The bill was then ordered to lie on the table; but was subsequently taken up, on motion of Mr. FULLER, and recommitment (for such amendment as Mr. F. thought would take away all objection to it) to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 23.

A new member, to wit: from Pennsylvania, DANIEL UDREY, elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of Ludwig Worman, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. LITTLE presented a petition of sundry merchants of the city of Baltimore, praying for further compensation for damage sustained by their vessels in consequence of their being sunk in the entrance of the harbor of Baltimore, to prevent the entrance of the British shipping into that harbor, in the month of September, 1814.

Mr. LITTLE presented a petition of William Mahy, representing that he was a soldier in the army of the Revolution, as, also, in the army acting against the hostile Indians, in the years 1793 and 1794; as a petty officer in the naval service, during the war with Tripoli, and, also, in the late war with Great Britain; that he has been the father of twenty sons, sixteen of whom have died in the military ranks of the United States; and praying for a grant of the bounty in land due for his services in the Revolutionary war, and that he may be placed on the pension list of the United States.—Referred to the Secretary of War.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the resolution laid on the table by Mr. FULLER, on the 30th instant, calling for information respecting the rules for the government of the Navy, &c., and agreed to the same.

Mr. ALLEN, of Tennessee, from the select committee appointed on the petition of James Royal, reported a bill for his relief; which bill was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOMLINSON submitted the following resolution, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House a statement, showing the amount annually received under the act for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, since the passage of said act, including the amount received in the first and second quarters of the year 1822; and the annual expenditure of the amount so received during the same period, designating the amount annually received and expended in each State.

On motion of Mr. COOK, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, alterations are necessary to be made in the organization of the courts of the United States, so as more equally to extend their advantages to the several States.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the House took up, and proceeded to consider, the bill to provide for delivering persons held to labor or service in any of the States or Territories, who shall escape into any other State or Territory. Whereupon, it was committed to a Committee of the Whole House on the second day of January, 1823.

On motion of Mr. COLDEN, the House took up and proceeded to consider, the report of the Committee of Claims, made at the last session, on the case of John G. Bogert, and it was ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. PLUMER, of Pennsylvania, the House took up, and proceeded to consider, the report of the Committee of Ways and Means, made at the last session, on the petition of John Wells; when it was ordered that the report, together with the petition, be recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER communicated to the House the following letter:

DECEMBER, 1822.

Cherokee and Creek Treaties.

H. OF R.

WASHINGTON, December 21, 1822.

SIR: I am highly sensible of the honor which I have received in your official letter of yesterday, acquainting me with the resolution which the House of Representatives has deigned to pass, in reference to the contribution towards a cabinet of medals, for the use of the National Library, which I ventured to present to it.

I beg you, sir, to accept my best acknowledgments for the very obliging terms in which you have communicated that resolution, and for the personal sentiments with which you have been pleased to accompany it. With very great respect, &c.

GEORGE W. ERVING.

HON. PHILIP P. BARBOUR,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The letter was read, and laid on the table.

The engrossed bill to secure to the mechanics and others, in the City of Washington, a lien on buildings for the materials and labor employed thereon, was about to be read a third time; when

Mr. KENT rose, and moved that the bill lie on the table. On examining an old law of the State of Maryland, passed in the year 1791, and now in force in this District, he discovered that the provisions contained in this bill were at present substantially in force as the law of the District, under that act.

The bill was ordered to lie on the table.

CHEROKEE AND CREEK TREATIES, &amp;c.

The House then, on motion of Mr. TATNALL, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the report of a committee of the last session, condemning so much of certain treaties with the Cherokee and Creek Indians as grants to those Indians the fee simple to certain lands in the State of Georgia.

The question being stated on agreeing to three resolutions moved by Mr. TATNALL, on a former day, by way of amendment to the report (the two first of which declare the treaties to be infractions of the rights of Georgia and of the United States, and the third proposes an appropriation for extinguishing the Indian title to these cessions.)

Mr. REID, of Georgia, rose and said, that in deference to the opinions of some who were favorable to the main object of the report, but averse to acting upon the declaratory resolutions, inasmuch as those resolutions could have no legislative effect, and for the purpose of presenting to the House a naked question to decide upon, he should move that the declaratory resolutions, forming part of the proposed amendment, should be stricken out, and the following added to the third resolution: "And that the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report an appropriation in conformity with this resolution."

Mr. TATNALL said, that, although, as he stated the other day, he deemed it necessary, in determining to make an appropriation, that the ground of that determination should be stated in the body of the resolution, yet, as he was aware, that some gentlemen supposed that the declaratory resolutions might be so interpreted as to convey a reflection on some individuals in the Government, which was not his intention in moving them, he would readily withdraw the resolutions, thus assenting to the proposition of his colleague.

Thus modified, and being further modified on the suggestion of Mr. WHIPPLE, the proposition of Mr. TATNALL to amend the report of the committee, was agreed to, and reported to the House in the following shape:

"Resolved, That it is expedient and proper that an appropriation be made by Congress, of a sum adequate to the extinction of the Indian title to the 'reserves' embraced within certain treaties of the 9th of August, 1814, 8th July, 1817, and 20th February, 1819, with the Cherokee and Creek Indians, and that the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report an appropriation in conformity with this resolution."

Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, said, that, in the general subject of the report and resolution, he agreed with the gentlemen from Georgia; but he had strong doubt as to the propriety of acting on that subject in the manner now proposed. He thought gentlemen would be able to arrive at their object in the usual way, by a direction to the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of making this appropriation. The House would see into what a dilemma it would be thrown by the passage of this resolution. The members of this House would readily admit that they were not so informed on this subject as to be ready now to act upon it conclusively. But, if this resolution were to pass in its present form, it would preclude the House from a review of the subject. The extent of these reservations, Mr. R. said, he was confident was not understood by the House, and the sum adequate to the extinguishment of the Indian title would be much greater than gentlemen anticipated. When, however, the subject could come before the House, information on these particulars would be necessary. Mr. R. proposed, therefore, the following, as a substitute for the resolution now before the House:

"That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation adequate to the purchase of the reservations made in favor of the Creek and Cherokee Indians, within the territory ceded to Georgia."

Mr. TATNALL said, if the House was not now ready to act upon the subject, unquestionably no blame could therefore be imputed to the delegation from the State of Georgia. It would be recollected that at the last session the House exhibited dissatisfaction at the attempts which were made by some of the delegation from that State to explain this matter to the House, being satisfied to act upon it without such explanation. This had induced them to be more silent at this session on the subject. It was astonishing to him, however, that gentlemen should be so ignorant of a case in which the essential rights of one of the States, and he trusted not an insignificant State, have been violated. For three years in succession memorials have been presented from the Legislature of Georgia to Congress to relieve them from a state of embarrassment which has perhaps never been equalled, and yet gentlemen were ignorant of the merits of the question! Mr. T. dwelt further upon the length of time this subject had been under consideration, and on its intrinsic importance. If the subject were postponed now it might, for aught he knew, be postponed to doomsday. Mr. T. said he had no design to press this subject, unnecessarily, and he should disdain to take the House unawares or at advantage in regard to this or any other question; but he wished that it should be considered and acted upon before it became so late in the session that want of time should be a plea for declining to act on it at all. As a young legislator, he would not attempt to arraign the conduct of this House; but he had heard the charge so frequently brought against it, that he believed it to be well founded, that business was hurried through at the end of every session, and very much neglected in the early part of it. It was the effect of this habit that he wished to avoid in regard to this question.

H. of R.

Road through the Black Swamp in Ohio.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Mr. RANKIN said he had not charged the gentleman with any intention to take the House by surprise, or to take advantage. Not having been able to read the report of the committee on which the resolutions were founded, and presuming others to be similarly situated, all that Mr. R. now desired was, to avoid passing a vote which should be considered conclusive on the House.

Mr. TATNALL said he did not understand the gentleman as charging him with the intention of taking the House by surprise, but as being the innocent cause, at least, of its being taken by surprise. However, since it seemed that the subject had not been fully investigated by gentlemen, he was not disposed to urge a decision to-day; and therefore moved that the bill do lie on the table, giving notice at the same time that he should call it up again on Monday next.

The report was ordered to lie on the table.

ROAD THROUGH THE BLACK SWAMP, IN OHIO.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, the House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the following bill:

A Bill for laying out and making a road, from the lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the Western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeably to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown.

Be it enacted, &c., That the State of Ohio is hereby authorized to lay out, open, and construct a road, from the lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the Western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in such a manner as the Legislature of said State may by law provide, with the approbation of the President of the United States, which road, when constructed, shall for ever remain a public highway.

SEC. 2. That, in order to enable the State of Ohio to open and construct said road, a tract of land, of one hundred and twenty feet wide, whereon to locate the same, together with one mile on each side thereof, and adjoining thereto, to defray the expenses of making said road, is hereby granted to said State, to commence at the Miami Rapids, and terminate at the Western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, with full power and authority to sell and convey the same, and apply the proceeds to the making of said road; and in case the said tract of land shall sell for a greater sum than shall be sufficient to complete such road, then the residue thereof shall remain with the State of Ohio, as a fund for the purpose of keeping said road in repair.

SEC. 3. That, in case any of the lands, through which it may be thought expedient to open said road, may have been previously sold by the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay such officer as the State of Ohio may appoint for that purpose, the net proceeds of the sales of a quantity equal to one mile on each side of said road.

SEC. 4. That, whenever the Governor of the State of Ohio shall have laid before the President of the United States a survey of the location of said road, and the President shall have approved the same, then the right of the State to said tract of land shall be considered as complete, for the purposes aforesaid; and the President shall direct, that, until the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, none of the public lands shall be sold, within three miles on each side of a line, to be drawn direct from the foot of the Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the lower Rapids of Sandusky, thence to the Western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve.

On a call for information of the grounds and object of the bill—

Mr. VANCE briefly stated them, as they stand in the report of the committee accompanying the bill; from which it appears, that the treaty referred to in the bill was concluded on the 25th day of November, 1808, and that its exclusive object appears to have been to obtain the establishment of a practicable and convenient road from the interior settlements of the United States to those of the Territory of Michigan. Many of the tribes of Indians with whom that treaty was concluded, were, in virtue of previous treaties, entitled to receive, within that Territory, large annuities. There never had been any artificial road leading to it, except through the province of Upper Canada. Delays had, consequently, occurred in the transmission of those annuities, and reiterated complaints were made because they were not received, or, if received, frequently damaged. To obviate such difficulties, and in the expectation that many important advantages would result to them, from a measure which promised to bring them more immediately under the observation and protection of the Government, the Indians, parties to the treaty, without any other remuneration than such incidental benefits as they anticipated from the establishment of the proposed road, voluntarily ceded to the United States a tract of land of one hundred and twenty feet in width, extending from the "foot of the Rapids of the Miami of the Lake," to the western line of the "Connecticut Western Reserve," and all the land within one mile of said tract, on each side of it; and also another tract of land, of one hundred and twenty feet in width, extending from Lower Sandusky, southwardly, to the boundary line established by the Treaty of Greenville. Afterwards, in September, 1817, the Treaty of the Rapids of the Miami was concluded, (2d Session, 15th Congress,) by the subsequent ratification of which, the Indian title to the whole country within which the contemplated roads were to be located became vested in this Government. The Black Swamp, so celebrated in the annals of our recent history, is an extensive morass, which winds round the southeastern border of Michigan; it terminates, on the north, at the border of Lake Erie, comprehending a width of about thirty miles. It extends so far southerly and southwesterly, as to interrupt all communication by land between the settlements in Michigan and those in the interior of the United States. No reliance, however, can be placed upon the individual industry of that country to construct a road over such a morass. The construction of a road must precede the establishment there of any considerable population, &c. The land which was asked for, Mr. V. said, was of no value to the United States at present, and could be of none until the road was made. An appropriation of land was asked for this purpose, because it was supposed it would be more readily granted than an appropriation of money. Had this road been made before the late war, Mr. V. said, millions of dollars would have been saved to the United States; and, if we should be again at war with the owners of Canada, it would be more important to this Government than any fortification, however costly, in any part of the United States. At present, for more than six months of the year the road was wholly impassable; and at the time the ordinary course of travelling to get into the States from Michigan, &c., was to go through Canada, &c. The road was of comparatively little importance to the State of Ohio, passing along her margin only, but it was of vast importance to the Territory of Michigan, &c.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Imports from Canada.

H. of R.

On motion of Mr. SLOANE, of Ohio, the bill was amended, by adding, to the end of the third section, the words "at the minimum price."

On motion of the same gentleman, the bill was further amended, by adding to the bill a proviso that nothing in this bill contained should be construed to authorize the State of Ohio to claim any money from the Treasury for the making this road, except moneys arising from the sale of the land designated in the bill.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, the latter part of the fourth section, beginning with the words "And the President," &c., was stricken out.

Thus amended, the bill was reported to the House; and then, on motion of Mr. VANCE, who wished to give full time to gentlemen to examine the bill and report, &c., the bill was for the present ordered to lie on the table.

REPRESENTATION OF ALABAMA.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill to fix the apportionment of Representatives for the State of Alabama.

Mr. NELSON, of Virginia, stated the circumstances under which the Committee on the Judiciary had reported this bill. In the general apportionment bill passed at the last session of Congress, in consequence of the deficiency in the returns of the census from Alabama, a clause had been introduced, entitling the State of Alabama, if the returns yet to be received should be such as to entitle her to so many, to three representatives in Congress. From the returns received, it appeared that the actual population returned to the Department of State was, in Federal numbers, 125,401. If it had been only 120,000, it would have been sufficient to entitle that State to three representatives, so that she had a fraction of more than five thousand over the requisite number. A question had been made, whether those returns had been made within the time required by law. To remove that doubt, Mr. N. said, there was a letter from the Governor of the State, who, independent of the respect due to his official character, was advantageously known to many members of this House, stating that the census had been actually taken within the time allowed by law, and further stating that there were yet two counties in the State from which no returns had yet been received. If the testimony was not as formal as was desirable, the House could yet not fall into error in declaring Alabama to be entitled to three representatives, when she had a fraction of five thousand over the requisite number, and had, besides, two whole counties whose population had not been counted or returned. As he presumed there would be no objection to the bill under these circumstances, he moved that it be reported to the House.

The Committee rose accordingly, and reported the bill to the House. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading this day, and was subsequently read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

IMPORTS FROM CANADA, &c.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill to amend the act for regulating the importation of goods from the adjacent States and territories.

Mr. TOMLINSON, of Connecticut, explained the object of this bill. The act of 1821, he said, prescribes a specific penalty of four hundred dollars for the importation of any article, be its value great or small, contrary to the provisions of that act. It has been found, in practice, that the penalty was so enormous that it was not prosecuted for under that act, by the collectors. This bill proposed to substitute, for the specific penalty, a penalty of four times the value of the article imported. By that act, also, the vessel, or cart, or other vehicle, made use of in any illegal importation, was forfeited therefor. So that, should this bill pass, the vehicle and four times the value of the article imported would still be liable to forfeiture. The Treasury Department was in favor of the proposed modification of the law, it appearing not advisable to prosecute for a penalty of four hundred dollars in cases where the value of the article does not exceed forty cents, as was often the case, when persons went over the line and supplied themselves with small quantities of different articles, &c. This species of illegal importation, however, ought to be suppressed, and in order to do it, the penalty ought to be proportioned to the offence, as not, by its enormity, to prevent its being prosecuted for &c.

Mr. MALLARY confirmed the statements of Mr. TOMLINSON in every particular, and said that the proposed amendment of the law, or something like it, was indispensable.

The Committee then rose and reported the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

SUPPRESSION OF PIRACY.

On motion of Mr. GORHAM, of Massachusetts, the House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill in addition to an act to continue in force the act to protect the commerce of the United States against pirates, and to punish the crime of piracy.

Mr. GORHAM said, the object of the bill was to make perpetual certain provisions of our laws which are now only temporary. The first act on this subject was passed on the 3d of March, 1819. The first section authorized the employment of the public armed vessels to protect our commerce from piratical depredation; the second section authorized the sending pirates into our ports for adjudication, and the recapture of vessels taken by pirates; the third section authorized merchant vessels of the United States to defend themselves from piratical attacks, and to capture and send on the offending party; the fourth section subjected piratical vessels, so captured, to condemnation in the ports of the United States. This act was temporary; by the act of 15th May, 1820, these four sections were continued in force for two years, and to the end of the session of Congress thereafter, viz: to the end of the present session of Congress. The object of the bill was to make these clauses perpetual.

No objection being made to the bill, the Committee rose and reported it, and it was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

The bill further to regulate the compensation to postmasters, was next in order; and, on motion of Mr. WOODCOCK, of New York, it was re-committed to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

LOUISIANA LAND TITLES.

On motion of Mr. J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, the House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill providing for the examination of the titles to land in that part of Louisiana situated between Rio Hondo and the Sabine river.

On the details of this bill, there arose a desultory debate which kept the House in session to a late hour; in the course of which the principal speakers were Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. RANKIN, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. MALLARY, Mr. MCCOY, and Mr. WALWORTH.

From the statements of the two first of these gentlemen, it appeared that the object of this bill is, to put the territory described in the bill (the neutral ground, as it is commonly called) which was, by the Treaty of 1819, acknowledged by Spain to belong to the United States, on the same footing, in regard to its land titles, &c., as the other parts of Louisiana have been heretofore placed upon. The discussion consisted of inquiries and answers on these points, and observations on particular points of detail in the bill.

The bill had not been gone through, when, at nearly sunset, the Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

TUESDAY, December 24.

Another member, wit: from Massachusetts, GIDDEON BARSTOW, appeared and took his seat.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was re-committed the bill to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Michigan, reported a new bill of the same title, which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the Whole to which is committed the bill to conform certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois.

The House took up, and proceeded to consider, the resolution submitted by Mr. TOMLINSON, and laid on the table yesterday; and the same being read, was agreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMSON, the subject-matter of a petition presented to Congress the last session by Josiah Hook, Collector of the port of Penobscot, in the State of Maine, praying for a reimbursement of moneys recovered of him by Josiah Ilott, together with the accompanying documents, and a bill from the Senate for his relief, were referred to the Committee of Claims, with instructions to consider the expediency of granting him the relief prayed for.

On motion of Mr. WALWORTH, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of removing the port of entry and delivery for the District of Champlain, from Cumberland Head to the village of Plattsburgh.

On motion of Mr. INGHAM, the Committee on Roads and Canals were instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating money for the purpose of aiding in the completion of a canal from the waters of the Chesapeake to those of the Delaware.

On motion of Mr. FINDLAY, the Committee of Accounts were directed to report to this House how printers, who have heretofore furnished the members of this House with newspapers, are to receive their pay.

The House took up, and proceeded to consider, the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of Madame La Ray, made at the last session: Whereupon, it was ordered that the said report be committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill for the relief of Thaddeus Mayhew.

The House took up, and proceeded to consider, the bill for the relief of certain persons who have paid duties on certain goods imported into Castine: Whereupon, it was ordered that the bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill relating to the titles to lots in the village of Peoria, when, on motion of Mr.

DECEMBER, 1822.

State of the Finances.

H. OF R.

COOK, who said the House did not appear, on the eve of the holidays, to be disposed to grave investigation, the Committee rose, and obtained leave to sit again.

The House took up, and proceeded to consider, the bill for the relief of William Whitehead, and others: Whereupon, it was ordered that the bill be committed to the Committee of the whole House last appointed.

The bill to amend the act regulating the collection of duties on goods imported from adjacent States and territories; and the bill to make perpetual the provisions of the act for the punishment of piracy, &c., were severally read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report on foreign coins, &c., which was ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. NELSON, of Virginia, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be directed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing such a number of copies of Sergeant's Treatise on Constitutional Law, to be deposited in the Library of Congress, as may be deemed necessary for the use of the members of both Houses of Congress.

[In offering this resolution, Mr. N. made some observations on the importance of a treatise of this description, and read an extract of a letter from Judge Story, speaking in the highest terms of this work, which he says is on a plan which is novel, but as useful as it is novel, affording proofs of the author's exactness, acuteness, and accuracy, and displaying sound learning, dispassionate sentiments, and clear method.]

STATE OF THE FINANCES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report from that department on the state of the finances; of which, on motion of Mr. McLANE, five thousand copies were ordered to be printed for the use of the House. The report is as follows:

In obedience to the directions of the "Act supplementary to the act to establish the Treasury Department," the Secretary of the Treasury respectfully submits the following report:

1. Of the public revenue and expenditure of the years 1821 and 1822.

The net revenue which accrued from duties on imports and tonnage, during the year 1821, amounted to $15,894,434 42.

The actual receipts in the Treasury, during the year 1821, including the loan of $5,000,000, amounted to - - - - $19,573,703 72

Viz:

Customs - - - $13,004,447 15

Public lands, exclusive of Mississippi stock - - - 1,212,966 46

Arrears of internal duties and direct tax; dividend on stock in the Bank of the United States, and other incidental receipts - - - 356,290 11

Loan authorized by act of the 3d March, 1821, including a premium of $264,703 70, gained on the same - - - 5,000,000 00

Making, with the balances in the Treasury, on the 1st of January, 1821, of - - - 1,198,461 21

An aggregate of - - - - 20,772,161 93

The expenditures during the year 1821, amounted to - - - 19,090,572 69

Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous - $2,241,871 54

Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian department, Revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to the 1st January, 1817, - - - 5,162,364 47

Naval service, including the gradual increase of the Navy - 3,319,243 06

Public debt - - - 8,367,093 62

Leaving a balance in the Treasury, on the 1st of January, 1822, of - 1 681,592 24

The actual receipts in the Treasury, during the three first quarters of the year 1822, are estimated to have amounted to $14,745,408 75.

Viz:

Customs - - - $12,648,933 15

Public lands, exclusive of Mississippi stock - - - 1,298,484 56

Arrears of internal duties and direct tax, dividend on stock in the bank, and other incidental receipts - - 391,871 76

Balances of appropriations for the War and Navy Departments, returned to the Treasury, and carried to the surplus fund - 406,119 28

The actual receipts into the Treasury, during the 4th quarter, are estimated at - 5,000,000 00

Making the total estimated receipts into the Treasury during the year 1822 - - - 19,745,408 75

H. OF R.

State of the Finances.

DECEMBER, 1822.

And with the balance in the Treasury, on the 1st of January, 1822, forming an aggregate of - - 21,427,000 99

The expenditures during the three first quarters of the year 1822, are estimated to have amounted to $12,278,653 32.

Viz:

Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous - $1,536,434 24

Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian department, Revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to 1st January, 1817, - - - 4,930,210 56

Naval service, including the gradual increase of the Navy 1,538,952 00

Public debt - - - 4,273,056 52

Expenditures during the fourth quarter, including the redemption of the $2,500,000 of six per cent. stock of 1820, are estimated at - - - 6,000,000 00

Making the total estimated expenditure of the year 1822 - - - 18,278,653 32

And leaving in the Treasury, on the 1st of January, 1823, an estimated balance of - - - $3,148,347 67

After deducting from this sum certain balances of appropriation, amounting to $1,232,212 11, which are necessary to effect the objects for which they were severally made, or have been deducted from the estimates, for the service of the ensuing year, a balance of $1,916,135 56 remains; which, with the receipts into the Treasury during the year 1823, constitutes the means for defraying the current service of that year.

2. Of the public debt.

The funded debt which was contracted before the year 1812, and which was unredeemed on the 1st day of October, 1821, amounted to $17,833,746 84

And that which was contracted subsequently to the 1st of January, 1812, and was unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1821, amounted to 75,852,458 18

Making the total amount of funded debt, unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1821, - - - 93,686,205 02

In the fourth quarter of that year there was issued Treasury note six per cent. stock to the amount of - - - 390 40

Making an aggregate of - - - 93,686,595 42

In the same quarter there was paid the sum of $262,738 75.

Viz:

Reimbursements of six per cent. deferred stock - - $257,180 60

Redemption of Louisiana stock - - 5,558 15

262,738 75

Reducing the funded debt, on the 1st of January, 1822, to - - - 93,423,856 67

From that day to the 1st of October last, there was issued three per cent. stock to the amount of - - - 143 02

Making an aggregate of - - - 93,423,999 69

During the same period there was paid the sum of $380,980 02.

Viz:

Reimbursement of six per cent. deferred stock - - $300,980 02

Redemption of six per cent. stock of 1796 80,000 00

380,980 02

Reducing the funded debt, on the 1st of October, 1822, to - - - 93,043,019 67

It is estimated that, in the fourth quarter of the present year there will be paid $2,265,588 07.

Viz:

Reimbursement of six per cent. deferred stock - - $265,588 07

Redemption of six per cent. stock of 1820 2,000,000 00

2,265,588 07

Which will reduce the funded debt, unredeemed on the 1st of January, 1823, to - - - 90,777,431 60

The amount of Treasury notes outstanding on the 1st of October, 1822, is estimated at - - - 27,437 00

And the amount of Mississippi stock, unredeemed on that day at - - - 26,735 94

3. Of the Estimate of the Public Revenue and Expenditure for the year 1823.

The gross amount of duties on imports and tonnage which accrued from the 1st of January to the 30th of September last, (both days included,) is estimated at $19,500,000, and that of the whole year at $23,000,000.

It is estimated that the amount of debentures issued during the same period exceeds the amount issued during the corresponding period of the year 1821, by $86,000; and that the amount of debentures outstanding on the 30th of September last, chargeable upon the revenue of 1823, is $234,000, more than was on the same day in 1821 chargeable upon the revenue of 1822.

It is estimated that the value of domestic articles exported from the United States in the year ending on the 30th of September last, has amounted to $49,874,079, and that foreign articles exported during the same period have amounted to $22,286,202.

As the receipts from the customs in the year 1823 depend—first, upon the amount of duty bonds which become due within that year, after deducting the expenses of collection, and the amount of debentures chargeable upon them; and, second, upon such portion of the duties secured in the first and second quarters of that year as are payable within the year; it is manifest that an increase in the amount of debentures chargeable upon the revenue of the year 1823, or a diminution of the importations of foreign merchandise during the two first quarters of that year, must necessarily diminish the receipts into the Treasury. As debentures can be issued at any time within twelve months after importation, chargeable upon bonds given for the duties upon such importation, it is impossible to foresee the amount which may be chargeable upon the bonds that are payable during the year 1823. The facts, however, which have been stated, justify the conclusion that the amount of debentures which will be issued and charged upon the revenue of 1823, will considerably exceed the amount which was chargeable upon that of 1822. From the same facts, it is also presumed that the importations of the two first quarters of the year 1823 will be less than the corresponding quarters of the present year.

DECEMBER, 1822.

State of the Finances.

H. OF R.

Giving due weight to all the facts connected with the subject, the receipts for the year 1823 may be estimated at - - - - $21,100,000 00

Viz:

Customs - -	$19,000,000 00
Public lands - -	1,600,000 00
Bank dividends - -	350,000 00
Arrears of internal duties and direct tax, and incidental receipts - - -	150,000 00

To which is to be added the sum of - 1,916,135 56

Remaining in the Treasury, after satisfying the balances of appropriations chargeable upon the revenue of 1822, which makes the entire means of the year 1823, the amount of - $23,016,136 56

The expenditure of the year 1823 is estimated at - - - - 15,059,597 22

Viz:

Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous -	$1,599,317 35
Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian department, revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to the 1st of January, 1817 - - -	5,134,292 75
Naval service, including the gradual increase of the Navy -	2,723,987 12
Public debt - -	5,602,000 00

Which, being deducted from the above sum, will leave in the Treasury, on the 1st day of January, 1824, after satisfying the current demands of the year 1823, a sum estimated at - $7,956,538 34

Although the facts already disclosed justify the conclusion that the importations of the present year exceed the value of domestic articles exported during the year, yet there are no means of ascertaining the extent of that excess. If the custom-house documents were to be considered conclusive evidence upon this subject, it would be apparent that the nation has, through the whole period of its existence, imported more in value than it has exported. But the fact is incontestable that the United States have enjoyed a more uninterrupted prosperity, and have increased their capital to a greater relative extent, than any of the nations with whom they have maintained commercial intercourse.

To show that the custom-house documents cannot be considered conclusive evidence in this case, it is proper to observe—first, that the value of articles paying duties ad valorem, imported into the United States, is ascertained by adding to the invoice value 20 per cent. if from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and 10 per cent. from all other places; whilst the value of all other articles exported is ascertained at the port of shipment without any such addition; second, the greatest portion of the importations and exportations are made in vessels of the United States; third, the capital employed in the trade of the Northwest coast and the Pacific ocean consists almost exclusively of the labor and enterprise of those engaged in it. Foreign articles, the proceeds of those enterprises, imported into the United States, are therefore only equivalent to the labor and enterprise by which they were procured. Fourth, the value of domestic articles exported is more imperfectly ascertained than of foreign articles imported; because it has not been considered necessary to resort to the same sanctions to enforce a compliance with the regulations which have been prescribed for that purpose. To ascertain the relative value of imports and exports, it is necessary, first, that the same additions should be made to the invoice value of the latter as are required by law to be made to the former; second, the freight of domestic articles exported in American vessels should be added to their value, after deducting from it the freight of foreign articles imported in foreign vessels; third, the value of foreign articles imported in vessels engaged in the trade of the Northwest coast and Pacific ocean, the proceeds of the labor and enterprise of those by whom they are navigated, should be added to the domestic exports; fourth, it is impossible to ascertain what addition should be made to the value of the domestic exports on account of the omission of the exporters to state correctly the value of articles exported by them; but, after making a liberal allowance for foreign articles illicitly introduced, or inaccurately invoiced, it is believed that a considerable addition should be made.

If, then, to the amount of domestic articles exported during the year ending on the 30th of September last, already estimated at $49,874,079, the additions should be made which the preceding facts and considerations appear to authorize, the value of our domestic exports during that period may be estimated at nearly $60,000,000.

Although no calculation has been completed, showing the average rate of duty upon the value of foreign articles imported into the United States, it is presumed that an importation of $60,000,000 of foreign merchandise will not produce a less revenue than $17,000,000. As the receipts from the customs during the year 1823 have been estimated at $19,000,000, it is probable that the receipts from the same source, in 1824, which will depend upon the importations of 1823, will not exceed $15,000,000. Under the most unfavorable circumstances, it is believed that the receipts of that year will be sufficient to discharge all demands upon the Treasury which may be authorized by law.

H. OF R.

Land Titles in Louisiana.

DECEMBER, 1822.

If the current appropriations for the year 1825 shall be equal to those required by the estimates for the ensuing year, the expenditure of that year may be estimated at $28,253,597 22, viz :

Current appropriations - - -	$8,578,722 22
Permanent appropriations for arming the militia, and Indian annuities -	378,875 00
Gradual increase of the Navy - -	500,000 00
Public debt, including balances unapplied in 1823 and 1824, amounting to $18,796,000 - - -	18,796,000 00
	$28,253,597 22

The means of the Treasury to meet this extraordinary expenditure, consist—

1st. Of the balance which may be in the Treasury on the 1st of January of that year, estimated at - -	$8,000,000 00
And, 2d. Of the receipts of that year, estimated at - - -	19,000,000 00
Viz: Customs -	$17,000,000
Public Lands -	1,600,000
Bank Dividends -	350,000
Incidental Receipts -	50,000
Making together, an aggregate of -	27,000,000 00
And leaving a deficit of about -	$1,250,000 00

In this estimate the receipts and expenditures of the year 1824 are estimated to be nearly equal. It is probable, however, that the receipts may exceed, to a small extent, the expenditures; but there is at least an equal probability that the receipts for the year 1825 are estimated too high. In the year 1826, the expenditure, assuming the current appropriations to be the same as in the year 1823, may be estimated at $19,457,000, and the receipts at $19,000,000. As the appropriation of $500,000 for the gradual increase of the Navy expires in that year, the annual expenditure may, for subsequent years, be estimated at $19,000,000, unless it shall be considered expedient to make further provision for the increase of that essential means of national defence.

It is probable that the annual revenue will be equal to that sum. To provide for the estimated deficit of the years 1825 and 1826, as well as to meet any extraordinary demands upon the Treasury, which unforeseen exigencies may require, it is believed to be expedient that the revenue should be increased. This may be conveniently effected by a judicious revision of the tariff; which, while it will not prove onerous to the consumer, will simplify the labors of the officers of the revenue. At present, articles composed of wool, cotton, flax, and hemp, pay different rates of duty. Difficulties frequently occur in determining the duties to which such articles are subject. The provision in the tariff, that the duty upon articles composed of various materials shall be regulated by the material of chief value of which it is composed, is productive of frequent embarrassment and much inconvenience. It is, therefore, respectfully submitted, that all articles composed of wool, cotton, flax, hemp, or silk, or of which any of these materials is a component part, be subject to a duty of twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The duties upon glass and paper, upon iron and lead, and upon all articles composed of the two latter materials, may also be increased with a view to the augmentation of the revenue. In all these cases, except articles composed of silk, it is probable that the effect of the proposed augmentation of duties, will gradually lead to an ample supply of those articles from our domestic manufactories. It is, however, presumed, that the revenue will continue to be augmented by the proposed alterations in the tariff until the public debt shall have been redeemed; after which the public expenditure, in time of peace, will be diminished to the extent of the Sinking Fund, which is, at present, $10,000,000. But if, contrary to present anticipations, the proposed augmentation of duties should, before the public debt be redeemed, produce a diminution of the revenue arising from the importation of those articles, a corresponding, if not a greater, augmentation may be confidently expected upon other articles imported into the United States. This supposition rests upon the two-fold conviction, that foreign articles, nearly equal to the value of the domestic exports, will be imported and consumed; and that the substitution of particular classes of domestic articles for those of foreign nations not only does not necessarily diminish the value of domestic exports, but usually tends to increase that value.

The duties upon various other articles, not in any degree connected with our domestic industry, may, likewise, be increased with a view to the augmentation of the public revenue. If the existing tariff shall, during the present session of Congress, be judiciously revised for the purpose of augmenting the revenue, it is confidently believed that it will not only be amply sufficient to defray all the demands upon the Treasury at present authorized by law, but that there will remain an annual surplus, subject to such disposition, for the promotion of the public welfare, as the wisdom of Congress may direct.

Under the act of the 20th April last, authorizing the exchange of certain portions of the public debt for five per cent. stock, $56,704 77 only have been exchanged. The increased demand for capital, for the prosecution of commercial enterprises during the present year, and the rise in the rate of interest, consequent upon that demand, which were not anticipated at the time that the measure was proposed, have prevented its execution. Existing circumstances do not authorize the conclusion, that a measure of this nature will be more successful during the next year. If the price of the public debt, in 1825, should be as high as it is at present, any portion of it, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government, which should be unredeemed in that and subsequent years, after the application of the Sinking Fund to that object, may be advantageously exchanged for stock redeemable at such periods as to give full operation to the Sinking Fund. This may be effected, either directly by an exchange of stock, or indirectly by authorizing a loan to the amount of stock annually redeemable beyond the amount of the Sinking Fund applicable to that object. All which is submitted.

WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 23, 1822.

LOUISIANA LAND TITLES.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill for examining the titles to land in Louisiana, between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river.

4 DECEMBER, 1822.

Aid to the Greeks.

H. OF R.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, moved to amend the bill, so as to recognise the validity of the titles of all persons who had made actual settlements prior to the Treaty of 1819, with Spain, so far as to take a registry of their claim, &c.

This amendment Mr. J. supported with much earnestness and feeling, arising out of the present situation of those settlers, who are now liable to removal by force, as intruders on the public lands, without having any other ground to which they can safely retire, &c.

After a few observations from Mr. RANKIN, the question was taken on Mr. JOHNSTON's motion, and decided in the negative.

Mr. JOHNSTON then moved to amend the bill by adding thereto the following as a new section:

"And that every person claiming a preference in becoming a purchaser of a tract of land, in virtue of this act, shall make known his claim by delivering a notice, in writing, to the register of the land office for the district in which the land may lie, wherein he shall particularly designate the tract of land he claims; which notice the register shall file in his office, on receiving twenty-five cents from the person delivering the same; and, in every case where it shall appear to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the public moneys of the land office, that any person who has delivered his notice of claim is entitled, according to the provisions of this act, to a preference in becoming the purchaser of three hundred and twenty acres of land; such person, so entitled, shall have a right to enter the same with the register of the land office at the minimum price, on producing a receipt from the receiver of public moneys, for the amount of the purchase moneys, as in case of other public lands sold at private sale: Provided, That all lands to be sold under this act, shall be entered with the register, at least two weeks before the time of the commencement of the public sales in the district wherein the land lies; and every person having a right of preference in becoming the purchaser of a tract of land, who shall fail to make his entry with the register, within the time prescribed, his right shall be forfeited.

And the question being taken on agreeing to this amendment, it was decided in the negative.

The Committee then rose and reported the bill.

On the question to order the bill to be engrossed for a third reading—

Mr. JOHNSTON said, having failed in his proposition to amend the bill, he felt now no anxiety respecting its passage, as it contained no provisions of material interest to the people whom he represented. He was at a loss what course to take in regard to it, having been so greatly disappointed in not obtaining the consent of the House to the reasonable amendments which he had proposed. Under these circumstances, he moved that, for the present, the bill do lie on the table.

The bill was, accordingly, ordered to lie on the table.

AID TO THE GREEKS.

Mr. DWIGHT said he was requested to present the memorial of William Thornton, Walter Jones, and one hundred and fifty other respectable citizens of the District of Columbia, in behalf of the Greeks. Whatever doubts this House might entertain in regard to the specific appropriation prayed for by the memorial in behalf of this interesting and unfortunate people—doubts which he felt himself constrained to say he entertained not less sparingly than any gentleman upon the floor; he felt assured that they would all concur in the opinion that the sentiments of the memorialists were not less honorable to them than accordant to the spirit of this nation. Indeed, he was quite sure he did not exaggerate when he asserted that there was a sympathy, deep and universal, throughout the country, in behalf of this oppressed and injured nation. The memorialists, in reply to the charge of enthusiasm in relation to a remote and feeble people struggling for liberty against the power of the Ottoman Empire, would have a right to call upon the House to recollect that not half a century had elapsed since a less numerous, though more enlightened people, had successfully made war upon the most powerful nation on earth; and that, too, for evils which, compared to the massacre of Chios and the tyranny of those inhuman masters, were easily to be borne. Nor, sir, will the House need to be reminded that not half a dozen years have elapsed since the intrepid and eloquent advocate of South American independence, stood in a small minority upon this floor, and upon a question, too, which, at the last session, was carried in this House by acclamation. Indeed, but yesterday we were told that the recognition of South American independence was no longer opposed by the British Government, because it can no longer be resisted. Regard to the just interests of our own country, perhaps, ought to prevent our making the appropriation prayed for; but no considerations of delicacy or propriety could deter the memorialists from the expressions of feeling in behalf of the Greeks against a nation with whom we have never had negotiation, or truce, or treaty. The House would view, with an interest proportioned to the importance of the question, that should Liberty be now unable to maintain herself in Greece, the country of her earliest temples and longest worship, she would cease to have a footing on either of three continents, or an existence in the governments of six hundred millions of people. He did not mean, by the remarks he had made, to commit himself to any ulterior measures upon the subject; but he thought it his duty not to refuse an application from so respectable a source, and particularly from a portion of our citizens who are unrepresented upon this floor. For the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the House as to the destination of the memorial, he would now move that it be read, and he hoped that some gentleman of more experience than himself would move for it such reference as the House might think proper to give it.

[The memorial which Mr. D. here presented is signed by one hundred and thirty-eight citizens of Washington and Georgetown, praying of Congress "to appropriate two or three millions, in provisions, and whatever may be necessary to the Greeks, as an easy and honorable mode of acknowledging the aid, bounty, and obligation received from France in like circumstances."]

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1822.

The memorial was read; when

Mr. WRIGHT said he trusted this House was not prepared to commit the peace of this nation, by interfering, in any manner, in the contests of Europe. We all sympathize with every people struggling for their liberty, and wish them success in the establishment of the rights of man, by their independent self-governments. By our Constitution, said Mr. W., every man has a right to petition for a redress of his grievances; but this petition is from a number of philanthropists petitioning for others, not within the purview of the Constitution. That the Chief Magistrate, the Senate, and the House of Representatives, feel all the sympathies for the Greeks that their situation is calculated to impress, there can be no doubt. Whatever measures shall be thought proper by the Government, will, no doubt, be adopted. The Executive is as well informed as the memorialists of the situation of the Greeks; and, Mr. W. said, he had no doubt that every department of the Government, in which the people have reposed their confidence, will do its duty; but he hoped they would not be led astray by any feelings of philanthropy, in any measure inconsistent with the public interest committed to their care. We have seen, with great pain, Mr. W. said, the bloody contests that have desolated the regions of the other hemisphere, and we have rejoiced at every success of the Grecian arms; and he had no doubt, that, whenever they shall establish the fact that they are independent, we shall promptly, and with pleasure, acknowledge it, as we did in the case of the Governments of South America, in our own hemisphere. There, said Mr. W., the finest feelings of our nature were justly kept in check by the wisdom and equanimity of the Chief Magistrate, till the happy epoch when it was thought proper by him it should be declared. And could any man look back upon that scene, and not admire the wisdom and paternal care of the Chief Magistrate? We know his feelings towards the Greeks, by his message at the opening of the session, are surpassed by those of none of us, nay, even of the petitioners. He, with all the information necessary to the perfect understanding of our foreign relations, has an eye to the best interests of our country; and the case of South America inspires the confidence of the American people, that their peace and happiness will continue to govern his Administration. The bloody contests that disturb the repose of revolutionized Spain and Portugal, under the impious influence of the priests, Mr. W. said, elicit our execrations against those bloody pontiffs who seem prepared to sacrifice every friend to civil liberty on the altars of persecution; and, indeed, the recent evidence of the conduct of Ferdinand, induced fears that he and these priests had confederated in the restoration of their former Government.

Mr. DWIGHT said, it was a respect due from him to the subject, and to the personal characters of the petitioners, to move to refer the memorial to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. RHEA called for the reading of the passage of the Message of the President of the United States which refers to the cause of the Greeks. He then expressed his opinion that a neutral position was the best for the United States, however we might wish success to the cause of the Greeks. This was the sentiment, also, emphatically of the President of the United States, who had expressly limited the extent to which we should go, both with regard to our own duty to ourselves and foreign nations, and also to the rights of other nations. This memorial, Mr. R. said, called upon this House to go beyond that point, and to place itself in conflict with the Executive on this subject. To this course, Mr. R. said, he was not disposed to give countenance by referring this petition to the Committee of Foreign Relations.

Mr. DWIGHT then rose, and said he was induced by the suggestions of some gentlemen, for whose opinions he had the highest respect, to withdraw his motion for referring the memorial to the Committee of Foreign Relations, and moving to lay it on the table.

The memorial was accordingly ordered to lie on the table. And the House adjourned to Friday.

FRIDAY, December 27.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUTTS, informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased," in which they ask the concurrence of this House.

Mr. McLANE, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel H. Walley, and Henry G. Foster," made a detailed report, recommending that the said bill be rejected. The bill was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE reported, without amendment, the bill from the Senate for the relief of Jacob Babbitt. On the proper mode of disposing of this bill, (which proposes to remit the interest on certain duties payable on goods destroyed by the violent storm at Providence, in the year 1815,) there arose some debate. Mr. COCKE and Mr. WALWORTH wished it referred to a Committee of the Whole. Mr. McLANE wished it to go at once to a third reading; which course he supported by an argument showing the equity of the bill. Mr. DUFFEE seconded the motion of Mr. McLANE, by a number of remarks, showing the reasonableness of the bill, and its conformity to the general principles of our revenue laws. Mr. TOMLINSON wished it to go to a committee for discussion of the bill, which contained a new principle, never recognised as a general rule, and but once even as exception to the general rule, (in the case of the remission of duties on foreign goods destroyed by the fire at Savannah.) In the end, the bill was, on motion of Mr. COCKE, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill supplementary to the acts to provide for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States in the Revolutionary war; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Revolutionary Canadian Refugees.

H. OF R.

On motion of Mr. McLANE, it was ordered that the Speaker do appoint a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, in the place of Mr. SMITH, who is elected to the Senate, and Mr. INGHAM was appointed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the officers of the army a salary, or stated sum of money, per year, instead of pay and emoluments, as now allowed by law.

On motion of Mr. SIBLEY, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to locate, in tracts of not less than two entire sections each, in any part of the Territory of Michigan, where the public lands shall have been surveyed, a quantity of land equal to one entire township of six miles square, which was reserved and granted to the Territory of Michigan, for the use of a seminary of learning, by the act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1804; and that said committee do also inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for the leasing of said lands, when located, as well as the lands reserved in each township in said Territory for the use of schools; and the protection of the same against waste and injury, by trespass, or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. McCoy, the Committee of Claims were instructed to report a bill in addition to the act for the prompt settlement of public accounts, and for the punishment of the crime of perjury.

[Mr. McCoy stated his object to be, to get before the House again a bill which was before Congress at a former session, but was not acted upon for want of time.]

The bill from the Senate for the relief of the legal representatives of Alexander Montgomery, deceased, was twice read and committed.

Mr. NELSON, of Maryland, presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland:

BY THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES,
December 13, 1822.

Whereas, the great National Road leading from Cumberland to Wheeling, which is of such incalculable advantage in facilitating the intercourse between the Atlantic and Western States, and which was constructed at a great expense, has already suffered from the want of that regular superintendence, and of those repairs, which are necessary to the preservation of such a work; Therefore

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Senators and Representatives of this State, in Congress, be requested to use their best exertions to procure the immediate passage of a law, by Congress, making a sufficient appropriation to repair the great National Road leading from Cumberland to Wheeling.

Resolved, That the Governor be, and he is hereby, requested to cause a copy of this resolution to be transmitted to each of the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress. By order:

JOHN BREWER, Clerk.

The resolutions were read and referred to the committee to whom the subject is referred.

REVOLUTIONARY CANADIAN REFUGEES.

Mr. WALWORTH submitted for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reviving and continuing in force, for a further time, the acts of the 7th of April, 1798, and of the 24th of February, 1810, which provide for the relief of the refugees from the British Provinces of Canada and Nova Scotia, agreeably to the resolutions of Congress, of the 22d of April, 1783, and the 13th of April, 1785.

Some opposition appearing to this resolution—

Mr. WALWORTH stated the object of it. In the year 1783, the Old Congress, by resolution, promised to make provision for those persons who were obliged to take refuge in the United States during the war of the Revolution. In 1785, this pledge was renewed in the same manner. Nothing was done towards the redemption of these pledges, until the year 1798, when a law passed for their relief, the duration of which was limited to two years. In consequence of the shortness of the limitation, a great many of those who were entitled to relief did not obtain it. In 1810, the law was revived for another short term of time, and then suffered to expire, before some of these persons had ascertained that such a law had ever passed. He wished this law to be now revived, that three or four of his constituents, who had no knowledge of the law whilst it was in force, might now obtain the benefit of it. Mr. W. said, he could not see any just reason why the United States should establish a statute of limitations in bar of equitable claims against the Government. He himself knew one person who was driven from his home during the Revolution, and sacrificed an immense property, who was now in his seventieth year, pining in want. It was for the relief of such objects as this that he wanted the bill passed.

Mr. BASSETT suggested that, if the cases were so few it would be much better to act upon them individually, instead of passing any general law upon the subject. He was not an advocate for an act of limitation further than it was necessary to guard the Government against impositions, but limitation to claims seemed in that point of view to be necessary.

Mr. WALWORTH said, he could not undertake to say how many cases there were in other parts of the United States. It was not on the individual cases that he relied for the ground of his motion, but it was the principle of the case that he spoke of. Whether there were one, two, twenty, or two hundred cases, it was the duty of the Government to provide for them. This law would moreover, grant nothing to the claimants, but merely authorize them to bring forward their claims for Congress to pass upon.

Mr. VANCE said, the land set apart for the location of land warrants in the case of the Canadian refugees, was within the limits of the State of Ohio, and, as soon as the warrants were located

H. OF R.

Charges against Judge Tait.

DECEMBER, 1822.

under the former law, the Government had ordered the whole of the remainder of the land to be surveyed and sold. The titles to the lands thus sold, and now highly improved, ought not to be disturbed, or in any manner affected by reviving the obsolete law which set apart that land for a particular purpose.

The question was then taken on agreeing to Mr. WALWORTH's resolution, and decided in the negative—59 to 45.

On motion of Mr. STBLEY, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a new land district in the Territory of Michigan, to embrace the lands lying in the Saguna county of Lake Huron, to which the Indian title has been extinguished.

CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE TAIT.

THE SPEAKER laid before the House a letter, addressed to him by Edwin Lewis, of the State of Alabama, preferring charges of improper, corrupt, and extra-judicial conduct, against Charles Tait, Judge of the District Court of the United States for the district of Alabama, and soliciting an inquiry, by this House, into the correctness of said charges; which letter was read, as follows:

MOBILE, Nov. 26, 1811.

To the Honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

SIR: I enclose several charges against Judge Tait, which I wish you to lay before Congress, together with the enclosed documents. If Judge Tait is sustained in his tyrannical conduct towards me as an American citizen, and in his mock proceedings in the African slave cases, I shall no longer boast of being a free citizen of a free country; and I believe, from a fair, impartial view of the proceedings in the case of the United States vs. English, for importing slaves contrary to the laws of Congress, as well as in the cases of three vessels captured with African slaves, that no one will likely again attempt to prosecute, under the laws of the United States, made with a view to prohibit the slave trade; as the parties who have heretofore approached the court have had no success, but have been subject to every obstacle, vexation, delay, and disgusting mockery. And the secret reason that Judge Tait refused me to be sworn in as an attorney was, no doubt, owing to my having expressed opinions opposed to the proceedings of the Attorney for the United States. In fact, sir, what apology is there for all this delay, when the records prove, by the very claims of the parties filed, that the most aggravated cases of violations had actually been committed? Do not the claimants, Messrs. _____ of Havana, whose names are made use of,* assert that they did ship, in and upon the American schooner Constitution, eighty-four African slaves, &c.? Is not this, sir, equal to a plea of guilty of the facts alleged? Why postpone the case at all, in the first instance? And why now stay the execution on the judgment, and order of condemnation on bonds, for $150, in each case? The appeal to the Supreme Court was not carried up to the last term. Whether it will be carried up to next term, or ever, is a very doubtful case with me. Thus, we see property, worth more than $100,000 at the time of capture, yet unsettled, and a great part of it totally lost. And, in the prosecution of English, the proof was most positive. But what can justify the keeping the witnesses tending court, riding hundreds of miles, court after court, at the expense of Government? Why not discharge the witnesses? I acknowledge the insulding indignity offered to me by Judge Tait is irreconcilable to my feelings, and highly aggravated, when I am so well convinced it was to favor the importers of slaves, in violation of the laws of Congress, as I defy Judge Tait, and all the world, to bring any charge against me to be tried by a tribunal that would disqualify me. This, Judge Tait was well aware of, or he would never have ventured this act of tyranny at the hazard of his reputation, if any other means had existed. I will add, sir, that, if Judge Tait is to be sustained in this conduct, I have no hesitation in asking, what avail are all the laws of Congress against the slave trade, without an efficient judiciary, without a judge, and officers of the court, who will execute the laws? With great regard, &c., your very obedient servant,

E. LEWIS.

The letter having been read—

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, said he was willing that there should be some investigation into this matter. It was due to the individual charged, and to the person making the charges, that there should be an investigation. He moved, therefore, that the communication and accompanying documents should be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKE, of Tennessee, said, he had no objection whatever to the reference of these papers to the Committee on the Judiciary, but the motion to print the documents, without any accusation being framed in this House against the judge, Mr. C. thought was going beyond the line of strict duty. If the committee should be of opinion that there was just ground of accusation against Judge Tait, then the papers might be printed; but until that was done, he should think it was doing great injustice to Judge Tait to print documents, the printing of which might have the effect to blast his reputation, as seeming to suppose that the charges of this individual against him were well founded.

Mr. SANDERS, of North Carolina, said he had been a member of the committee at the last session, to whom a communication, of similar import to this, had been referred, and a general impression prevailed that the writer must be a madman. Those who examined the papers were entirely satisfied that no injustice had been done to this man. If the gentleman from Alabama considered these papers entitled to any credit, it would be his duty to have a select committee raised to examine them. Mr. S. was confident the Committee on the Judiciary would not look into them, because, as far as it did look into the similar papers at the last session, the committee was satisfied they were not worth its notice.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, said, if he did vote for the reference of these papers, it would be with the most perfect conviction, on his mind, that the inquiry would result in the clear acquittal of the judge who is accused. The gentleman

* The slaves actually belonged to American citizens, several of whom I could name.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Charges against Judge Tait.

H. OF R.

who had thought proper to bring forward these charges, was no stranger to many members of this House; and the gentleman who last spoke had informed the House that some members of the Judiciary Committee, at the last session, believed him to be insane. He believed the whole history of that person's life was such as in some degree to justify this impression, and it was high time that Congress should cease to be harassed by him. He was totally opposed to printing the documents in this or any case presented to the House, before they had passed under the review of a committee. Suppose these accusations should turn out, as he had no doubt they would turn out, to be frivolous and unworthy of the consideration of the House; would it not be a subject of regret, that so much importance had been given to these papers as to print them?

Mr. MOORE assured the House that he was far from desiring to take any course which should blast the reputation of Judge Tait, as the gentleman from Tennessee himself. He did not suppose such would be the effect of printing the papers. Mr. M. said he was not like the gentleman from North Carolina, who seemed to have prejudged this case, and to be acquainted with the petitioner. Mr. M. had never seen the man, though he had heard of him; but, as to the petitioner's integrity, he thought the gentleman had prejudged the case. He knew nothing which should prevent him from being heard when preferring charges in an attitude so imposing as these. The letter contained some evidence of more importance than mere hearsay. It referred to documents taken from the records of a court. It certainly could not blast the reputation of an individual to print what was matter of record in a court. This man was entitled to be heard, he thought; but, to accommodate the gentlemen, he withdrew that part of his motion which related to printing the papers, and varied his motion so as to read as follows:

“Resolved, That the communication and accompanying documents of E. Lewis, Esq., impeaching the official conduct of Charles Tait, one of the judges of the United States court for the district of Alabama, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and that they be instructed to inquire into the propriety of the official conduct of the said Charles Tait, and report the result of their inquiry.”

Mr. WILLIAMS said he had avowed, when up before, that he was not opposed to the reference of this memorial, &c. This declaration might have assured the gentleman from Alabama that he was not disposed to prejudge the case. Nor, Mr. W. said, did he pretend to any acquaintance with the person who had forwarded this memorial. It was his character, and not his person, he said, that was known to many members of this House; and how known? Some six or eight years ago, it would be recollected by many members, this Mr. Lewis sent forward, more than once, some very grave charges to this House, against Judge Toulmin, who was then one of the judges of the United States for the Territory of Alabama. The House at length took them up, and appointed a committee to investigate them. The committee, having done so, reported the charges to be frivolous and unfounded. The gentleman from Alabama himself recollects that, at the last session, the same individual preferred charges against Judge Tait, and we are now assured, by a member of that committee, that it was believed by some of them, after examining them, that the man was not in his right senses. But, notwithstanding all this acquaintance with the memorialist, Mr. W. was willing his charges should be investigated. But, how long, said he, are we to be troubled in this way? I suppose, if he sends us on frivolous charges against the judges for ninety and nine times, we are patiently to hear him the hundredth time, even though, as now, he intimates he has no new matter to present to the House. It was due to the character of the House that a stop should be put to such proceedings, and he hoped, after this investigation, to hear no more of this person's charges, &c.

Mr. WRIGHT said he had a perfect recollection of the case of Judge Toulmin, against whom charges were preferred by this Mr. Lewis; and the committee which investigated that subject found the conduct of the judge to have been perfectly unexceptionable. Members who represented States on this floor, Mr. W. said, ought to be very cautious how they brought matters of this sort into the House, and ought not to do it but upon their own belief in the truth of the accusations. He recollected, at the last session, the Speaker and other members having received letters from madmen, complaining of supposed grievances, &c.—and in the course of his experience, every member of Congress will recollect such cases. If there has been any thing wrong in the judicial decisions of Judge Tait, they are subject to revision in a higher tribunal, and can there be set aside or corrected. This was a case of every day's occurrence, without any imputation being cast on the court below for its decision, &c. The House would have nothing else to do, if it were to undertake the duty of the higher courts in this respect, &c.

Mr. CONDIOT moved to amend the resolution by striking out all that part of it which is in italic, so as to leave the subject free of instructions to the committee.

Mr. SANDERS said, after what had passed, he should consider it the duty of the Committee on the Judiciary to examine into the subject, and make full report upon it, however frivolous he himself might have considered the accusation.

Mr. ROSS, of Ohio, said it was the right of every citizen to petition this House, when he feels himself aggrieved by the conduct of any public officer, and to have that conduct examined into. If any one department of the Government ought to be more especially pure than another, it was certainly the Judiciary. It was due not only to the accuser, but to the accused, that this reference should be made. There was no evidence before the House, that this man was of such a character that his statements were not worthy of attention. What, Mr. R. asked, do the people send us here for? Why is this House invested with such important inquisitorial powers, if it be not that it may examine into any alleged or reported abuses of the Government? Mr. R. was opposed to the amendment proposed; he wished the committee to have all the power, all the instruction, which the resolution will give them, if passed as it now stands.

Mr. MOORE expressed his deference for the years and information of the gentleman from Maryland; but, so far as the gentleman seemed to suppose that he had brought forward the memorial, he would remark, if censure was due for its being brought before the House, he (Mr. M.) was free from it, and the gentleman should have addressed himself elsewhere. [Mr. WRIGHT explained; he thought that Mr. MOORE, and not the SPEAKER, had presented the memorial.] Mr. M. said he had not imputed to the gentleman from North Carolina the having prejudged the case, but the character of the individual who had forwarded it to the Speaker. So far as the official course of the judge is implicated by the documents which he has forwarded, and no farther, does Mr. Lewis wish an inquiry. Mr. M. said that he had himself heard charges made against Judge Tait, and by men of respectability—by men inferior to none on this floor in point of character, in relation to the condemnation of those slaves spoken of in the letter which had been read. This charge has been made by others than Edwin Lewis; by individuals of as good standing and character as most of us can boast of. The documents furnished by Mr. Lewis in support of the charges, whatever they may be, are taken from the records of the court, and therefore entitled to credit. The inquiry was due, he said, to the person who holds the office, to vindicate his judicial character, and it was due also to the individual who had preferred the charges against that officer.

Mr. NELSON, of Maryland, was in favor of the amendment. If the gentleman from Alabama had contented himself with moving a reference of the papers to the Committee on the Judiciary, he for one should have made no objection; for, however disposed he might be to guard the judiciary against malevolent vituperations, he was not disposed to rescue them from charges, supported, or pretended to be supported, by evidence. He thought the inquiry ought to be made. But what was proposed by the gentleman from Alabama? Was it a simple reference of the memorial, according to the usage of this House? No; but to refer it, by a resolution which, in itself, amounts to an implication upon the character of the judge, and calls upon this House in some degree to sanction the charges against him. If the gentleman from Alabama was to be understood as proposing this resolution on grounds independent of the papers presented by the memorialist, Mr. N. said he could cheerfully vote for the resolution; but, if it rested on no other foundation than this petition, he would not give to it so much importance and consideration as to consent to the adoption of a resolution which does implicate the conduct of Judge Tait. And, Mr. N. said, under what circumstances are we asked to sanction this imputation? This petition was presented to this House at the last session; the Committee on the Judiciary had it under their consideration, and they found nothing in the petition or documents to induce them formally to investigate the case. Now, Mr. N. put it to the House, and particularly to the gentleman from Alabama, whether, after having once examined the case, and the committee being satisfied that there was no reasonable ground for complaint against the judge, it was becoming in the House to lend its sanction to a resolution deliberately implicating the character of a judge? If the gentleman would consent to lay his resolution on the table, Mr. N. said he would vote for the reference of the papers; but he could not consent, and he was sure this House would not, viewing it as he did, consent to pass this resolution.

Mr. MOORE said, as far as was consistent with what he believed to be his duty, he was disposed to accommodate gentlemen, and he wished he could accommodate the gentleman from Maryland to the extent of his wish; and he assured him, that if the effect of his resolution would be to make an imputation upon the character of a judge without just ground for it, he should be glad the business would take that course which the gentleman proposed. But, Mr. M. said these papers had not been read; nor were they read at the last session; he therefore wished to have a report upon them from the Judiciary Committee. And what have we to dread, said Mr. M., if they should be required to inquire into the truth of the charges? No more injury could be done to the character of the judge by asking them to inquire into this matter, than would be done by a bare reference of the documents.

Mr. CONNER moved to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was negatived—ayes 63, noes 64.

Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia, said, if the gentleman would withdraw his resolution, and move a reference of the papers simply, there would not be a dissenting voice on the question. But, if this form of proceeding was persisted in, there would be a division on the question, when there was in truth no objection to the reference of the memorial, but to the mode of doing it.

The question on striking out the latter part of the resolution having been previously agreed to—

Mr. CONNER moved to lay the resolution, as amended, on the table; which motion was negatived—ayes 61, noes 62.

The question was then taken on agreeing to the resolution, and decided in the affirmative—ayes 71. So it was

Resolved, That the communication and accompanying documents of E. Lewis, Esq., impeaching the official conduct of Charles Tait, one of the judges of the United States court for the district of Alabama, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

After announcing the decision—

The SPEAKER rose, and said, that, in regard to these papers, whatever might be his personal feeling, he did not think that he had a right to forbear laying them before the House. He had sometimes

DECEMBER, 1822.

Cherokee and Creek Treaties.

H. OF R.

felt hesitation in laying before this House papers forwarded to him as Speaker; and in cases where the matter contained in them was obviously libellous, he had forbore. But a charge of the nature of this, though it may, as he trusted it would, turn out to be utterly libellous, might be otherwise, and the Speaker thought he had not the right to withhold the papers from the House.

The House adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 30.

Mr. FORWARD and Mr. STEWART presented petitions from sundry inhabitants of the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the aid of Congress in opening a water communication between the head waters of the rivers Potomac and Ohio.

Mr. McLANE presented a memorial and petition of the President and Directors of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company, praying for the aid of Congress to enable them to complete the objects of their undertaking; which several petitions were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. NEALE presented a petition of the levy court of the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, signed by Francis Peyton, praying that the powers of the said court may be more distinctly defined and enlarged; which petition was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. WALKER, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation adequate to the extinguishment of the reservations granted to the Creek and Cherokee tribes of Indians, by the treaties concluded on the 9th of August, 1814; on the 8th of July, 1817; and on the 29th of February, 1819.

Mr. NELSON, of Virginia, submitted the following resolution, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table one day:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House such information as may be in possession of any of the Departments, relating to the proceedings of the Board of Commissioners appointed to adjust the land titles in the Territory of Florida.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, enclosing the return of the election of DANIEL UDRE, one of the Representatives from that State; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

CHEROKEE AND CREEK TREATIES, &c.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon the joint resolutions for carrying into effect certain articles of agreement entered into between the United States and Georgia, on the 24th of April, 1802, appended to the report made by a select committee on the 7th of January last; which said resolutions are as follow:

1. Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the above treaties (between the United States and the Creek and Cherokee Indians, concluded on the 9th of August, 1814; 8th July, 1817; and 27th February, 1819,) as pretends to grant to the Indians fee simple titles to lands within the limits of Georgia, is a violation of the sovereign rights of that State.

2. Resolved, That so much of the said treaties as purports to grant to the Indians the rights of citizenship, is a violation of the rights of Congress.

3. Resolved, That the sum of — be appropriated for the purpose of holding treaties with the Creek and Cherokee Indians for the extinguishment of their title to lands within the limits of Georgia.

4. Resolved, That so much of the treaty, made the 27th of February, 1819, as directs a large portion of the public lands to be sold, and the proceeds to be vested in some public stock by the President of the United States, and to be disposed of by him for the benefit of the Cherokee Indians, does not accord with the policy of the General Government, and the power of Congress over the public property.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole proposes to strike out the three first resolutions, and in lieu thereof to insert as follows:

“Resolved, That it is expedient and proper that an appropriation be made by Congress, of a sum adequate to the extinguishment of the Indian title to the reserves embraced within certain treaties of the 9th of August, 1814; 8th July, 1817; and 27th February, 1819; with the Cherokee and Creek Indians, and that the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report an appropriation in conformity with this resolution.”

Mr. TATTNALL then, understanding that his desire to obtain an early report and full investigation of this subject would be as well answered by adopting the amendment proposed by Mr. RANKIN, when the subject was last under consideration, as by his own motion, and having also consulted his colleagues on the subject, withdrew his opposition to it, and expressed his hope that it would be agreed to.

Mr. F. JONES expressed some objection to the resolve, on the ground that it was supererogatory; a resolution embracing all reservations, in other States as well as Georgia, having passed this House.

Mr. TATTNALL rejoined, that it was the object of himself and his colleagues that the case of reservations within the limits of the State of Georgia should be separately examined and acted upon.

The resolution, moved by Mr. RANKIN, was then agreed to by the House, in the following words:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation adequate to the purchase of the reservations, made in favor of the Creek and Cherokee Indians, within the territory ceded to Georgia.

MILITIA, ARMY, AND NAVY.

The House then, on motion of Mr. CANNON, proceeded to the consideration of sundry resolutions submitted by him on the 11th instant, in the words following:

H. OF R.

Lots in Peoria Village.

DECEMBER, 1822.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide for the national defence by improving the militia of the United States.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire whether it is most expedient to improve the militia throughout the United States, by means of the Military Academy, or that of the encampment of the officers, by brigades, or otherwise, under proper regulations.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing the preference given to the cadets educated at the public expense, in the Military Academy at West Point, in entering the public service, over others of equal qualifications and merit, who are, or may be, educated at their own expense, or that of their parents or friends, at the school, under the superintendence of Captain Partridge, in the State of Vermont, or at any other place in the United States.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of employing the regular army, or a part thereof, in the erection of fortifications during a state of peace, instead of having them built by contract in the way heretofore pursued.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to make a statement to this House, containing the names and grade of the officers belonging to the Naval Establishment of the United States, and the duties each officer is performing; also, the number of officers of each different grade necessary to command in active service the vessels of war at this time belonging to the Navy.

[In calling these resolves up, Mr. CANNON disclaimed any intention to debate them, desiring, as far as he was concerned, that a silent vote should be taken on them.]

No debate arose on the resolutions, and they were decided upon as follows:

First. Carried without a division.

Second. Carried—65 to 33.

Third. Carried—70 to 38.

Fourth. Carried without a division.

Fifth. Carried without opposition.

So the whole five were agreed to.

LOTS IN PEORIA VILLAGE.

The House then, according to the order of the day, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois.

Mr. Cook explained at considerable length the merits of these claims, and the reasons which justified their confirmation.

Mr. RANKIN stated the reasons why, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, he had been opposed to reporting the bill, and why he was now opposed to its passage.

Mr. Cook rejoined, earnestly supporting the bill, on the ground of its equity, &c.

The Committee rose, and reported the bill.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading—

Mr. McCoy said that the amount of land embraced by the bill was not of much importance, (not exceeding 172 acres,) but the principle of the bill was. He was apprehensive that out of the grant of 172 acres would grow at least 172 more villages. Wherever, in any part of the West, an inhabitant sets himself down in the fork of a river to trade with the Indians, there another village will arise, and a grant of the land be asked for on the same ground. He objected further to the bill, that it was not accompanied by any written report. He moved to recommit the bill to the Committee of Public Lands, in order to obtain such a report.

Hereupon arose a debate, of length and earnestness disproportionate to the importance of the bill, in the course of which the object of the bill was opposed by Messrs. RANKIN, McCoy, Cocke, HARDIN, and COLDEN; and supported by Mr. COOK, against them all.

In the course of the debate, it appeared that the passage of the bill was asked of the House as a matter of grace, but upon principles alleged to have been recognised by repeated acts of legislation. Many of the settlers in the village of Peoria, were there as far back as the year 1776. A vote of Congress, in the year 1781, reserved from sale lands sufficient to liquidate the claims of all actual settlers within certain limits, which limits did not include the village of Peoria, but if they had included that village, would have confirmed these claims. In the year 1809, the land officers were authorized, by an act of Congress, to take cognizance of the claims, but, the war soon breaking out, the act was not carried into effect. Subsequently, another law was passed, to the same effect. So far, there had been a recognition by Congress of these settlers having an equitable claim. The ignorance of these settlers, and their remoteness from the scene of the land office business, &c., had prevented them completing their titles, which they are now likely to be prevented from doing, by the location, upon that settlement, of what is called a floating title, derived under the act for the relief of certain inhabitants of Vincennes, but which could not of right be applied to land respecting which, as in this case, prior claims were pending before Congress.

On the other hand, it was argued, that these persons at Peoria have no claim to this land, nor even any promise, either of this Government or of either of the Governments which have formerly held that country; and that liberality and charity were no proper foundation for a claim in their behalf, upon this House. Precedents, it was urged, constituted no argument in favor of these grants, and, if that argument was allowed weight, the whole land belonging to the United States would be asked and granted away. It was time to stop giving away the public lands. Besides, it was said, that the title derived to another individual, from the location of the floating title, whatever it was, ought not to be disturbed or set aside by the posterior legislation of Congress.

Mr. McCoy having withdrawn his motion for recommitment of the bill—

Mr. Cocke, to try the question of rejection,

DECEMBER, 1822.

Surgeons in the Navy.

H. OF R.

moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

When this question was finally taken, it was decided as follows:

For striking out the enacting clause - 59

Against striking it out - - - - 57

So the bill was rejected by a majority of two votes.

TUESDAY, December 31.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of the President and Directors of the Fire Insurance Company of Alexandria, praying that, in any act which may be passed by Congress for the renewal of the charter of the Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, provision may be made for the withdrawal of such stockholders as may be unwilling to continue their interests in said bank.

Mr. KENT presented a petition of Mary Wilson, praying to be divorced from Captain William Wilson, her husband, who she alleges has abandoned her for several years, and is now a freebooter in the West India seas.—Referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McLANE made a report on the petition of George B. R. Gove, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Alexander Montgomery, deceased," reported the same with amendments, and the bill was committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill for the relief of Woodson Wren.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the widowed mother of Lieutenant William Allen, a half-pay pension, made a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the mother and unmarried sister of Lieutenant William H. Allen, deceased; (allowing $150 per annum each;) which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FULLER, from the same committee, to which was recommitted the bill to incorporate the United States Naval Fraternal Association for the relief of the families of deceased officers, reported the same with amendments. The bill and amendments were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom the subject was committed, reported a joint resolution authorizing the delivery of rifles promised to Captain Aikin's volunteers at the siege of Plattsburgh; which was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The House then took up the resolve which was yesterday laid on the table, by Mr. NELSON, of Virginia, calling on the President for information as to the proceedings of the Commissioners of Land Claims in Florida, and agreed thereto.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, the report of the Committee of Claims, made on the fifth of March, 1822, on the petition of William G. and Benjamin Roberts, together with the said petition, was recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. JENNINGS, the petition of William Saltmarsh was committed to the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims, with instructions to report the facts in relation to the case of the petitioner.

On motion of Mr. MONTGOMERY, it was resolved that the claim of Nancy Armon, to be paid the amount of Loan Office certificate No. 490, submitted by resolution of Congress on the 6th day of January, 1817, to the then Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims, be now referred, with the papers accompanying the said claim, to the present Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims, and that the said committee do inquire into the expediency of paying to the said Nancy Armon the amount of the said Loan Office certificate.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report of the Secretary of War on so much of the petition of William Mahy as was referred to him; which report was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, reciting the provisions of the acts for securing to patentees their rights, said, there appeared to be a deficiency in the law in this particular: that though it allowed triple damages for the violation of the rights of a patentee, it did not allow him to recover costs in the case, so that, though gaining his cause, the patentee might in reality be a loser in the end. It appeared to him that such an alteration of the law could be devised as to allow costs in all cases in which damages are allowed. To bring this subject before the House, he moved the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing costs in all cases where damages may be recovered for the violation of the rights of patentees, under the several acts concerning the issue of patents for useful discoveries and inventions."

The resolution was agreed to.

The House then took up the bill to continue in force the provisions of law which establish the present mode of supplying the Army of the United States; and the bill was, without objection, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania, it was Resolved, by unanimous consent, That the Postmaster General be directed to communicate to this House such information as may be in his possession, showing the state and condition of the Cumberland road, and that he state whether any obstacles exist to the safe and speedy transportation of the United States Mail upon said road; and what effect they may have, if not removed, on the expenditures of the Post Office Department.

SURGEONS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, rose and said, he begged leave to introduce a resolution with regard to the surgeons' department in the Navy. His mind had been led to this subject by the state of our West India fleet. It would be recollected that some time since the Macedonian returned from her cruise with the loss of eighty men; the last accounts from the Cyane were, that she lay at Lagaira, with a dreadful mortality raging on board of her; and the situation of the Peacock was no better. He said that, at first, the mortality on board of the Macedonian was attributed to her not being properly purified after her return from the Pacific ocean. That, he believed, had been made a subject of inquiry by a naval court, and, upon investigation, it had been ascertained that every art of purification had been employed to cleanse her. He said that he had not observed that the crews of the merchant vessels employed in the West India trade had been afflicted in this way, and he could not but attribute it to some defect in the surgeons' department. He hoped that it was not so; but it was a subject worthy of the attention of the House. He considered the Navy as our proper defence—that it had not only protected our commerce, but given character to our nation—and that it was our duty to watch over it with the greatest solicitude.

Mr. MITCHELL's resolution was in the following words:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform this House, how many surgeons and surgeons' mates are on duty, and where; what are the annual receipts of each; and, where, additional pay is received for extra service, what is the nature and extent of such service.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERCOURSE WITH HAYTI.

Mr. HILL submitted for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the present state of the trade and intercourse between the United States and the Island of Hayti, and report what measures would be necessary to improve the commerce between those countries.

Mr. H. said he was aware that another branch of the Government had called for information from the President on this subject. If any were obtained by that call, this House should avail itself of the advantage of it. Be that as it might, Mr. H. said he was very desirous that the committee should now be directed to investigate this subject, for he had contemplated submitting a similar resolution at the last session, and should have done it, were it not that we then had important negotiations depending with some of the Powers of Europe. That now ceases to be the case. Hayti is one of the largest islands on the globe, and contains in some parts of it a dense population, a great share of effective labor, and possesses, within itself, the resources of an empire. He hoped therefore the resolution might be adopted.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to without debate.

PEORIA LOTS IN ILLINOIS.

On motion of Mr. COLDEX, with a view to allowing to gentlemen who wished it, an opportunity for the further consideration of the subject, the House determined to reconsider the vote by which the bill, confirming the claims to lots in the village of Peoria was rejected.

The bill being thus again brought before the House—

The debate upon its merits was resumed, at greater length than yesterday, and with increased interest.

This seems to be the proper place to notice the principal objection yesterday taken by Mr. RANKIN to the bill, overlooked in our account of the debate. It was this: that the grants were proposed to be made, in this case, not merely to settlers previous to 1783, but to settlers as far up as the year 1813, involving, in this respect, a principle never heretofore recognised by our laws.

Mr. WRIGHT supported the bill in a speech of some length, in which he maintained that the right derived from occupation is in some respects a divine right, and the right of these individuals was of such a character as Congress had almost as little right to take from them as it had to take the lands from the Indians without their consent.

Mr. VANCE quoted the ordinance of 1789, to show, as he contended, that these individuals had a right to a confirmation of their claims independent of considerations of grace, good will, or generosity.

Mr. COCKE*expressed his regret that the bill had been again brought before the House, to which he was not less opposed to-day than he was yesterday. If these people have a legal right, as now contended, to the lands on which they are settled, it is in itself an argument against the bill, and not in its favor, because making it unnecessary.

Mr. JENNINGS rose to move a recommitment of the bill to the Committee of Public Lands. He thought these people had a certain claim on the Government, but not to the extent of this bill. He was not willing to recognise the titles of settlers so far down as the year 1813.

Mr. HARDIN, of Kentucky, was in favor of the recommitment of the bill, delivering at length his reasons against the bill as it now stood, on the same grounds as were yesterday assumed against it.

Mr. WOODSON, of Kentucky, delivered his sentiments also at length in favor of this bill, and of the general policy of granting lands to the earlier settlers on the remote borders of the country, among the Indians, &c., to whose hardihood and enterprise the settlement of the fairest portion of our country is owing. He dwelt, too, on the superiority of the equitable claim of these settlers over the claim of the man, who, with a floating title, was attempting to dispossess them of their humble cabins and the little improvements which constitute their all.

Mr. RANKIN supported the recommitment of the bill, if the House was disposed to pass it. He adverted to the principle of this Government in regard to settlement rights, which had been to recognise settlement rights down to the time at which the last military post was surrendered. This time, in Illinois and Indiana, was 1783. If, then, these claims were recognised up to the year

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

1813, Congress would establish a new principle. In doing so, they would tread on dangerous ground, and the extent to which the precedent would carry them could not be foreseen, as there were claims of this description in several other of the States and Territories.

Mr. COOK next took the floor in support of the bill, and to show that this was a peculiar case, requiring peculiar legislation, owing to these men being driven from their possessions during the late war, and not having therefore had an uninterrupted possession of their lots in Peoria, though many had been there since 1776. He dwelt upon the peculiar situation of these people, poor, isolated, partly of Indian and partly of French descent, &c., and incapable of asserting their own rights.

Mr. MALLARY supported the bill on the ground of the equitable right, and even legal right, of these individuals, to a recognition of their titles, and also on the ground of the policy of the measure. In answer to the allegation that the Government legislates too freely on the subject of Western lands, &c., Mr. M. argued, that in every new country there naturally exists a perpetual source of legislation. The early settlers in it deserve our protection and our interference to see that they are protected in their equitable rights.

Mr. WALKER, of North Carolina, also was in favor of the bill on the ground of humanity, than which he knew none more worthy of being a motive for legislation, &c.

Mr. FLOYD spoke in favor of the recommitment of the bill, not so much from hostility to granting these particular lots, as from hostility to the principle on which the grant is proposed to be allowed.

Some further debate took place between Messrs. WRIGHT, VANCE, FLOYD, JENNINGS, STERLING of New York, WILLIAMS of North Carolina, RHEA, and WOOD.

The question was then taken on the recommitment of the bill, and decided in the negative—74 votes to 66.

The question was then taken on the previously pending question to strike out the enacting clause, and decided in the negative.

Mr. HARDIN moved to amend the bill so as to limit the recognition to settlements previous to the year 1783.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, delivered his opinion that this bill was not a new principle, though not conformable to the general principles of our land laws. He adverted to the grants to the Moravian Indians, &c., made under peculiar circumstances. He thought the circumstances of these Peorians such as to authorize this grant to them, at least as much as the grants to Moravians and others.

Mr. VANCE said that if the grant was limited as proposed by the amendment, it would be in vain to pass the bill, these people keeping no records, and not being able to trace their titles, &c.

Mr. COOK confirmed this view of the operation of the amendment.

Mr. HARDIN said that he had no doubt that these persons were settlers of not more than ten or twelve years standing, and it was to test that fact that he proposed this amendment. He replied to Mr. CAMPBELL, and to the arguments in favor of titles derived, or pretended to be derived, from occupation. Mr. H. contended that this bill recognised a principle which he considered as alarming.

Mr. RHEA was in favor of the amendment, considering the bill, without it, as establishing an entirely new principle. There were people enough alive, he was persuaded, who could establish by their testimony the rights of those people prior to 1783, if such rights really exist.

The proposed amendment was negatived.

And then the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and the House adjourned to Thursday.

THURSDAY, January 2, 1823.

Mr. MERCER presented a petition of Joseph Smith of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, praying to be allowed and paid the wages and prize-money due for the services of a negro slave belonging to him, who was a seaman on board the United States ship of war Wasp, in the late war with Great Britain, and lost in that vessel; which petition was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom the subject was referred by resolution, reported a bill extending the time for issuing and locating military land warrants to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary army; which was read and committed to the Committee of the Whole House to which is committed the bill to extend the time for locating Virginia military land warrants.

Mr. RANKIN, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred by resolution, reported a bill reviving the fifth section of an act of the 3d of March, 1811, giving certain pre-emption rights in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice and committed to the Committee of the Whole last mentioned.

Mr. CANNON, of Tennessee, also from the Committee on Public Lands, made an unfavorable report on the petition of the Western Missionary Society, in the State of Ohio, asking of Congress a grant of land, the better to enable them to effect the civilization of the Indians within the sphere of their operations; which report was agreed to by the House.

The resolution laid on the table on Tuesday, calling for certain information respecting the Surgeons of the Navy, was taken up; but, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, (who introduced it,) it was ordered again to lie on the table, to await some information he expected to receive on the subject, before he wished the resolve acted upon.

Mr. RANKIN submitted the following resolution, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table one day, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish this House with a statement of the several amounts which have arisen from the sales of public lands, within the States of Ohio, Indiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Alabama, and Missouri, appropriated by law for "opening roads and canals leading to said States," and the amount which has been paid or is due to each of said States, and appropriated by law for opening roads and canals "within the same."

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles, to wit: "An act for the relief of John Byers," and "An act for the relief of Alexander Humphrey and Sylvester Humphrey," in which bills they ask the concurrence of this House.

On motion of Mr. SIBLEY, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, alterations and amendments are necessary to be made in the ordinance of Congress of the 13th of July, 1787, so far as said ordinance is made applicable to the Legislative and Judicial Departments of the Territory of Michigan by the act of the 11th of January, 1805, entitled "An act to divide the Indiana Territory into two separate governments."

On motion of Mr. TATTNALL, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the necessity of an appropriation for the purpose of rendering efficient the public defences within the harbor of Savannah.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Commissioners appointed to ascertain claims and titles to land within the Territories of Florida, setting forth that, in consequence of the great sickness and mortality which prevailed at Pensacola, in West Florida, during the last autumn, they are unable to complete the duties assigned them within the time prescribed by law, and asking for further time to complete their duties; which letter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of John Byers," was read twice, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Alexander Humphrey and Sylvester Humphrey," was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

An engrossed bill entitled "An act to continue the present mode of supplying the Army of the United States," was read the third time, and passed.

An engrossed bill to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois, was read the third time, and the consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. WOODSON submitted the following resolution, with the preamble prefixed thereto, viz:

Whereas it is the duty of the Representatives of this nation to promote, to the extent of their zeal and abilities, the best interests, the highest destinies of their country; and it is believed that nothing would contribute more essentially to the accomplishment of those great objects, than internal improvement, by means of artificial roads and canals, which, when completed, would serve as a bond of union; keep the chain of our confederacy forever bright; enhance our internal and external commerce, by affording increased facilities to transportation, and a consequent reduction in the price of foreign articles; give a new impulse to industry in our customary pursuits, and multiply and present additional objects for the useful and productive employment of our citizens; increase their ability to consume, and, with the progressive value of our public domains, produce a corresponding accession to our revenue; operate as a powerful auxiliary to the full development of our dormant resources, by extending the means of internal intercourse, and exchange of the productions, raw materials, and manufactured articles of the different sections of the Union; tend to assimilate our habits, diffuse our knowledge, multiply kindred ties of the dearest nature, drawing around our hearts more closely the cords of sympathy, and national feeling; promote true economy by the most advantageous investment of the public funds, leaving eternal traces of their expenditure; adding to the strength and durability of the Government, by enabling it to concentrate, with certainty, economy, and despatch, its forces, either to chastise a daring invader, or quell misguided civil tumult; and, co-operating with a judicious system, for the arrangement and protection of the skill and industry of our own citizens, from the counteracting and destructive policy of foreign Governments, render us completely independent, prosperous, and happy:—

Therefore, resolved That it is expedient and proper that the General Government should interpose in the accomplishment, or at least render its aid in promoting the whole, or some portion, of the following great objects of internal improvement: A canal, or canals, through the Isthmus of Barnstable: That part of New Jersey, which extends from the Raritan to the Delaware: The Peninsula between the Delaware and the Chesapeake, and the tract of country which divides the Chesapeake from Albemarle Sound. Also, a canal from Lake Erie, or its waters, to the Ohio river, or some one of its tributary streams, and around the falls of Ohio; together with artificial roads, from three of the great western rivers, the Alleghany, Kenhawa, and Tennessee, to the nearest corresponding Atlantic rivers, the Susquehanna, or Juniata, James River, and either the Santee or Savannah. And that the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to report a bill, or bills, in conformity to the foregoing resolution, embracing the whole, or any portion of the specified objects, as to them may seem most expedient.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

MICHIGAN LAND TITLES, &c.

The bill "to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Michigan, passed through a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANKIN briefly explained the objects of the bill, and Mr. SIBLEY explained them more at large.

This bill provides for reviving and continuing in force the powers of the commissioners for ascertaining and deciding on claims to land in the district of Detroit, and for settling the claims to land at Green Bay and Prairie du Chien, in the Territory of Michigan, until the 1st day of November next.

In the progress of the bill, Mr. SIBLEY made a number of explanations in support of its different provisions, which he pressed upon the attention of the House with much earnestness.

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

When the bill was gone through, Mr. SIBLEY moved to amend it by adding thereto the following as a new section :

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said Commissioners shall be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into all private claims to lands lying within the said district of Detroit, not heretofore acted upon, and the same confirm or reject, according to the evidence of title that shall be introduced by said claimant, which are embraced within any of the provisions of the act, entitled 'An act supplemental to an act regulating the titles to lands in the Territory of Michigan, passed the twenty-fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and eight,' and the acts and parts of acts to which said act refers, in the same manner, and subject to the same limitations and conditions, as though the persons making such claims had exhibited their notices of claim to the register of the land office at Detroit, on or before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and nine : Provided, That no claims to lands, except such claims as have been exhibited, and made known to the Commissioners, prior to the passage of this act, shall be embraced within the provisions of this section, nor shall any claim to a tract of land be confirmed which has been already sold or granted by the United States."

This proposed amendment was, after some debate, disagreed to by a considerable majority.

The bill was then reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The next bill in the orders of the day, was that to reduce the salaries of certain officers of the Government; which bill was, on the motion of Mr. HARDIN, recommitted to the Committee on Retrenchment.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the next order of the day, which was the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of John Anderson and others; on which, after being in committee a few minutes, the Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

The House then, on motion of Mr. TRACY, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the report of a committee adverse to the petition of Charles Townsend.

[The petitioner resides in Buffalo, in the State of New York, and was appointed by the Commissioners of Claims to take testimony relative to the claims of individuals for property destroyed by the enemy on the Niagara frontier during the late war. The report denies both the legality and equity of the claim.]

A debate arose on this report, which Mr. TRACY endeavored to prevail on the House to reverse, in which he was aided by Messrs. ROSS, WRIGHT, JONES, and KIRKLAND; whilst Messrs. STERLING of New York, MCCOY, WILLIAMS of North Carolina, and BUTLER, supported the report.

The question was finally taken on striking out the word "not" in the resolution annexed to the report on the case by the Committee of Claims, and was negatived—yeas 44, nays 64.

The Committee then rose and made a report, and the House adjourned at 4 o'clock.

17th CON. 2d SESS.—16

FRIDAY, January 3.

JOSEPH M. HERNANDEZ, delegate from the Territory of Florida, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat in the House.

Mr. SIBLEY presented a petition of sundry inhabitants of the Territory of Michigan, praying that the said Territory may be admitted to the second grade of territorial government, by the establishment of a Territorial Senate and House of Representatives; which petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill for the divorcement of John Wheelwright (of this District,) and Caroline Eliza Wheelwright; which was read, and concurred in by the House.

Mr. K., from the same committee, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of Mary Wilson, (applying for a divorcement;) which was read and concurred in by the House.

Mr. K. also reported a bill to confer certain powers on the levy court in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which bill was twice read and committed.

The resolution of Mr. RANKIN, yesterday laid on the table, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information relative to the amount of proceeds of sales of public lands in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Alabama, and Missouri, appropriated for purposes of opening roads and canals leading to States, was taken up and agreed to.

The engrossed bill to revive and continue in force certain acts for the adjustment of land claims in the Territory of Michigan, was read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

Mr. CAMBRELENG offered the following resolution :

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish to this House the documents, heretofore referred to the Department of State, relating to the claim of Jacob and Henry Schieffelin, against the British Government, for property sequestered in December, 1813, together with any information he may possess, relating to the seizures and condemnations of American vessels and cargoes, happening to be, in the ordinary course of commerce, in the British ports at the commencement of the late war, referred to in the correspondence at Ghent.

This resolution, by the rules of the House, was laid on the table one day.

On motion of Mr. BARSTOW, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of modifying or repealing the laws providing for the allowance of salvage on all vessels and goods belonging to citizens of the United States, when recaptured by our public ships in time of peace.

Mr. RANKIN submitted the following resolution, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table one day, viz :

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish this House with any information he may possess, or in possession of any department of the Government, in relation to the number and locality of the salt springs, lead and copper mines, within any of the States or Territories of the United States, and which are the exclusive property of the Government; the quantity of land reserved at each; and if rented or leased, to whom they have been rented or leased; the term of time and the amount agreed on and received for such lease or leases.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be instructed to inquire into and report in what bank the contingent funds of the House have been deposited, between the 23d day of February, 1815, and the 3d day of December, 1822; the amount deposited, the periods of making the deposits, the balance, if any, still in the bank; what sums, if any, have been advanced on contracts, and when, and to whom, advances, if any, may have been made.

In offering this resolution, Mr. C. said, he considered this inquiry due to the late Clerk, and to the House. The reason of the dates he had put into the resolution was, that on the 23d February, 1815, the law passed which imperatively requires the moneys drawn for the contingent fund to be deposited in some bank, and drawn out by specific checks, and the other date was that on which the present Clerk came into office. The resolve was agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, to whom the subject was referred, by resolution, reported a bill in addition to the act, entitled "An act for the prompt settlement of public accounts," and for the punishment of the crime of perjury; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The bill is in the following words:

Be it enacted, &c., That in the settlement of accounts of persons remaining charged on the books of the Third Auditor of the Treasury with public moneys advanced prior to the 1st day of July, 1815, the proper accounting officers be, and they are hereby, authorized to admit to the credit of such persons, respectively, the amount of any expenditures made by them, which were at the time authorized by law or regulations, notwithstanding regular vouchers for the same may not be produced, if the impracticability of producing such vouchers shall be proved, to the satisfaction of the said accounting officers; and if the evidence exhibited in lieu thereof shall be the best the nature of the several cases will admit of, and such as would be received in courts of justice: Provided, nevertheless, That the credits to be allowed shall in no case exceed in amount the sums with which such persons respectively shall be charged on the books of the said Third Auditor.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever, in the settlement of the accounts before mentioned, a difference of opinion shall arise between the accounting officers, as to the extent of the credits to be allowed, under, or by virtue of, this act, such case shall be referred to the Secretary of War, whose decision shall be conclusive. And it is hereby made the duty of the said Secretary to cause to be communicated to Congress, at the commencement of each session, a statement comprising the names of the persons whose accounts shall have been settled the preceding year, agreeably to the provisions of this act, together with the amount which shall have been passed to the credit of each, under the several heads of expenditure, and, upon evidence other than such as has been prescribed by the laws and regulations existing before the passage of this act.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall swear, or affirm, falsely, touching the expenditure of public money, or in support of any claim against the United States, he or she shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer as for wilful and corrupt perjury.

Mr. W. also reported a bill for the relief of Joshua Bennet; which was twice read, and committed.

RESOLUTIONS OF MARYLAND.

Mr. KENT presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maryland:

Whereas, the State of Maryland is, in a peculiar degree, dependent on that aid and protection, to secure which, was the great object of the confederation of these United States, and especially is exposed, from its vast extent of navigable waters, and the geographical position of the city of Baltimore, to the attacks of a maritime enemy, who, as has been demonstrated by the events of the late war, can harass our citizens, plunder and destroy our property, possess themselves of our territory, and prevent our necessary transactions, as far as a large proportion of our citizens are affected: And whereas, exemption from such danger, to the lives and exposure of the fortunes of our citizens, can only be secured to us by the liberal application of those means which the good people of the United States have placed at the disposal of the Government of the Union, for the common defence and general welfare, and it is not only the soundest policy, but the best dictate of prudent economy, to use the period when a general peace and the ordinary resources of our country afford opportunity to the Government to provide for the defects in our system, which a state of war has disclosed, and to be prepared against a recurrence of injuries which may be repeated at a moment, impossible, by any political calculation, to be anticipated:

And whereas, it is, at all times, the duty of the citizens of a free government to deliberate on the policy and measures of those to whom they have confided the administration of their political concerns; and on occasions when contrariety of opinion is entertained on matters vitally affecting their best interests, to express their sentiments with candor and firmness:

We, the members of the Senate and House of Delegates, acting as the Representatives of the people of Maryland, and influenced by a belief that it is highly expedient, in the present situation of our political concerns, to announce the opinions and wishes of the people of this State, in relation to such measures of the Government of the United States, as have in view the better security of our country against the approaches of a hostile maritime force; do, therefore,

Resolve, That we cordially approve the efforts of the General Government to foster our Navy, and to cause a progressive increase of this means of defence, which experience has taught us to regard as necessary to our protection, and to the maintenance of that high and dignified character which has exalted our country amongst the nations of the earth; that we cordially approve of every effort of the General Government to extend and perfect a system of defence by fortifications, highly useful in other places, and essentially necessary to the waters of the Chesapeake and its tributary rivers.

JANUARY, 1823.

Peoria Lots in Illinois.

H. OF R.

And, whereas, from the relative position of this State, and those vast sources of successful enterprise and wealth, the rivers Potomac and Susquehanna, as well as from the relation of our largest city to an extensive district of inland country, it is of the utmost importance to our citizens that a system of internal improvement shall be vigorously pursued: Therefore, we do further

Resolve, That we will highly approve, and zealously co-operate with the General Government, in the adoption of such measures as will afford our country the facilities and advantages which nature has placed in our control, and which a wise policy should induce us to improve.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded by the Executive to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with a request that they will co-operate in the promotion of the measures which, in the sense of the Legislature, are best calculated for the interest of the Union at large, and especially of the State. By order:

WILLIAM KILTY, Clerk.

The resolutions were read, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed—not without objection, however, on the ground of the informality of the manner in which the resolves were brought before the House, being abstract resolutions, not addressed to this House.

CLAIM OF CHARLES TOWNSEND.

The House then resumed the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of Charles Townsend.

Mr. BUTLER moved the reference of the report back to the committee originating it, "with instructions to report whether the claimant has performed any service at the request and exclusively for the Government by the direction of the Commissioner of Claims;" and, on the question to agree thereto, it was determined in the negative.

After an animated discussion on the claim, in which Messrs. TRACY and WOODCOCK supported the justice of it, and Messrs. WILLIAMS and BUTLER opposed it, the question on striking from the report of the Committee of Claims the word not, as moved by Mr. TRACY, was taken, and decided in the affirmative—ayes 67, noes 55.

The question then recurring on agreeing to the resolution originally reported, as thus amended—Mr. WILLIAMS stated his objections to this course at some length, and Mr. WOODCOCK briefly replying to him—

Mr. LITTLE moved that the further consideration of it be postponed until Monday, which was agreed to—63 to 58.

PEORIA LOTS IN ILLINOIS.

The engrossed bill to confirm the title to certain lots in the village of Peoria, in Illinois, was read a third time.

On the question, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. COLDEN rose to show that, though he had moved for the reconsideration of this bill, after its rejection a few days ago, it was from courtesy to those who were in favor of the bill, and not because his own opinion on the subject had undergone any change. On the contrary, his objections to the bill were confirmed, rather than diminished. He was not among those, he said, who held that, because we have done wrong once, we must always do so. He then entered into an argument to show that the bill ought not to pass, in doing which he reviewed the arguments which were the other day advanced in favor of the bill. His objection to the bill was, in general, that the occupants of these lots have neither a title in themselves, nor an equitable claim upon the Government. Mr. C. spoke with ability and eloquence for half an hour against the bill. In the course of his remarks, illustrating the insufficiency of the plea of occupation, put in by Mr. WRIGHT, in behalf of these people, Mr. C. took occasion to say, that the Autocrat of the North carried his idea of right derived from occupancy, even further than the gentleman from Maryland. He lays a claim to thousands of miles of the Northwest coast, because a Russian sailor, some fifty years ago, thought he had seen some points of land in that direction!

Mr. FORWARD, of Pennsylvania, said, he had understood, and he wished to know how the fact was, that a part of these lots at least are embraced within the grants made to soldiers of the late war. If that was the fact, all legislation, as far as respects that portion of these lots, would be merely nugatory. If the United States have parted with their right to these lots, it was of course now beyond their reach.

Mr. RANKIN said, that the fact that these lots were covered by the survey of the military bounty lands was as suggested by the gentleman. If, however, the settlement rights, proposed to be recognised by the bill, had been limited to the time of the cession of that Territory to the United States, the rights of such claimants would have been perfect and superior, because anterior to any other. It was, therefore, that Mr. W. wished such an amendment to have been made to the bill. Further, all the lands covered by these claims had been reserved from sale; and, he presumed, had of course been reserved from grant to the soldiers. He had requested information on this subject from the General Land Office, but had not yet received it.

Mr. COOK, in an earnest and able manner, defended his bill, and replied to Mr. COLDEN. In the course of his speech, adverting to the policy of this nation in regard to grants, he alluded to the retrocession of the Battery, to the city of New York at the last session, for which he had voted, under the influence of the eloquence of the gentleman from New York, as an act of generosity.

Mr. MORGAN, of New York, replied to this last argument or illustration of Mr. COOK. The claim of the city of New York, Mr. M. said, was not an appeal to the generosity, but to the justice of the Government. New York granted that land to the United States on the express condition of its being used for a fortification for the defence of the United States. When it was no longer useful in that view, it was restored to the city of New York. The engineers of the United States having declared that the work was no longer useful for military purposes, the reason of the grant ceased, and it was the right of the city to have the land restored to it.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1823.

After a few remarks from Mr. WRIGHT in reply to Mr. COLDEN—

Mr. COOK said he had discovered, in conversation, that some gentlemen had objections to the details of this bill, which might probably be obviated by amendments to be made to it. With this view, he moved that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

And the bill was so recommitted.

MONDAY, January 6.

A new member, to wit: from South Carolina, JAMES HAMILTON, jun., elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of William Lowndes, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. VAN RENSSELAER presented a petition of sundry inhabitants of the Territory of Michigan, praying that no alteration may be made in the form of government now existing in the said Territory; which petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLANE, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making a partial appropriation for the support of Government for the year 1823, (for the compensation of members of Congress,) and the bill was twice read, and committed.

Mr. McLANE, from the same committee, made a report upon the subject of the reservations of land to the Indians, within the State of Georgia, by the treaties with the Creeks and Cherokees, accompanied by a bill "for the extinction of the Indian title to certain reserves of land within the State of Georgia."

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary, to extinguish the Indian title to all the reserves of land within the limits of the State of Georgia, reserved under the several treaties made with the Creek and Cherokee Indians, in the years 1814, 1817, 1819, and 1821, according to the true intent and meaning of the stipulation, contained in the first article of the agreement and cession, between the United States and the State of Georgia, bearing date the 24th April, A. D. 1802; and that a sum not exceeding $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for that purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was twice read, and committed.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate concerning the Education Lands in Missouri, reported it with sundry amendments; and they were referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. A. SMYTH, from the Committee on the Library, made the following report:

The Committee on the Library, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing a number of copies of Sergeant's Treatise on Constitutional Law, report, that there are already in the Library some copies of the work, and that they deem it inexpedient to increase the number, at the expense of the Library Fund: they, therefore, submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of the subject aforesaid.

On motion of Mr. NELSON, the report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. A. SMYTH, from the same committee, made a report unfavorable to the memorial of Edward De Krafft, who asks the aid of Congress to an Edition of a Selection of Public Documents; which was concurred in.

The resolution laid on the table by Mr. RANKIN, on the 3d instant, calling on the President of the United States for information in relation to the number and locality of the Salt Springs, Lead and Copper Mines, in any of the States or Territories of the United States, the exclusive property of the Government, the quantity, and the terms on which they are leased or rented out, with the amount received for the same, was taken up and agreed to.

Mr. CAMBRELENG's resolution, offered on the same day, requesting the President of the United States to furnish documents relating to the claim of Jacob and Henry Schieffelin against the British Government, for property sequestered in December, 1813, with any information in his possession, relating to the seizures and condemnations of American vessels and cargoes happening to be, in the ordinary course of commerce, in the British ports at the commencement of the late war, referred to in the correspondence at Ghent, was considered and adopted.

Mr. MCCOY submitted the following resolution, which was read, and laid on the table one day, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House the amount of all fines assessed upon citizens of the State of Virginia, for the non-performance of militia duty during the late war with Great Britain, designating the amount assessed in each county and regiment; as, also, what expense (if any) the United States have incurred in the assessment of said fines; and what amount of said fines have been collected by the marshals, and paid into the Treasury of the United States, or otherwise accounted for.

Mr. ALLEN, of Tennessee, submitted the following resolution, which was read, and laid on the table one day, to wit:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House such information as the department over which he presides affords, relative to a loan of one hundred thousand dollars, made to Scott, Thornton, and White, late city commissioners, particularly the time when, and the authority under which, said loan was made; the conditions that were to have been performed, and the accountability secured; how far the same has been complied with, and the difficulties, if any, that exist in a settlement of the transaction with the accounting officers of the Treasury.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

Mr. ALEXANDER SMYTH laid on the table the following joint resolution, viz:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of said Constitution, to wit:

No Elector of President and Vice President shall be nominated or appointed by the President elect, to any office, appointment, or place whatsoever.

When the House of Representatives shall choose a President, no person who shall have been a member at the time of making the choice, shall be nominated or appointed by the President so chosen, to any office, appointment, or place, whatsoever.

When the Senate shall choose the Vice President, no person, who shall have been a member of the Senate at the time of making the choice, shall be nominated or appointed by the Vice President, acting as President, to any office, appointment, or place, whatsoever.

Mr. DENISON submitted the following resolution, which was read, and laid on the table one day, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House the time to which the accounts of the General Post Office have been rendered to the Treasury Department; the time to which the same have been settled; and the difference, if any, which exists between contracts for transporting the mail, and the amount paid upon those contracts, specifying the cases in which such difference may be found.

On motion of Mr. STERLING, of New York, the Committee of the Whole House to which was committed the report of the Committee of Claims, in the case of Nathan Ford, were discharged from the further consideration of the same, and it was recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

Two Messages received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES on Friday last were read, and are as follows, viz:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States, of the 19th of December, 1822, requesting the President of the United States to cause to be laid before that House the several laws which have been made by the Governor and Legislative Council of Florida, together with such information as may be in the possession of the Executive, I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of State, with the accompanying documents, which contain the information desired.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3, 1823.

The Message was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the resolutions of the House of Representatives, of the 8th of January, 7th May, and 17th December, 1822, requesting the President of the United States to cause to be laid before that House a detailed statement of the current expenses of the Ordnance Department for the years 1817-'18-'19-'20, and '21; and as much as can be shown for the year 1822; and, also, the number and local position of each of the armories, arsenals, and magazines of the United States, the total expense of constructing and repairing the same up to the year 1821; the number of cannon and other arms annually made at each, and the expenses of each armory and arsenal for each year, from 1816 to 1821, inclusive; I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of War, accompanied by such documents as will be found to contain the desired information.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3, 1823.

The Message was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, which was read, and is as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 19th of December last, requesting the President of the United States to communicate to the House the progress which has been made in the execution of the act of the last session, entitled "An act to abolish the Indian Trading Establishments," with a report from the factories respectively, as the same were made to him; I transmit a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, with the documents referred to by that resolution. In further execution of the act of the last session, treaties have since been made with the Osage and Sac Indians, by which those tribes have severally relinquished to the United States their right, under preceding treaties, to the maintenance of a factory within each, respectively.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6, 1823.

The Message was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

NAVAL FRATERNAL ASSOCIATION.

The House then, on motion of Mr. FULLER, took up the bill to incorporate the United States Naval Fraternal Association.

Mr. FULLER, of Massachusetts, explained the object and effect of the two amendments proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to this bill. The one proposed to make the elections of officers, &c., take place at Washington, instead of at the several naval stations; the other, to enable Congress at any time to repeal the charter. These amendments, it was supposed, would obviate any reasonable objection which could be entertained against the bill.

The question being taken on the amendments, they were agreed to without opposition; and the question being proposed, "Shall the bill be engrossed, and read a third time?"

Mr. HARDIN, of Kentucky, rose, and said that, were it not that the bill involved some principles to which he had great dislike, he should give it a silent vote. Upon looking at the general aspect, and considering all its features, however, he considered the bill unconstitutional, and not within the powers of Congress. The bill was originally not even professedly confined to the District; and he did not believe that the amendment which had been made this morning would alter the effect of it. The Corporation was to assemble here, to be sure, to make its by-laws; but its locality was merely a color to the measure; and Congress ought not to legislate against the spirit of the Constitution, keeping just within its letter. Mr. H. went on to state his views of the powers of Congress in regard to this District. He considered the powers of Congress, within this District, to be just the same as the power of the Legislature of a State within the same, previous to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. By the bill, however, it was proposed to extend the legislative authority all over the nation. He knew that the ostensible, and probably the real, object of this bill was to provide for the relief of the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and officers. But let us not, said he, in the pursuit of a benevolent object transcend our powers, and establish a precedent which may be dangerous in itself. This Corporation was to be authorized to invest ten thousand dollars in real property in this District; but the substantial property, the entire funds of the Association, exclusive of the building, may be in any part of the Union, or in any extreme of the world. It was in vain to say, because the Association was to assemble here, that it was a corporation exclusively for the District of Columbia. It was not so. In spirit, the amendment does not change this objectionable feature of the bill. It had always struck him, Mr. H. said, that a corporation could not have any corporate rights out of the limits of the authority of the Government that incorporates it. That was a point, however, which he would not press at present.

But, suppose this bill to be Constitutional, would it be expedient to pass it? The creation of corporations in any well-organized Government ought to be avoided as long as possible. They are separate and distinct from the great body of the people. They are, if he might use the expression, like a counter-current in the great stream of legislation, and the multiplication of these counter-currents might, in time, prevent the great stream itself from flowing on. His own impression had been, that the United States ought to avoid creating corporations of any description. The ground on which the constitutionality of the Bank of the United States had been sustained by the Supreme Court was, that it was necessary to enable the Government to collect and disburse the revenue. Had it not been for that, Mr. H. said, the Bank of the United States would have been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Now, he asked, was the association proposed to be incorporated by this bill necessary to the general welfare, or to carry into effect any of the delegated powers of Congress? Not so, Mr. H. said.

But is it not, he asked, a dangerous principle to incorporate either the Army or the Navy, or any portion of them? They are formidable bodies, to whom it would be dangerous, and of course inexpedient, to give corporate powers. Supposing the bill to embrace the seamen as well as the officers: it would be but to extend the principle of the bill a little further than it now goes. What Government had ever done such a thing as it was now asked of this Government to do? No one; nor did he know that such a thing had ever been even proposed in any other country.

Mr. H. concluded, by saying, he believed the object of this association, and of this bill, to be what was avowed. The petitioners would not have asked it, and the committee would not have reported the bill, if it was not so. Its inviting garb, however, ought not to induce the House to give its sanction to a dangerous measure, not reconcilable to the spirit of the Constitution, if to its letter.

Mr. COLDEN, of New York, said he had assented to the amendment which had been adopted, that the friends of the bill might present it to the House in such shape as they thought would render it most acceptable; not because these amendments had removed the objections which he had submitted when the bill was finally on its passage. On the contrary, said Mr. C., the amendments strengthened my objections, or rather, I should say, they enable me to show, as I think, more glaringly than I could otherwise have done, what appears to me to be the unconstitutionality of the proposed law.

I consider it fortunate, Mr. Speaker, when great Constitutional questions present themselves, as that does which we are now to decide.

Whether we adopt the measure proposed by the bill, or not, cannot be of any great consequence to the persons who are asking of us this act of legislation. For, if a corporation be necessary to the advancement of their benevolent purposes, there is not a State in the Union that would not grant them the corporate powers they are seeking from us. For one State, (that from which I came,) I venture to pledge myself that they have only to express their wish to the Legislature, and it will be granted. To the nation, further than regards the constitutionality of the measure, it may be of no great importance whether the act be passed or not. We are free, too, in this case, from that influence which must necessarily be connected with great money institutions; and it is not possible that any political feelings or prejudices can mix themselves with our present discussions.

It seems to have been conceded that Congress cannot pass this law in virtue of the general powers of legislation committed to it by the Constitution. But, when this bill was last before the House, it was intimated, that, although Congress could not enact it in virtue either of its general legislative powers or of its local powers to legislate for this District, yet, that, by the aid or union of both those powers, authority was derived from the Constitution to pass this act, or to constitute any similar incorporation.

It was said, that, in virtue of the local power, Congress might create the body corporate, declare its existence within the District, and then, in virtue of the general power, they might authorize the corporators to perform all acts in any part of the United States which are incident to or might be requisite to accomplish the objects of the incorporation. I shall not at present, sir, attempt to give this suggestion any other answer than to say that such a doctrine attributes to Congress the power of universal legislation. They may, in virtue of the right they possess to legislate over the cessions of the States for fortifications, magazines, &c., erect a bank in every fort, at every arsenal, and in every navy yard. The corporators may dwell in our cities; the elections may by law be conducted there; the electors may meet there; and all the functions of the body politic be performed without the limits of the special jurisdiction of Congress. I shall reserve any further notice of a doctrine which appears to me so monstrous, till I find it attempted to be maintained, and till I understand more clearly on what grounds it will be advocated.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

It is on the local power of legislation given to Congress that the advocates of the bill, as I have understood, mean to rely to maintain its constitutionality. This power is given by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, in the following words: "Congress shall have power to 'exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of Government of the United States; and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings.'"

I shall deviate, sir, for a moment, from the course I am about to pursue, to ask the House to mark that precisely the same powers of legislation which are given to Congress in relation to the Seat of Government, are given to it in relation to the cessions which have been made by the States for the erection of forts, &c. The powers cannot be different, because they are conveyed by the very same words. And if Congress may erect this corporation within the District of Columbia, they may erect a like corporation, or a corporation for any other purposes; as, for instance, for banking purposes, within any of the States, or within the cities of any of the States, wherever they have a fort, magazine, navy yard, &c.

But the power now under consideration is that which is given to Congress to legislate over the District of Columbia. And the question occurs, Are we, when we are passing this act, legislating over this District? What is there in the bill which gives it such a locality as that we can say it is more connected with or has more relation to the Seat of Government than it has to any other part of the United States?

When I first offered objections to the passage of this bill, I stated that, conceding that Congress, in virtue of their local power, have authority to locate a corporation, they cannot exert that power to this effect, unless there be something local in the character of the persons to be incorporated, or something of the same character in the powers to be exercised by the corporate body, or in the objects to be effected by the incorporation.

With respect to the persons to be incorporated by this bill, it is not pretended that they have any particular local character. Not one of those named in the bill reside, as I believe, within the District. Nor is it pretended that those who will immediately take the benefit of the act, or incorporation, or those who will succeed them, will be inhabitants of the ten miles square. On the contrary, this act is solicited on the very ground that the persons to be incorporated can have no fixed residence, but are necessarily dispersed to every quarter of our territory, and indeed it might be said to every quarter of the world.

To decide whether there be any thing local in the powers to be exercised by the corporators, or in the objects of the incorporation, we must examine the features of the bill.

The friends of the bill rely very much upon the declaration in the first section, that it is to be a corporation "within the District." But this declaration cannot make the bill what in fact it is not. If there be nothing connected with the corporation which makes it local, it is no more a corporation within the District of Columbia, than it is a corporation within any other territory or district of the United States. This declaration, so far from reconciling us to the bill, should, as it appears to me, render us the more averse to it, because it is giving it a character and color, for the purpose of bringing it within the reach of our restricted legislative power, which it does not deserve. If neither the persons incorporated, nor the powers to be exercised by them, nor the objects of the incorporation, be local, or in any wise particularly connected with the District—then, if this bill passes, this will not be, in fact, a corporation "within the District of Columbia," however solemnly we may enact that it is so.

The usual corporate capacities, to have a name, to have a seal, and to have perpetual succession and existence, are given by the act. I do not suppose it will be contended that there is any thing of a local character imparted to the corporation by giving it these qualities. It is the functions of the corporation, or the acts which the corporators or their representatives, the directors, may perform, which, as it appears to me, must determine the locality of the institution. One of these functions is that of choosing directors. As the bill stood previously to the late amendments, the directors were to be chosen at each naval station, and it was said, that, as the United States had the same exclusive jurisdiction on those stations that they have within the District, there could be no objection to this provision. But, upon reflection, the friends of the bill had shrunk from attempting to maintain this dangerous position. It exhibited, too glaringly, the consequences to which their doctrine would lead. And they have amended the bill by providing that the elections may be held in such manner as the by-laws of the corporation may prescribe. Still, then, they may be held in the naval stations, or they may be held any where in the United

H. OF R.

Naval Fraternal Association.

JANUARY, 1823.

States! How can this amendment give that character of locality to this corporation, which, by resorting to the amendment, it is acknowledged, was wanting, in this particular at least, previously to its adoption? Sir, it was a reference to this amendment particularly, which induced me, just now, to say that the amendments that had been adopted rather strengthened than removed my objections to the bill.

The new board of directors are to meet "at the Seat of Government on the first Monday in January, annually." Let it be observed, that here is no provision which requires that the directors should ever convene within the District. Congress have not, necessarily, any exclusive legislation over the place which may be the Seat of Government. Though Congress may transfer the Seat of Government at its pleasure, it can assume no right of legislation within the territory of a State, without the consent of the State. If, therefore, the Seat of Government were to be re-transferred to New York or Philadelphia, where it has heretofore been, the directors must meet annually in New York or Philadelphia, and would not be obliged, by the terms of the law, ever to hold their meetings within the territory of Congress. But, supposing this objection should be thought too refined: It must be admitted that the directors will be required to hold but one meeting in a year at the Seat of Government. All their other meetings and all their business may, at any other time, be transacted where it may best suit their convenience. Now, then, I ask, whether the meeting at the Seat of Government is not a mere color? and whether, to require this, and no more than this, is not evidence that this bill is an attempt to do, indirectly, what we dare not do openly and directly? You are in fact going to create a political body, which, to all intents and purposes, is to be as much a corporation, in each particular State, as any that could be created by its own legislature. You mean, in virtue of your local power, to legislate, not "over" the District, but over the whole United States, by creating a corporation for the whole United States; but you mean to conceal that you are about to usurp so monstrous a power, by providing that a quorum of the directors shall meet once a year at the Seat of Government. If, in virtue of this provision, you may erect this corporation, why may you not erect a corporation "within the District of Columbia," to carry on the fur trade of the Northwest for the benefit of widows and orphans of the army at St. Louis, in Missouri? Why may you not have a corporate mining company in Illinois or Indiana, to work the mines of metal of Lake Superior? Why may you not give the iron companies of the East corporate capacities? If you can pass this law, you may do all this, if you only take care to insert in the charters you may grant, that a majority of the electors shall, once a year, come to the Seat of Government, wherever it may be!

It was pointed out to me, sir, when I first opposed this bill, that I had overlooked an important feature which gave to it the character of locality, I insisted it was without. This is the provision, in the first section: that this corporation may hold real estate within the District of Columbia. Personal estate they may have any where; but, if they will hold real estate, it must lay within the District. The argument derived from this provision of the bill is, that, when you enact this law you are legislating over the District, because the real estate of the company must be here. But, suppose the corporation should never see fit to acquire real estate? Then, it never will have this feature of locality, and it will be exercising powers, by your authority, which you have no right to grant.

There is another important, and, as it appears to me, objectionable provision in the bill. The first section makes the corporation capable to sue and be sued "in any Circuit or District Court of the United States," and, it is added, "or other courts having competent jurisdiction." The phraseology here, sir, is ambiguous. I am not certain that the last qualifying words would be taken to limit the cognizance of the courts of the United States. But I can hardly believe it to have been the intention of the framers of the bill to make so large an inroad on the jurisdiction of the States, as would be made by giving to the corporation a right to resort to the courts of the United States in all cases whatsoever, without regard to the character of their adversary, or the nature of the controversy. But, I ask, whether one evil of incorporations, like this, would not be to give the courts of the United States appellate jurisdiction at least, from the State courts, in all cases to which corporations created by a law of the United States were parties. Every case in which they should use their corporate name, in virtue of an act of incorporation by Congress, would be a case arising under the laws of the United States, and might be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I think, sir, I have shown that this bill will not create a corporation "within the District of Columbia;" that its qualities or capacities do not give it that character, and its functions no more connect it with the District, than they do with any other part of the Union; that we are not, in passing this law, in fact, exercising legislation over the District of Columbia. But, it is said that the powers of Congress, to legislate for this District, are supreme, and that they may exercise, in relation to the District and to the people of the District, all the powers which a State may exercise over its territory and people. I admit the position; that is, I admit that Congress may pass any law in relation to the District that a State might pass, and which, in virtue of the authority of the State legislating, would have the force and effect of a law. But, let it be remarked, that a State can pass no law which, in virtue of its own authority, can have any effect out of its territory. A State may pass a law, and the State of New York has done so, to prohibit its citizens from fighting duels out of the State. The law could have no force or effect until its offending citizen came within its jurisdiction, and so became obnoxious to its sanctions. A State may establish a bank—may provide that its stockholders may reside, its elections be held, its funds be distributed, and even its directors meet in another State; different steamboat companies in the United States afford instances of such corporations. But can such a corporation exercise any of these functions in a State foreign to that by which it was incorporated, in virtue of its law of incorporation? If such acts are exercised in the foreign State, it is in virtue of the tacit or express permission of the foreign State. So far as respects any other State, or any act to be performed out of its territory, the act of the State granting the incorporation is not a law. No rule of action, unless the sovereign power by which it is prescribed may enforce it, can be a law. It seems to me absurd to call that a law, which one Legislature may prescribe and another Legislature of equal power prohibit. A State, therefore, can pass no law which can have any force or effect out of its territory; and unless Congress will take to itself, as legislators for this District, powers beyond those which a State has to legislate for its territory, we cannot pass this law, the provisions of which all (except that which relates to the annual meeting of the directors) apply to acts which may be performed out of the District. It may be asked if a State may, by its enactment, prescribe that certain acts may be done out of its territory, and trust to the courtesy of its neighbours to permit the performance, why may not Congress pursue the same course in relation to the District and the other States? The answer, to my mind, is obvious and conclusive. There is nothing to restrain a State from legislative acts which may refer to a foreign State; or, in other words, there is nothing to hinder one State from giving their acts the form of legislation for its neighbours. But Congress cannot proceed upon these grounds. Their legislative powers are strictly limited. They can enact nothing that is not warranted by the Constitution; and the power to legislate over the District of Columbia does not allow them to pass any law which is to have operation beyond it. The necessity for making this distinction between what the States may do as legislators for their respective States, and what Congress may do as legislators for the District, appears to me very obvious. If Congress might legislate for the States, on the ground that the States would permit what Congress could not enforce, we should be utterly at a loss to know when Congress meant to exert its legislative power, or when it intended only an appeal to the courtesy of the States, and the inquiry would still be more complicated when it would involve a consideration whether it were the local or general legislative powers of Congress, from which the enactment emanated.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

II. OF R.

But we are told that this bill is not a novelty. That Congress has already passed many acts of incorporation. I know of none, except the incorporations of the various banks of this District. Now, without referring to the terms of the act by which charters are granted to the District banks, there is an obvious difference as to the objects proposed by those charters and this; all these banks were to be established in the District; they were to conduct their business here; their directors were to meet here; and their elections to be held here. In the act incorporating the Potomac Bank, the only one I have had the opportunity of examining, there is a provision, probably common to all of them, that if a director changed his residence, and removed from the District, his seat at the board of direction becomes vacant. The observations I have previously made will sufficiently illustrate how different these acts of incorporation are from that which it is now proposed to grant. The former are, in truth and in fact, local; it is mere pretence to say that the latter is so.

I am aware, sir, that the case of Cohens against the State of Virginia may be appealed to, and that some expressions of the judge who delivered the opinion of the court may be quoted to prove, that, in virtue of the local powers to legislate for the ceded district, Congress may extend their legislation, for some purposes, to the territories of the States. But, let me remark, that whatever is said to this effect, by the court, in the case referred to, is but by way of elucidation and argument, which judges never fail to caution us is not to be received as authority. The example given of what may be a rightful legislation by Congress, to have effect beyond the limits of the ceded district, in virtue of the power to legislate for such districts, is one that cannot be a precedent for the act we are now considering. Congress have declared certain offences committed in fortifications punishable with death; and the court says Congress must have power to direct that the trial, execution, &c., shall take place within the territories of a State. If this power belongs to Congress, it is an incidental power—incidental to the power to legislate for the ceded territory, one necessary to carry that power into execution. But, let me ask, to what express power is this act incidental? Or to the execution of what express power is this act necessary? But, I repeat, the court, in Cohens against Virginia, has decided no Constitutional question; they have not decided that this Corporation, elected by thirteen thousand people, can legislate for the ten millions of the United States. The court has not decided that this Corporation, elected to plant poplar trees and to make gravel walks from one village to another village, in this wilderness of a city, can control the several laws of the other States. All that is decided in that case is, that the law of the Corporation of Washington did not mean that their lottery tickets should be sold in other States.

These are the considerations, in reference to the Constitutional powers of Congress, which will induce me to vote against this bill. But, besides the questions of how far it may be politic to make the Navy one great body politic, and the Army another, which have been suggested by the honorable member from Kentucky, I think the measure somewhat questionable, as respects the discipline of the Navy. I am a good Republican, Mr. Speaker; that is to say, I could not live contentedly under any other than a free representative government; but I do not think we could have a democratic government on board a man-of-war.

H. OF R.

Naval Fraternal Association.

JANUARY, 1823.

When an order is given to fire a broadside, or to put the ship about, it will not do for the crew to question the authority of the commanding officer, or the constitutionality of the order. If you establish these corporations, where the officer that is of the lowest grade in the ship may outrank his commander, when they meet as members of a corporation, you encourage ideas of insubordination, very unfriendly to the necessary strictness of naval discipline. The electioneering for the officers of the institution, which will be introduced, will have a like bad tendency. The duties of a director may often be in collision with the duties of an officer; while the order of a commander may call an officer to one station, his corporation duties may require him at another, and possibly he might think that a law of Congress was to be obeyed in preference to the order of his military superior.

Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore said enough to evince that I duly appreciate the benevolent object of the proposed institution. I hope, sir, that I shall not be misunderstood or misrepresented on this point. As to the widows and orphans of those who fall in the public service, I think their country should take them to its bosom and supply to them their lost parents and protectors. As to the gallant man who is first mentioned in the bill on your table, (Captain Hull,) did it depend on me, he should enjoy riches and honor while he lives, and I would erect a monument to his glory after his death. What American can think of what he has done for his country without emotions of pride and gratitude? Let us recollect our situation when his name first filled the public ear; an army which had disgraced us by its vain boasting, had further disgraced us by a shameful surrender—from every side we only heard of defeat and disaster. The American eagle seemed sleeping on her perch. The thunder of the Constitution was heard. The Genius of America was roused; she hovered over our banners, and harbingered them to victory. Never shall I forget the feelings of the moment when I was told that one of the frigates, so condemned in the British Parliament, had come in contact with the wooden wall of old England, and that the striped bunting waved triumphant over the proud Cross of St. George. With such feelings, sir, I can harbor no hostility to any plan which might better the condition of our Navy, and in voting against this bill, I trust it will be believed I am actuated only by a sense of duty.

Mr. FULLER, of Massachusetts, said that, being well acquainted with the liberal sentiments of the gentleman who had just resumed his seat, (Mr. COLDEN,) in regard to the Navy, he had been the more surprised to find him foremost in taking exceptions to the bill now under consideration; a bill so laudable in its purposes and so unexceptionable in all its bearings. When, on a former day, he (Mr. F.) had moved for its consideration, the gentleman from New York had objected, that some of the functions of the proposed corporation were to be performed beyond the limits of the District of Columbia, and it had been recommitted for the purpose of removing the objection, although the friends of the bill were of opinion that the objection was groundless. Before the amendment, the annual elections of the officers of the institution were to be held at the naval stations; and, as the jurisdiction of the United States was as extensive, by the Constitution, on all those stations, as within the District of Columbia, it was impossible to conceive an objection to authorizing the elections, or any other corporate act, to be performed there. By the amendment, the elections are left to be adjusted by the by-laws, and no corporate act is authorized beyond the limits of this District; but, for the purpose of enabling the members to choose their officers without a personal attendance, they are allowed to vote by proxy, the effect of which will be, that officers on the several stations, or on distant service, will send their letters of attorney, or proxies, to their friends at the Seat of Government, and will either designate the individuals they prefer, or leave it to the discretion of their agents or correspondents. Very little inconvenience would be felt by such an arrangement, and it was hoped that the objections, in the minds even of the most fastidious, would be thus removed. It seems, however, that this attempt has increased the difficulties in the mind of the gentleman, and I confess, said Mr. F., that I was for some time, utterly at a loss to comprehend the pertinency of some of his remarks, or to account for the zeal and earnestness which he has displayed in opposition to the bill. At last, however, the solution appeared: The gentleman seemed to believe that he was opposing a bank; his arguments tended to prove that a bank was disguised under the humble garb of a charitable institution; and when it is recollected that he assailed the National Bank almost on the first hour of his taking his seat in this House, it is obvious that every thing which can be suspected of affinity to such a portentous institution, must encounter the whole energy of his resistance. It may be necessary for the friends of this bill to assure the gentleman and the members of this House, that the objects of it are merely charitable. It was originally introduced on the application of a large number of officers of all the several grades in the Navy and Marine Corps, at the head of whom is the name of that distinguished and gallant officer, who, on board the Constitution frigate, first broke the charm of British invincibility. Other officers of distinction are among the number. But it must be admitted that much the greatest proportion of the petitioners, and of those who may be expected hereafter to become members, are from the inferior grades. The reason is obvious; while the pay and emoluments of those in the highest ranks of service may place them in a condition of comparative independence, the officers of inferior grades are scarcely able to provide a competent support for themselves and their families. What, then, must be the destitute condition of the widows and children, or other dependent connexions, of officers who die in the service? And what officer can reflect, without deep anxiety, on the distress, which will be the consequence of his death, to those objects of his affection? Surely all will agree that it is a most commendable effort in these men to provide, as far as in them lies, a remedy for so deplorable an evil. And how do these petitioners seek to accomplish their object? Not by asking an appropriation of moneys from the Treasury, "not otherwise appropriated;"—but by regular and moderate contributions, by themselves, to raise a fund, which in time may be adequate; contributions which many will be able, from their slender means, to afford, but which the younger officers, not being encumbered with families, will be induced to make, by retrenchment of those personal expenses which may well be dispensed with. These periodical payments will be scarcely inconvenient to far the greater part of the members, and they will thus provide a fund, which will afford the assurance to every officer, when he is about to execute the most perilous enterprises in the service of his country, that his devotion to his duty will not, in any event, bring misery upon his helpless family. Thus, without expense, or any concession by the Government, the bill, if adopted, will essentially contribute to the public advantage.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

But the gentleman has strongly urged that the proposed act is neither within the local nor general powers of the General Government conferred by the Constitution; and he has attempted to distinguish it from those acts of incorporation which have been granted to banks and other institutions within this District. The difference, however, will be found, on examination, to be only apparent, and to amount to no difference in principle. It is true, that the officers to be incorporated are distributed through all the States in the Union, probably in some proportion to their population, and that the District of Columbia is the "local habitation" of no more than its due proportion. But, sir, the object of the institution is single; all its operations require that it should be fixed in one place, and the Seat of Government is, in all respects, the proper, as well as the most convenient place. How, then, does the place of residence of the members affect the right of Congress to incorporate them for purposes to be accomplished by functions performed within the District? For I shall first consider the Constitutional power of Congress on the ground that it is a local institution merely. The members who have been incorporated as bank proprietors, are not required by any of the acts, which I have seen, to be citizens of the District; and the Columbian College, lately incorporated, so far from being limited in this respect to citizens of the District, is well known to comprehend many who are not so; and probably far the greatest number of its members and officers are citizens of places beyond its limits. It has not been alleged that these acts were not within our Constitutional power. If, then, the fact, that one, or two, or ten members of those corporations are citizens of New York or Philadelphia, does not vitiate the acts in question, then any greater number cannot do so. The real criterion is, not the residence of the members, but the locality of the corporate functions of the institution.

But the gentleman protests strongly against any exercise of power by Congress over the District of Columbia, which is to have operation beyond it; and he seems to think that Congress ought not to legislate "over" the District with the same latitude that States may legislate over their respective territories, lest it should not appear, with sufficient clearness, whether their legislation is intended to be local or general. This argument has no weight in my mind, and it would be a subject of regret if a salutary and Constitutional act should be defeated, lest the courts in the several States should be puzzled in determining whether it was founded on the general or local powers of the General Government. I have thus endeavored to trace a sufficient power for our present purpose to our local jurisdiction; but it is not difficult to prove that this act may be passed by virtue of the general powers of Congress.

In the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, Congress is empowered "to provide and maintain a navy," and "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." This comprehends the power to build ships of war, and to enlist and pay seamen; but it does not necessarily comprehend the power to grant pensions to the relatives of those who die in service: yet this power has been long exercised, not only by a general provision, but by particular acts, in cases not comprehended in the general law. That this is not indispensably necessary, is evident, because the navy was many years in existence, before the general provision was adopted. It is, therefore, a power incidental to the general power of supporting a navy, which implies that the best means may be adopted for the purpose, and among those means, the provision for the destitute families of those who engaged in the service, is not the least efficient. The present bill is of the same nature, conducive to the same end, and by means far less objectionable, as involving no expenditure of the public treasure. Is it not, then, conclusively shown that the general power of the National Government will sustain us in granting the incorporation desired? Nor can it be any objection even to the most fastidious guardian of State rights, that this power may be well sustained on both grounds, together, or on each singly.

The gentleman from New York says the States will grant the act required; and he assures us that his own State will be forward, on request, to give their aid: but, if the residence of most of the members in other parts of the Union, is an objection to an incorporation in this District, it must apply in nearly equal degree to any individual State; only a small proportion of the naval officers are citizens of any one State, and it might be replied to their petition by the Legislature of a State, "You are not our citizens: you are not our officers; we have no peculiar concern in your affairs; if the naval service of your country is attended with peculiar evils to your families, you ought to seek the remedy at the hands of

H. OF R.

Naval Fraternal Association.

JANUARY, 1823.

'the Government in whose service you are engaged.' Such an answer is reasonable, and ought to be anticipated. If it should be said that each State could incorporate those officers resident within its limits, it is evident that such a multiplicity of corporations and subdivision of the funds would defeat the object, and be utterly unmanageable.

The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. HARDIN) objects to the act because it is merely a "color" for the purpose of effecting objects different from what it purports to effect. I hope the real objects of the bill are sufficiently obvious, and that it will be admitted they are laudable. Lest, however, the gentleman should indulge any alarm as to the purposes which might be accomplished by diverting the funds proposed to be raised, to other objects than those avowed, as he has suggested, I will ask his attention to the sources from whence those funds are to flow—the quarterly contributions from the slender pittance of the officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, and those chiefly of the inferior grades. As the stream can never flow above its source, the gentleman's apprehensions are certainly groundless. If, however, at any future day, it should appear that these fears are really well founded, and that the public interest will be endangered by the farther continuance of the gigantic powers of the corporation, the remedy is provided by the last section of the act; the charter may be instantly revoked. This is, indeed, a power which might be tyrannically exercised in other hands, but it may safely be intrusted to Congress, and I would not fear to intrust it even to its present opponents.

Under the conviction, therefore, Mr. FULLER said, that the act proposed was perfectly within the Constitutional powers of Congress, and that it was not merely innocent but highly advantageous in its tendency to the public service, as well as most laudable in the individuals who were more particularly concerned, he earnestly hoped it would be adopted.

Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, said, he was much interested in the fate of the bill. Its object was charitable, and the motives, which actuated the gallant men who had applied for it, were such as every member on the floor must approve. It must be admitted, on all sides, that there were no persons to whom the nation was so much indebted as the officers of the Navy. They had not only protected our commerce, but had redeemed our character, and caused the American name to be felt and feared in the most distant latitudes. Surely, then, an application by them for our aid, in raising a benevolent society, whose object was to support their wives and children, when left poor and comfortless, must meet in every liberal mind with the warmest encouragement. But, however warmly he felt this sentiment—however alive his sympathies might be to the object of the bill, Mr. M. said he could not give it his support in its present shape. It was clearly unconstitutional. According to the bill, the incorporation was to be general in its operation; its jurisdiction was to extend over the whole United States; and its corporate powers, like those of the National Bank, to operate and be recognised in every part of the Union. The doctrine concerning our right to create corporations, had been laid down with great ability by the first Secretary of the Treasury, and had been so frequently confirmed by successive decisions of this House, as to become the common law of the land. No one would now contend, that we had generally a right to create corporations. They were admitted, and to be justified only under the restrictions of the last clause of that section of the Constitution which enumerates the powers of Congress. Where a corporation is political in its character—where it is essentially necessary to the execution of a power expressly vested in us—where that power could not be exercised to full effect without the existence of such a corporation, there, and there alone, are we justifiable in creating it. It was on this principle that the National Bank had been established. Such an institution was found necessary to the correct management of our fiscal concerns; in peace and in war the Government would be feeble without it. According to this rule, can we constitutionally create the corporation, as described in the bill? We cannot. Is it political in its character? No. It is a society of private charity, intended to benefit the wives and children of deceased officers, who have no more connexion with the Government than the wives and children of any other persons. Will it subserve to the execution of any of our enumerated powers? This surely cannot be pretended. He was clearly of opinion, therefore, that we cannot, as the Congress of the United States, in our capacity as national legislators, grant the charter described in the bill. But can we grant it as the local legislature of the District of Columbia? Mr. M. said he would endeavor to show that we could not, in its present shape; but if the amendments which he had risen to propose, were adopted, he thought it would then be legal, and might be passed.

Mr. M. said, he perfectly accorded with the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. HARDIN,) that we could exercise over the people of this District any power of legislation which the States could exercise within their respective limits. Have the States a right to create corporations of any character and for any purpose? Certainly. But such corporations have no jurisdiction any where else. When they are recognised as corporate bodies in the courts of sister States, it is not of right, but from courtesy. He had been informed by a most enlightened and respectable member of the West, that, by a judicial decision in Kentucky, the bank of a sister State could not sue within the jurisdiction of that State, in its corporate capacity. It was necessary that the action should be brought in the names of the individual stockholders. He was informed from another quarter, that a similar decision had been made in Virginia. Mr. MITCHELL said, he was not lawyer enough to give an opinion on this subject; but he had too high a respect for these authorities to suppose the decisions incorrect. Taking this for granted, the corporation described in the bill is unconstitutional, because, in the first section, it is vested with power to bring suit in its corporate capacity in any court of the United States: Whereas, Congress, as the local legislature of the District, has no right to create a corporation for private purposes having more extensive jurisdiction than the corporations created by the States. He would presently introduce an amendment to confine the jurisdiction of the corporation to the limits of the District; and, if it should be adopted by the House, the bill in this respect might pass, as its unconstitutionality would be cured. The honorable gentleman from New York, (Mr. COLDEN,) had objected to the charter, because the capital was not limited, nor located within the District of Columbia. Mr. MITCHELL said, he considered these objections well founded, and to remove them, he would submit an amendment to satisfy the gentleman on these points. If, then, the powers of the corporation should be confined to the District of Columbia; if the capital should be located within its limits; if its amount should be prescribed and determined, he could not conceive a single objection to the bill; and with the warmest sincerity he hoped it might pass.

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. MITCHELL then submitted two amendments: one to limit the capital to the sum of $200,000; and to locate it in the District of Columbia; and, another, to enable the corporation to bring suits in courts having competent jurisdiction; both of which were agreed to.

Mr. GILMER, of Georgia, said, he perfectly accorded with the gentleman from South Carolina, (Mr. MITCHELL,) in regard to corporations. The United States, he contended, have no power to incorporate Associations for any general purpose whatever. There is but one other power to cover such a bill as this, and that is the power of exercising exclusive legislation over this District. What is the object of all Government? To secure and protect the rights of persons living within the territory over which that Government is established. Mr. G. then contended that Congress can create no corporation, under its power of exclusive legislation in this District, the object of which is not to secure and protect the rights of citizens within the District of Columbia. It is either under this power, or it is under the supposition of a general power, that this bill is presented to the House. Upon the face of this bill, the object of the proposed corporation is a general one. So far as it is general, and intended to operate without this District, its passage would be in violation of the powers of this Government. As far as the amendment proposed, went, he was in favor of it, but he wished it to be made broader, &c.

[Mr. M. then modified his amendment, which was then agreed to.]

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, made remarks at some length in favor of the bill, which are not here inserted, because he expressed himself to the same effect, but more at large, on the next day.

Mr. HARDIN, of Kentucky, made some further remarks in opposition to the bill.

The question was not taken, when, on motion, the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 7.

Two other members, to wit: from Vermont, CHARLES RICH, and from North Carolina, LEMUEL SAWYER, appeared, and took their seats.

The rule of the House this day took effect, which limits the presentation of petitions, after thirty days from the commencement of the session, to Mondays. No petition of course was presented this day.

The Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the further consideration of the Message of the President of the United States, received yesterday, in relation to the laws of the Territory of Florida, and it was laid on the table.

Mr. SCORR, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was recommitted the bill enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the Territory of Missouri, to institute proceedings to try the validity of the claims, reported a new bill to enable the holders of incomplete French and Spanish titles to lands within that part of the late province of Louisiana, which is now comprised within the limits of the State of Missouri, to institute proceedings to try the validity thereof, and to obtain complete titles for the same, when found to be valid; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, on the 31st ultimo, in relation to surgeons in the Navy of the United States, and the same being again read, was agreed to.

Mr. EUSTIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made a report on the petition of John Goodall, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCCOY's resolution, yesterday laid on the table, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to report the amount of all fines assessed upon the citizens of the State of Virginia, for the non-performance of militia duty, during the late war with Great Britain, and what expenses the United States have incurred in such assessment, with the amount that has been collected by the Marshals, and paid over to the Treasury of the United States, or otherwise accounted for, was considered and agreed to.

The resolution of Mr. ALLEN, of Tennessee, also, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information relative to a loan of $100,000 made to Scott, Thornton, and White, late city commissioners, and the time when, and authority under which the loan was made, the conditions to be performed, and the accountability secured; how far the same has been complied with, and the difficulties existing to its settlement with the Treasury accounting officers, was taken up and adopted.

The resolution submitted by Mr. DENISON, likewise requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to report the time to which the accounts of the General Post Office have been rendered to the Treasury Department, and settled, and the differences existing between contracts for transporting the mails, and the amount paid on those contracts, specifying cases in which such difference is found, was taken up, and also adopted.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, the Committee on Commerce were directed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a lighthouse or beacon on Cape Romain, between the ports of Georgetown and Charleston, in the State of South Carolina.

On motion of Mr. HILL, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of building a lighthouse on Great Duck Island, near Mount Desert, on the eastern coast of Maine.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAM SMITH, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were instructed to inquire into the expediency of discontinuing the post route from Lewis Courthouse to Nicholas Courthouse, in Virginia.

The unfinished business of yesterday was, on motion of Mr. McLANE, ordered to lie on the table; and the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill making a partial appropriation for the support of Government; and, no objection being made to it, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, which was subsequently done, and the bill passed.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles, to wit: An act appropriating moneys for the purpose of repairing the National Road from Cumberland to Wheeling; An act for the relief of Robert Purdy; An act for the relief of James Nichols; and An act for the relief of Daniel Seward; in which bills they ask the concurrence of this House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications from the Secretary of the Navy, viz:

1. A report on the petition of William Mahy, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

2. Transmitting a statement of the expenditure and application of all such sums of moneys as have been drawn from the Treasury on account of the Navy, from 1st October, 1821, to the 30th of June, 1822; and the unexpended balances of former appropriations remaining in the Treasury on the 1st of October, 1821; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

3. Transmitting an abstract exhibiting the expenditures under the head of "Contingent Expenses," for the year ending on the 30th of September, 1822; which received the same direction.

4. Transmitting a printed copy of the Rules and Regulations for the Naval Service of the United States, prepared under the authority of an act of the 7th of February, 1815, with such alterations and additions as have been deemed necessary, communicated in obedience to a resolution of the 23d ultimo; which received a similar disposition.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a list of the persons employed in the General Post Office as clerks, in the year 1822, with the compensation of each; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from the Postmaster General:

GENERAL POST OFFICE, Jan. 7, 1823.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed the 31st December, relating to the state and condition of the Cumberland Road, the obstacles (existing) to the safe and speedy transportation of the United States mail on said road, and what effect they may have, if not removed, on the expenditure of the Post Office Department, I have the honor to communicate that, in the month of November last, I passed over the whole of that road, and, travelling only by daylight, was enabled to observe its state and condition, which I attentively did.

The western (being the newest) part of the road, is in a ruinous state, and becoming rapidly impaired.

In some places the bed of the road is cut through by wheels, making cavities which continually increase and retain water, which, by softening the road, contribute to the enlargement of the cavities; in others, the road is much injured, by the sliding down of earth and rocks from the elevated hills, and by the falling off of parts of the road down steep and precipitous declivities of several hundred feet; so much abridging the width of the road, that two carriages cannot pass each other.

Obstacles do really exist to the safe and speedy transportation of the United States mail upon that road. The mail contractors have sometimes been necessitated to remove them before the mail could pass on; and such delay produced, that the mail stages have in some instances been unable to reach their point of arrival in due season to deliver over the mail, and consequently producing failures.

If these obstacles are suffered to exist and increase, the great Western mail must be transported on lengthier, oblique, and circuitous roads, which will retard the expedition of the mail, and considerably enhance the expenditure of the Post Office Department.

The Cumberland Road, so interesting to the nation, will, in my opinion, formed by observations when upon it, cease to be useful unless repaired. That part of the road contiguous to Cumberland, and the oldest, is in a tolerably good condition, because it has been seasonably and judiciously repaired; which repair was true economy in the preservation of the road.

I enclose a letter from J. L. Skinner, Esq., an intelligent and practical gentleman, on the subject of that road; also, another from George Dowson, Esq., a gentleman of much respectability.

I have the honor to be, &c.

RETURN J. MEIGS, Jr.

HON. PHILIP P. BARBOUR, Speaker Ho. Reps.

The letter was read, and, with the enclosures, ordered to lie on the table.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION, &c.

The joint resolution of Mr. A. SMYTH, of Virginia, proposing several amendments to the Constitution, to disqualify for holding office all persons who shall be members of the House of Representatives, at the time of an election of President of the United States, &c., was read a second time.

Mr. A. SMYTH, of Virginia, rose, and said that he would very briefly state the reasons which induced him to offer this amendment to the Constitution. He admitted that a nation ought not frequently to alter its fundamental laws. But as no wisdom could foresee all defects in a form of government; when those defects shall appear, and especially when they shall appear during the youth of a nation, and threaten to produce pernicious consequences, it would not be prudent to refuse to amend them. And there is a difference, he said, between altering the provisions actually made by the Constitution, and adding, by way of amendment, such further provisions as time shall prove to be required.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

The Constitution had, he said, been but twelve years in operation when a person was nearly made President by the House of Representatives, to whom the people had not given a single vote with intention that he should fill that office. An amendment has been made to the Constitution, providing against the recurrence of such an event; and this shows that no foresight can be relied on that is not the result of experience.

It now appears probable that it will frequently happen that the choice of President will be made by the House of Representatives. And it has been shown that, as, in making this choice, the vote will be given by States, thirty-one Representatives out of two hundred and twelve, representing a little more than one-seventh part of the people, may choose a President. Ten Representatives may give the vote of seven States.

I do not, said he, propose to alter even that provision of the Constitution; but I propose to prevent some of the mischiefs to which that provision manifestly tends. The mischiefs I apprehend are these: That the time may arrive when the wealth and population of the nation, being greatly increased, the power and patronage of the Executive may be also greatly increased; and the Presidential Chair may consequently become more desirable than it now is in the eyes of ambitious men. The President having the appointment of all the civil and military officers of the United States and foreign Ministers, and power to remove the whole except the judges, this will enable him to confer wealth and power on those to whom he shall be indebted for his elevation. Thus, the offices within the grant of the President will supply, with the means of amply rewarding his Electors, any man whose name should be found among the three highest on the list of votes given by the Electoral Colleges, and who shall have no scruples to prevent him from holding out to those who will support him the promise of rewards. Thus the more lax the principles of the man the greater the advantage which he will derive from this situation of things.

From the interest which the next Presidential election already excites throughout the nation, it is manifest that these elections of President are, in time to come, to endanger the tranquillity, perhaps the peace, perhaps the Constitution, of the United States. A Throne, said Mr. S., is a great temptation. Seldom have those who saw a sceptre within their reach failed to endeavor to grasp it; although, before they could secure it, crimes must be committed, and blood flow in torrents. We need not, said Mr. S., consult the history of former times. If Louis XVIII. could see, with joy, France conquered and despoiled by foreign armies, because a consequence thereof was, that he should occupy the Throne of that country for a few years of his old age, can we doubt that some candidate for the Presidential Chair of this great Republic will be found disposed to use all the power of the office of President as a means of obtaining the first situation in his country? Call the office what you will, he who fills it is elected for years to a seat in which he exercises Kingly power.

The amendment which I offer, said Mr. S., will remove from the election, or choice of President, the influence arising from the desire, expectation, or hope, of office. I anticipate from it very beneficial effects in securing the purity and tranquillity of those most important elections. The exclusion of a small number of citizens which will not, at the next election, exceed 260, if an election is made by the Electors, or 212 if the choice shall be made by the Representatives, cannot be in any wise detrimental to the interests of the United States. Some have proposed to exclude from office, at all times, members of Congress. I do not agree to that proposition—not seeing any sufficient motive for creating such a disability—but I would exclude the Representatives whenever they shall have been Electors of a President. Mr. S. concluded by entreating the members of the House, who might expect to be in the next Congress, to prepare their minds to make this sacrifice to the welfare of their country, and thereby secure, as far as practicable, the purity of the Government and the durability of the Constitution, &c.

Mr. S. then moved to commit the resolution to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union: which was agreed to.

NAVAL FRATERNAL ASSOCIATION.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill to incorporate the United States Naval Fraternal Association.

Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia took the floor. He began his remarks by protesting against the influence attempted to be enlisted in support of the bill, from the connexion of the naval officers with it. He alluded to the admiration of the naval officers, which had become identified with the patriotic feeling of the country, and which was to be ascribed, he said, not exclusively to their achievements, but in part to the qualities manifested by the application for the bill, their humanity, the sure associate of chivalrous sentiment, and their fraternal attachment, the source of much of that pride of character for which they were distinguished. To a bill addressing the appeal which this did to feeling, there was but one consideration strong enough to induce resistance, and that was derived from the questionable character of the power, the exercise of which its adoption would involve. If this were the character, Mr. A. said, of the power; if there existed a well-grounded doubt of our competency to grant the boon which was requested, without a violation of the trust under which we exercised legislation; if hazard were to be incurred in conceding the application, by which the interest of an inconsiderable number of persons would be consulted, of impairing that highest interest of an incalculable number—their interest in the Constitution;—the naval officers would be the loudest to applaud the opposition to the bill. They were the last to accept a personal boon at the price of detriment, or the hazard of it, to their country.

The question Mr. A. had considered as confined to the particular character of the exercise of the power of incorporation proposed by the bill, without involving any discussion of a general power of this kind in the Government. He understood, however, his friend from Delaware (Mr. McLANE) to contend for the general power. [Mr. McLANE explained.] Mr. A. expressed his satisfaction at the explanation, from the regret he should have in seeing his friend the advocate of erroneous opinions, in relation to a subject so important as the construction of the powers of the Government. And there were few opinions, he thought, in relation to the subject, more erroneous than that which imputed to the Government the power he had alluded to. It stood condemned as a derivation from implication, not only by its important and substantive character, but by the further attribute of its peculiar fertility of incidents. And if the doctrine could obtain, Mr. A. said, of the derivation, in an incidental character, of powers qualified to become themselves the sources of other incidental powers, there would be no limit to, nor any safety under, the sweep of this constructive interpretation.

Mr. A. proceeded to inquire into the character of the corporation which it was proposed to establish. Would it be a corporation, he asked, for the District of Columbia or for the Union, and testify the exercise of a local or a general power of legislation? It was by the result of this question of construction that the character of the bill, as respected constitutionality, was to be decided. He adverted to the tests which had been suggested for determining this jurisdiction of the corporation; the correctness of which he denied; and it was to the mistake in this respect, he thought the error of the opinion which maintained the Constitutional character of this exercise of power was to be ascribed. The residence of the members or persons forming the corporation, by their association, did not supply this test of the jurisdiction of the corporation. These persons might reside in part or altogether in a different country and political dominion from that which comprehended the corporation. Neither did the jurisdiction of the place in which the functions required for the conduct of the corporation were performed, necessarily describe its proper jurisdiction. The corporation was distinguishable both from the persons who contributed to form and the persons who administered its functions. Their spheres of residence, therefore, were not necessarily the same as respected legal jurisdiction. The corporation, though formed by the association of natural persons, and put in motion by their agency, formed what was called an artificial legal person—that is to say, a mere capacity or body of legal capacities of action. To what legal jurisdiction could this artificial person be considered as belonging? Manifestly to that in which it enjoyed its life—that is to say, in which it had its operation. Its legal action constituted its existence. Wherever this action extended, there it must reside; and to the political jurisdiction which controlled this sphere of action it must belong. It was to the proper regular action of the corporation, however—that which resulted from the design of its institution—that this remark applied. Any irregular action, not comprehended in this design, did not fall within the just sense of the operation. It was the sphere of its appointed and proper operation, then, which pointed out the legal place and jurisdiction of a corporation. This jurisdiction might be the same or larger than that in which the functions of the corporation were performed, at the election of the authority from which the corporation emanated, according to its peculiar design. There was no greater necessity for confining the operation, or considering it as confined, to the particular district of municipal jurisdiction, than the particular city or house in which the functions of the corporation were required to be performed. The obstacle to just apprehension proceeded from not distinguishing with sufficient clearness the operation from the functions—the operation, though requiring the exercise of the functions for its production, constituting the being of the corporation, and defining therefore its residence as respected legal jurisdiction. The operation, as was obvious, might flow to a distance indefinitely remote from its source. It was the extent of this flow which determined the limits of the jurisdiction to which it belonged. If a question arose, therefore, whether a given limit of jurisdiction would be transcended by the establishment of a particular corporation, the extent intended to be given to the operation of the corporation, supplied the test by which it was to be decided. If the operation were intended to reach beyond this limit, then the boundary of the authority was transgressed.

Here, then, Mr. A. said, was a clear criterion established, for ascertaining the local or general character of the corporation, established under the complex jurisdiction of Congress, as the Legislature of the District and the Union. If the test were a just one, it would resolve all difficulties. Let it be applied to the case of the corporation under consideration. The scope of its intended operation was the test of the character of the corporation. What was the scope of the intended operation of this corporation? Was it intended to have its effect, to realize its ends in the District of Columbia? He would not ask whether the exclusive operation which would be necessary to give validity to the exercise of power, was any material part of it contemplated in the District? Might it not, with truth, be affirmed, that the whole real, he did not speak of the nominal operation, was contemplated beyond the limits of the District? Was the allegation of incorporation for the District any thing more, indeed, than a fiction to give jurisdiction? The beneficial effects, the fruits of the power, the moving considerations to the creation of the corporation, were to be realized beyond the District? The friends of the bill would not deny this. They would not deny that the establishment of the corporation would be a matter of indifference, if its effects were to be restricted to the limits of the District. Were they treating our understandings fairly, then, in requiring us to characterize this institution as a mere corporation for the District? Mr. A. said that this appeared to him to be so far from a just description, that he was compelled to reaffirm the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. HARDIN,) that the idea of incorporation for the District was colorable only, and that the measure involved in its real character the attainment, indirectly, of an end, which there was no direct power to attain. He spoke of the effect and the character only, not its motives, disclaiming all intention of personal imputation. If gentlemen could be induced to view the bill in the light which he did, he had no doubt of their concurrence with him in rejecting it. That this was the true view of it, he must continue to maintain; and that the effect of its adoption would, therefore, be an elusion of the restriction, which was not denied to exist in the powers of the Government, in this respect.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. or R.

Mr. A. proceeded to adduce illustrations of his view, that the general character of the proposed corporation was demonstrated by its general operation, and that its establishment could not, therefore, be Constitutional. The Government itself was a corporation with the seat of performance of its functions in the District of Columbia; but it was, notwithstanding this position of the seat of its functions, the Government of the United States, from its operation on the United States. The acts of Congress, though passed in the city of Washington, were the laws of the United States. The criterion on which his friend from Delaware had relied, as evincing the local character of this corporation, that the orders for the disbursement of its funds would have to be made in the District, was fallacious. The local or general character of the corporation was to be determined by its operation, not its functions, and the orders for disbursement of its funds, made a part of its functions, and not its operation. It was the application of its funds which constituted its operation. The orders for disbursement were only essential preliminaries to it. If the principle of the inference were sound, as the orders for the disbursement of the public moneys were made at the Treasury, this department would be an institution of the District, or of the city, and not of the United States.

Mr. A. instanced the case of the Bank of the United States. Suppose, he said, this institution, established with the same legal operation over the Union which it had at present, but without branches, and possessing only a single office for the discharge of its functions, located in the District, it would still be the Bank of the United States. Its existence as a legal institution would be as unquestionable in the States in which no offices were established, as in those in which they were. Gentlemen, however, would have to contend for the contrary propositions, who maintained the local character of the present corporation.

Mr. A. derived a further illustration of his argument from the case of the custom-houses. There was an anecdote of Mr. Jefferson, that a gentleman, pressing on him the political importance of New York, from the amount of its contributions to the Treasury, he replied by inquiring if the custom-house were transferred to the Jersey shore, what would then be the source of these contributions? The inference was of parallel character here. Previously to the transfer, would the institution be an establishment of New York, or subsequently of New Jersey, or, in either event, of the United States? If the latter, the sphere of operation of an institution, and not the place of performance of its functions, gave the rule, as respected the jurisdiction to which it attached.

The incorporation of the District banks and the Columbian College, had been supposed to present cases in conflict with the conclusion, from the argument which had been stated. The principle of distinction was obvious between these corporations and the corporation under consideration. It was the scope of the proper operation of a corporation, and not effects resulting from it beyond its design, which gave the rule for determining the jurisdiction of which its establishment was to be considered as an exercise. Any operation which the banks incorporated for the District might have beyond its limits, was not to be considered as forming a part of their proper operation. A currency being required, or supposed to be required for the District, it was within the competency of Congress, as its legislature, to make provision for such an object. It was an object, not of nominal merely, but real character, which not only colored, but covered the establishment of these institutions. The possibility of the occurrence of an indirect irregular operation beyond the District, was not to defeat the exercise of an acknowledged district power, for the accomplishment of a necessary district purpose. The want of jurisdiction beyond the District, was not to prevent the exercise of a legitimate jurisdiction which had a valid relation to the District. If, indeed, these institutions were framed upon a scale adapting them for operation beyond the District, as well as within its limits, this would be evidence of an abuse, but not an assumption of jurisdiction. An unwarrantable abusive exercise of an admitted jurisdiction, was not usurpation, though it was nearly allied to usurpation of jurisdiction. But the case here, would not be a mere abusive extension, but substantial assumption of authority. The distinction perhaps was nice, but it was perfectly intelligible. The establishment of the banks had a real reference to purposes to be attained within the District. They would have a sufficient object for their establishment, though not perhaps on the same scale as respected number and amount of capital, if there was a certainty of the circulation of their notes not extending beyond the District. Their principal operation really took place in the proper and regular sphere of their operation in the District. But this would not be the case with the corporation which it was now proposed to establish. The name of the District was only used in this case, to give effect to an operation which had its real purposes and scope beyond the limits of the District. Even if the establishment of this corporation, like the undue extension of the banks, were only an abuse, and not a substantive assumption of jurisdiction, the argument applied against it with nearly the same force, as an abuse of the grossest possible description. A similar course of remark applied to the case of the Columbian College. The establishment of a seminary for education was a real necessity of the District. Provision for it was within the competency of Congress, as the legislature of this District. The possibility of an abusive extension, as respected the scale of this provision, could not discharge the right to make it, any more than the duty of exercising this right. If the provision were really characterized by this undue extension, still the vice which adhered to it was not defect in the authority to establish. This institution did not not stand then on the same footing of authority with the corporation under consideration.

The power then which Mr. ARCHER denied, was not, as the argument of gentlemen supposed, a power to incorporate for the District, but, through the District, for the Union; and thus to obtain an authority over the States which was not given by the Constitution. It was not the arbitrary or even despotical authority asserted over the District, which was contested; but the competency to pervert it to a co-extensive authority over the Union. This was the doctrine which had been asserted in effect by the Supreme Court, in the decision in the case of Cohens and Virginia, which had been alluded to. His friend from Delaware (Mr. McLANE) had fallen into an error in stating this decision, from confounding the two opinions delivered by the court on the point of jurisdiction, and on the merits. When he combined a view of the possible employment of this doctrine to purposes of danger, with what he considered to be its fallacy, he found it difficult, Mr. A. said, to put a measure to his reprobation of it. It was the principle of the bill then, which might prove an entering wedge to this doctrine, which he resisted. He would not lend his aid to plant this seed, which might expand and bear fruits fraught with poison to his country. The propositions could not be controverted; that the operation of the bill was as wide as the Union, and that no power could be shown, to give it this extent of operation. The inference from the absolute character of the district power, availed nothing to the argument; because no power, however absolute, could have a competency to transcend the sphere of its territorial limits, in its exertion.

Mr. A. stated a further objection to the power to pass the bill, derived from the character of its object, even supposing the existence of a general power of incorporation in the Government. The limitation on the general authority derived from the distinction between the general and municipal character of objects of jurisdiction, was now generally recognised. If this limitation were not observed, there was none of a constructive character which had a chance of being respected. But the object in the present case, a charity, was strictly municipal in its character. It was an object, too, which could be carried into effect in a better manner by the exercise of State than of Federal authority, (which was one evidence, by-the-by, of its municipal character,) from the more equitable apportionment which would be established between the local burden and the local benefit, where each State incorporated for so much of the object as was to be obtained within its limits. It was a burden, however, which, to the extent to which the object merited support, ought to fall on the public authority, State or Federal, and not on the naval officers; whose emoluments were too scanty, as they were too well earned to be subjected to charge or diversion for an object which was of public concern. The object was attainable to every proper extent, under the Federal Government, by the exercise of the power to pension. For the Government did possess, Mr. ARCHER said, a power to pension, though it did not possess a power to incorporate; of which he hoped we should give an evidence in a few days, by an unanimous concurrence in the passage of a bill on the table, the bill for the relief of the mother and sister of the late Lieutenant Allen.

The friends of the bill, Mr. ARCHER concluded by remarking, appeared to him to be placed in a dilemma. If the bill was not to have its effects beyond the District, it was nugatory; if it were, it was unauthorized. Direct power to attain the object was not pretended; indirect attainment could not be justified. As respected the beneficent character of the object, it ought to induce distrust in as great degree as favor; assumptions of authority being always first presented in this disguise. It was the history of all successful usurpation, that the first encroachments were gilded by plausible objects or pretences; and these served as precedents for others, till links in sufficient number were added, and the chain rendered strong enough to bind irretrievably the rights and the hands of the people.

Mr. WOOD, of New York said: Sir, it is admitted that the bill before the House embraces objects not of a local nature, and is intended for the benefit of persons not within the District.

The advocates of the bill claim the power to pass it under the sixteenth clause of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, which gives Congress exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over such district, not exceeding ten miles square, as might be ceded to them by any of the States, for the Seat of Government. Under this clause, the friends of the bill contend that Congress, within the District, have supreme power over all objects whatsoever, that if the functions of a corporation are performed within the District, the objects and parties interested, may be foreign to it.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

Without controverting the literal meaning of the terms of this clause, I apprehend that a practical operation of this construction would lead to the exercise of power hostile to the intention of the Constitution, by a fair and reasonable interpretation of the whole instrument, and destructive to the relative powers of the General and State Governments, as adjusted by the Constitution; and that some limit must be assigned to the exercise of this power, to give effect to such intention, and to guard against such mischief.

Every instrument is to be so construed as to give effect to the whole, if possible; and if some of its provisions are contrary to others, it is subject to such construction as best comports with the obvious intention of the parties. If a literal construction of this clause, by the occurrence of any unforeseen event, embraces a larger field than was intended, and especially if it can be construed to authorize a power which, in its exercise, will interfere with the powers reserved to the States by the Constitution, ought not Congress, by a cautious legislation, to control its operation, and prevent such conflict?

That the power of Congress over the District was not intended to be universal, or extra-territorial, in its operation, will be evident, if we test it by the object of our Union—the character of the powers of the General and State Governments—the object of the power over the District—the limitation of the territory—and by the consequences of a contrary construction.

The object of the union of the States is public security. The State governments are adequate to every other purpose. The people of the United States, at the adoption of the Constitution, made a new distribution of their sovereign power; to the General Government they intrusted the public force, the power of peace and war, the subject of revenue, the regulation of commerce, and intercourse with foreign nations, with certain specified powers that required uniform regulations throughout the country, with correspondent judicial authority; and reserved to the State governments the protection of person and property, the subject of internal trade and internal improvements, and administration of justice, with all other local and municipal powers.

The powers committed to the General Government are of a general character, and were intended for national purposes. Those reserved to the State governments are of a local nature, and intended for local purposes. Each government was intended to be independent in the exercise of the power intrusted to it. Both are supreme in the exercise of their legitimate powers. This arrangement of power, adjusted with so much care and jealousy, would be totally defeated by a construction that would authorize Congress to attach the character of nationality to the laws of this District.

The same conclusion results from the object of the grant. The sole purpose of this was to render Congress independent in the exercise of their functions; to preserve their deliberations free and uninterrupted, without the aid of State authority, and not to furnish a resting place for the lever of constructive power, by which the States might be thrown from their orbits.

The limitation of territory to the maximum of ten miles square, corroborates the same conclusion. Much less than this would have been sufficient for the erection of the public buildings, and the accommodation of the public officers; and the amendment proposed to this clause by the Convention of Virginia, and one or two other States, favors the opinion that it was then supposed the whole extent would not be accepted, or, if accepted, would not embrace any considerable portion of population, and would only need the ordinary regulations of police, or a very limited authority. The omission of the Constitution to define the nature of this power, or to restrict its exercise, so as to render it conformable to the municipal power of the States, is conclusive to show that it was not then believed, either from its minuteness or locality, that it would ever come in conflict with the power of the States.

The like conclusion results from the mischiefs of a contrary construction. By the sixth article of the Constitution, all laws passed by Congress, without any distinction between those of a local and such as are of a general character, are supreme. If the exclusive power of Congress within this District can be construed to embrace objects without the District, then every act of Congress in relation to the District, that can have an operation beyond its limits, must control the laws of the States, whenever it comes in conflict with them. On this construction, can the conflicts be imagined that may ensue with State laws, and the rights of their citizens? By this construction, Congress may incorporate an East and West India Company, a Fur Company, Manufacturing Companies, and, indeed, may convert the whole population of the District into companies of monopolists, and enable them to engross the most profitable business of the country, to the injury of the equal rights of the citizens of the several States.

This construction renders the municipal power of Congress over the District superior to the municipal power of the States; the laws of one State have no effect in any other but what is accorded, by comity; the laws of Congress go clothed with authority, and ride over State laws and State tribunals.

Is not the construction contended for clearly a surprise on the people of the United States? Is it not evidently contrary to the intention of the compact? The location of the District to the extent authorized, embracing a large and growing population, has produced a state of things not contemplated by the Constitution, and which subjects the exercise of the indefinite power of Congress, over it, to difficulty and embarrassment in every other rule of construction than that which gives effect to the whole instrument. To give that effect, the power of Congress over the District must be restricted to the local purposes of the District. This construction is agreeable to the intention of the Convention who framed it, and of the people who adopted it; it preserves the symmetry

H. OF R.

Naval Fraternal Association.

JANUARY, 1823.

of the Constitution; secures the citizens of the District in the enjoyment of equal privileges with their fellow-citizens of the several States, and secures the States in the independent exercise of their rights. It is no impeachment of the correctness of the rule that non-residents, and even foreigners, may become interested in the banks established within the District; this results from the nature of the subject, and not from the intention of the law establishing the corporation, and is quite a different thing from an act intended for purposes not local, and for the benefit of persons not resident within the District.

It is not only a desirable object, but an imperative duty, to preserve the relative powers of the General and State Governments as originally intended; good faith, the safety of the States, and the harmony of the Union, require this; and this important object will be completely effected by restricting every act that may be passed in relation to the District, exclusively to local purposes.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Maryland, said he rose to defend this bill, which has been objected to as unconstitutional and inexpedient. Upon the first point, I shall not examine the Constitution to prove it Constitutional, but I shall rely on the repeated decisions of that question by every branch of the Government.

Sir, the great question of the right of Congress to grant a charter of incorporation was, shortly after the adoption of the Constitution, decided by the establishment of the National Bank, under the imposing auspices of the immortal WASHINGTON, then President of the United States, who presided in the Convention that formed the Constitution.

The Congress that granted that charter was composed of a number of the members of the Convention that framed the Constitution; and did not only give a contemporaneous exposition, but their own construction of the instrument. This construction was not made "sub silentio," but was greatly contested. We are well informed of the pains taken at that time to defeat that charter. And we know that Alexander Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury, was the warm advocate of the bank, as necessary to the fiscal concerns of the nation, and we know the conspicuous rank he held in that Convention. We also know, that all the weight and influence of Mr. Jefferson, then Secretary of State, were exerted in vain to defeat it. And that Mr. Madison, not less conspicuous in the Convention than Mr. Hamilton, used all his power to prevent the passage of the law for the establishment of the National Bank. Yet, the archives of our own Government show that Mr. Madison himself, as President of the United States, approved and signed the law establishing the present bank charter of the United States. Sir, in the courts of common law, the decision of the Supreme Court, from which there is no appeal, settles the law, nor will they suffer the question again to be stirred. The importance of this rule is, that those bound to obey the law may know it, and that controverted points of law should be definitively settled, and is happily expressed in the law maxim, "Interest Reipublicæ quod sit finis litium." And can it be, that Congress will not be bound by her own decisions? The Legislature, the Executive, and the Judiciary, have settled the constitutionality of this question; and Mr. Jefferson himself, also, while President, by signing several acts of Congress to protect the old bank from perjury and forgery, has tested its legitimacy. And, although these two distinguished opponents to the bank, upon the ground of the Constitution, have, as Presidents of the United States, thus yielded to this construction, yet we find the honorable Mr. ARCHER, from Virginia, still contesting the point, which I had hoped was finally settled, also, by the Legislature, the sovereign power of the nation. Sir, is this question never to be settled by this House—the most expensive and unwieldy tribunal of the nation—and are the consciences of the minority of such texture that, upon all occasions involving the constitutionality of granting a charter of incorporation, we are again and again to go the grand rounds of its constitutionality? Are their consciences made of more sensitive materials than those of the judges, who are all bound by the decision of a majority of the court? and correctly, too, or in different districts there would be different laws. Although the judges hold themselves bound by the decision of a majority of themselves, it is said they claim the right of deciding on the constitutionality of a law of Congress, passed by both branches of the Legislature, and subscribed by the President, when every member of both branches, and the President, are bound by oath to observe the Constitution. I ask, would not this be reversing the natural order of the powers of Government, "the Legislative, the Executive, and the Judiciary," and placing the Judiciary above the Legislature, and thus reduce sovereignty to subordination; and peradventure, by the voice of a single judge, impeach the integrity or intelligence of the President and Congress, composed of two hundred and fifty members, the constituted legislative authority? I hope never to witness this event; but, without claiming the spirit of prophecy, should it happen, I have no doubt the application of the Constitutional remedy will prevent its ever happening again. Will the judges pay more respect to the majority of themselves than to the decision of the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives? I hope this view of the case may put the question at rest with this House, as to the constitutionality of a charter of incorporation, and with the judges fix the seal of authority to the acts of Congress. Under that presumption, I shall proceed to the consideration of the expediency of this bill, the granting to this fraternity of naval heroes the right of a corporation, that they may sue and be sued, and thus manage the contemplated funds of this benevolent institution, which is clothed with the sublime attribute of protecting the widows and orphans of those officers who may contribute to its establishment. Their funds must be deposited in the hands of a treasurer, to be disposed of agreeably to the principles of the institution, who ought to be amenable to the law, and the institution secured from the dilapidation of its funds. I will here remark, that many of the Masonic lodges in this country are incorporated for the purpose of making their treasurer answerable for the funds of the lodge; and in one instance I have known a considerable loss by the improper conduct of a treasurer. And, although this noble institution had Solomon for its founder, and is co-extensive with the universe, embracing the whole human family in its charities, whose divine principles have been recognised by our beloved WASHINGTON, once Grand Master of America, I have no doubt that these gallant sons of Columbia, the pride of their country, the patrons of this philanthropic institution, who ask for the privilege of thus protecting their funds, are moved by motives not less laudable, or principles more congenial with the finer feelings of the human heart. Although the objects of their benevolence are few, they are defined, and of that character that the bounty of this nation, when asked by them, has never been withheld; and can we now be indisposed to grant them this institution? It has my heartfelt approbation that Isaac Hull is contemplated as president of the institution, who, by the noble conquest of the Guerriere, put the first feather in the cap of the Navy, inspired a noble emulation in its officers, and, by their repeated conquests, soon made our Navy the admiration of Europe, and its star-spangled banner respected in every clime. For the consolation of Britannia, now in amity with us, never again I hope to be disturbed, I will suggest, that on both sides our heroes sprung from the same stock; but that the mild latitude of a republic is the clime for patriots and heroes.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

Sir, shortly after the glorious war of the Revolution, the officers of the then late army formed themselves into a Fraternal Society, under the denomination of the Cincinnati, for the benevolent purposes now contemplated by our naval officers of the late war. Each officer paid in a month's pay, the annual interest of which was to be applied to the indigent widows and orphans of the fraternity, under their direction; they established annual meetings, to perpetuate that fraternal affection which the awful scenes of the mighty conflict they had sustained, had cemented by their blood, shed in the same cause, and to keep bright the hallowed chain of friendship. It will be recollected that this institution also was opposed, as leading to an order of nobility, particularly by Mr. Edanus Burke, of South Carolina, and others. However, the purity and benevolence of the institution, and the patriotic character of its authors, who had been consecrated by their sufferings, secured its success, and it went into operation, and yet flourishes—whose charities have often gladdened the hearts of the widows and children of those Patriots of the Revolution, who could not be suspected of a design to destroy that charter of liberty they had sealed with their blood. Mr. Speaker, with what pride do we look at the portraits of those patriots who signed the Declaration of Independence, which we have placed as an archive in the Capitol, to eternize their honest fame, and hand it down to posterity—and how much more are they entitled to our gratitude and respect, who achieved it with their swords, and sealed it with their blood! I should rejoice to see their portraits, which now grace the Museum of the venerable patriotic Peale, transferred also to the Capitol, in perpetual memory of their noble deeds—and the few survivors, who are qualified, transferred from the pension list to the civil list. What would not the patriots of England give for the portraits of the nobles that coerced King John to sign Magna Charta at Runnymede? Sir, if we admire the work of Independence, we must admire its authors. Whoever is devoted to the Revolution, must, in the same ratio, be devoted to the patriots and heroes who declared and achieved it—and also to those naval heroes who, in so conspicuous a manner, by their skill and valor, have defended it, and, by their naval conquests, covered the nation with glory. Sir, they are the sons of the fathers of the Revolution, and, I have no doubt, will forever protect this Republic against its foreign and domestic enemies, whose vast and increasing extent secures us against the petty machinations of traitors. The just contempt shown to the members of the Hartford Convention, I am persuaded, has made them hate themselves, and will be a panacea for treason, and detestable in the eyes of all that reflect that the sovereignty is in the people, and traitors enemies to themselves. Sir, I presume every member of this House will support this bill, unless he suspects some danger to the Republic by its adoption. There is nothing covert; they have come forth in the face of the public, and submitted their whole project to us, and asked for what, in every State, in such cases, has been granted; the extent of their benevolence embraces the United States, and requires to be on a scale co-extensive with its limits; and, I should hope that the name of Isaac Hull would secure it from every suspicion, and paralyze every objection to it, and that we will not tarnish the fair fame of the applicants by rejecting this bill. There can be no just grounds to fear any danger to the Republic. For, sure I am, that no man in this Republic, in his sober senses, will ever have the temerity to play the part of Cæsar, while every citizen is sworn to act the part of Brutus.

Mr. REID, of Georgia, said he feared he was unwise to offer his opinions upon the bill at so late an hour, and when the House was so evidently fatigued by the discussion. The views, however, which he was inclined to submit, should be circumscribed, he promised, by more than usual brevity.

The obligations, said Mr. R., to this bill, relate to its constitutionality and to its expediency. It is denied, by gentlemen, that there is any power to create such a corporation delegated to this body by the Constitution of the United States, and a member from New York (Mr. Woon) has declared, that a grant of exclusive power does not imply universal power. Because we do not possess the last, he seems to infer that we have not the power to pass this bill. To all such doubts and difficulties, I take leave to reply in the language of the Constitution itself, because no answer can be more conclusive than that afforded by the very clause which is the subject of dispute. The words are these: "The Congress shall have power 'to exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases 'whatsoever, over such District, (not exceeding 'ten miles square,) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of Government of the United 'States." Now, if the English language can distinctly convey ideas; if it can express any thing so clearly as to avoid misconception, it has given to Congress, in this portion of the Constitution, a power sufficiently ample to cover and protect the corporation contemplated by the bill. We have power to exercise "exclusive legislation." No State, no earthly authority, has a right to interfere with our legislation for this District. Nor has the Constitution restricted us, according to the construction of gentlemen, to cases confined entirely to the District; because, the objects of our legislation are emphatically declared to be "all cases whatsoever." We possess, then, all the power, as to these ten miles square, which is possessed by a State over its territory, and, perhaps more; because the powers to be exercised by a State are often narrowed by the terms of her constitution, but we derive the most extensive jurisdiction from the 8th section of the Constitution of the United States, already quoted. And yet it is insisted that we have no power to frame this corporation! When applications, similar in their character to the present, have been made to the State Legislatures, I have often heard it urged that they were at variance with good policy, but never, that there was no power, or that it was unconstitutional, to give legal existence to a company whose objects were to prove beneficial to society. Indeed, the States have uniformly acted upon the supposition that they possess this power, and have sometimes, I admit, created corporations greater in number and privileges than have been compatible with the public interests. When a set of men apply for a charter of incorporation, they do not desire an extension of their rights; they only ask to be enabled, by a combination of numbers, to act upon certain objects more efficiently than they could by the exercise of individual strength. The Constitution and laws as much operate upon artificial as upon natural persons, and it is difficult to conceive how it can be unconstitutional to allow an association of individuals for purposes which are legitimate when performed by the individuals themselves. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that, when matters of this kind present themselves either to a State Legislature, or to Congress legislating for this District, the only question for consideration is—Will the measure proposed be advantageous or prejudicial to the community? In a word it is a question of expediency.

H. OF R.

Naval Fraternal Association.

JANUARY, 1823.

We are told, by a gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. HARDIN,) that the measure in contemplation is a mere evasion of the Constitution, and I understand him to prove this assertion by a reference to the past and to the future. He informs us that, when the bill was first before a committee, of which he was a member, its enactments did not confine the locality of the institution to the District, but that this has been the subject of an after amendment. This amendment, then, does fix the corporation—as far as an ideal personage can be fixed any where—within the District, and thus the objection to the absence of all locality is obviated. How, let me ask, are we to understand that the bill, which, by its amendment, is brought within the pale of the Constitution, is a mere evasion of the Constitution? I submit it to the House to decide, if this conclusion be as just and perfect as those at which the gentleman arrives generally are. Again, it is affirmed that the corporation is national in its object, because its effects will be felt beyond the District of Columbia, and, in this manner, the Constitution will be evaded. It does not seem to me that this proof is more satisfactory than the other. How can you confine the effects of any institution you may create—of any measure you may adopt, to certain metes and bounds? When a State is desired to incorporate a bank, would it prove the unconstitutionality of the contemplated law to show that the emission and unrestrained currency of bank notes will produce an effect upon the money market of a neighboring State or Territory? Such an objection would not be tenable, and if it were, would not your legislation for this District be at an end? You can frame no enactment, of which I can conceive, whose effects will not be felt in the adjoining States, and perhaps to the extremity of the Union. I confess there is nothing which so much recommends this bill to my mind as the belief that it will prove extensively useful; that its kindly effects will be experienced far and wide through this great Republic; that they will feed the hungry and clothe the naked; that they will direct the beam of gladness to the heart shrouded in gloom and sorrow! Yes, sir; they will soothe the labors of the ship-boy who is "rocked by the billow and tossed by the storm;" they will give strength and confidence to the patriotism of the gallant sailor in the hour of danger and dismay! And why should not this institution, although incorporated for this District, be national in its aspect? When we are ushering a blessing into active existence, why should we not encourage it to spread itself every where? Sir, I wish that, in legislating for the District of Columbia, the views of Congress had been always comprehensive. I wish that she had been regarded with a respect and care due to the largest of our States, rather than with a carelessness unmerited by even the smallest of our territories.

A gentleman from New York (Mr. GOLDEN) insists that, if you pass this bill, there is nothing to prevent your incorporating a Fur Company in the Northwest, whose existence in the District would be nominal, and whose business would be transacted elsewhere. I will not deny that if, under the pretence of legislating for the District, you legislate for a State or for the Union, you grossly misapply the authority with which you are vested; but a single glance at the provisions of the bill, will convince the House that there is no analogy between the case imagined and the one before us.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

If the name of the "Naval Fraternal Association," like that of the supposed Fur Company, were to belong to the District, while its elections, its business, its officers, its property, were without the District, I should be found in the ranks of its opponents; but when I plainly see that here is to be the seat of the corporation; that its property, both real and personal, is to be here; that all its functions are to be performed here; that here is to be the reservoir whence all its benefits are to be diffused, I cannot believe that, in giving my vote in its behalf, I am wandering from the path of legislation prescribed by the Constitution.

But you have the same power, it is said, over your magazines, arsenals, and fortifications, that you have over this District; and you are asked if, when called upon to establish a bank within one of your fortresses, you would not reply that you had no Constitutional power to do any such thing? It is quite true, that the same section of the Constitution which gives you jurisdiction of this District, empowers you "to exercise like authority 'over all places purchased, by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.'" But I deny that you would properly reply to the application to institute a bank in one of your dockyards, or arsenals, or fortifications, that you were prevented by a Constitutional impotence. No; you would assert your right and power under the Constitution to be perfect; but you would say that the application was unreasonable and absurd; that to grant it would be worse than useless, because it would expose you to ridicule and derision.

The gentleman from Virginia, who has this morning favored the House with his views in opposition to the bill, (Mr. ARCHER,) asserts, if I understood him correctly, that you cannot legislate unless the corporation be located within the District; and he proposes to consider residence as the test of its location. Now, Mr. Speaker, unluckily, this test can never be applied, because, from the very nature of a corporation, it can have no residence. A person, such as God hath made him, may live and breathe, and occupy a habitation in some particular place; but the being created by legislation exists in legal contemplation only. If you sue a corporation, the process cannot be served personally, or left at the place of residence, because there is no person upon whom it can be served, and consequently no habitation at which it may be left. It is well known that the summons must go to the head officer of the institution. But if the test is to be applied to the individual corporation, it is equally inadmissible, because it would be destructive of every corporation within the Union. There is not one, I will venture to assert, all the members of which reside within the limits of the State or Territory whose law has given it birth. According to this doctrine, the charters of your banks, of your colleges, of your charitable institutions, are void.

We are assured that it is not the province of the respectable gentlemen who apply for this privilege, to provide for the necessities of the families of those who have died in the service of the country; that this holy work belongs to Congress and to the State Legislatures; that national munificence, as well as State liberality, will, in time, be active in affording relief to those hapless beings who have not inherited the comforts of wealth, but the consolations of good name and glory. If the prospect were as flattering as it is believed to be, it would still be a harsh refusal of the present application to answer it in this way. If the officers of the Navy, with a liberality and warm-heartedness which do them honor, desire to bestow their mite upon the wants of the widows and orphans of their departed brethren, why should you not afford facilities to their generous intentions, although the treasures of India had been collected for such a purpose? But, really, I know of no reason which should induce us to believe that the State or General Governments will provide a fund sufficiently great to alleviate individual distresses. It is a mockery, then, to refuse a passage to this bill, while you point to expected benefits, which are the mere creations of deluding hope.

Wishing, as I do, the incorporation of this association, and to scatter its advantages as diffusedly as possible, I regret that an amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. MITCHELL) obtained the sanction of the House. By it, the corporation is allowed to sue and be sued in "courts of competent jurisdiction." There is a looseness in this phraseology which may lead to error and difficulty. The language of legislation should, if possible, be so precise, as that the judge, who is to expound and execute the law, cannot escape from its true intent and meaning. If once he is permitted to apply his own constructions, there is danger that he will not only pronounce, but impose the law. What are courts of "competent jurisdiction?" is the question which you leave to be unriddled by the bench. Are they courts of the United States, generally, or courts of this District? I shall be told that the provision evidently means the last, because we have no power to give jurisdiction to the former. If this be true, I regret it, as well because I am sure the corporation will be cramped by a provision unnecessarily restrictive, as because I do not perceive that the Constitution would confine the institution, in the legal prosecution or defence of its rights, to the courts of the District. If, as I think has been shown, you may create a corporation; you may give by your laws to the courts of the United States jurisdiction in cases where that corporation is a party: for these tribunals have cognizance of all cases, both in law and in equity, arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties—and if it be competent for you, and I think it has been so decided by the Supreme Court, to give to the citizens of a Territory the right to sue, and the capacity to be sued, in like manner as if they were citizens of a State; if you may exercise such legislation over natural persons, I do not see why you may not extend it to persons of your own creation. It may be added that, to extend the remedy, either for or against them, to the circuit courts, does not actually enlarge the power of the corporation.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1823.

Suits may be commenced by the several members in their individual names, as matters now are; but, by restoring the original clause of the bill, you afford a convenience, and nothing more. I make these suggestions, sir, under the hope that the chairman of the Naval Committee will, if he shall think them worthy of his attention, make an effort to amend the bill in this particular.

A fear has been expressed that the Association will receive, under your law, an authority liable to be abused. Now, what, once more let me ask, is the object of the corporation? Charity—pure charity! And is there indeed danger that, instead of distributing alms, the members of this society will plot the destruction of your liberty? that they who have fought for your Constitution and your rights will compass the ruin of both? Who does not see that such “horrible imaginings” can never assume the shape of fearful reality? that the bill under consideration does not offer the slightest stimulus to ambition or pretext to usurpation? But we may reasonably presume that the time will come when the laudable benevolence of this society may be interrupted or perverted in its course; that some man or set of men may use it for unworthy purposes. And what then? Is this a reason why you should not promote this benignant design? If it be, it is precisely equal with that argument which should condemn our sacred religion, because its doctrines have been misquoted and misdirected by bigots and fanatics.

I know that the supposed impropriety of creating any corporation, will influence the votes of many honorable gentlemen against the bill; and it is very probable, that if this were to be the first corporation, I should not be its advocate. It is questionable if such associations be altogether congruous with republican principles. That they are sometimes influenced by malignity, ignorance, prejudice, and partiality, to the injury of individual repose, and to the inconvenience of the community, is certain. But, gentlemen know we have heretofore given existence to corporations, both literary and moneyed, and that these last have sprung up within this District, under your influence, with the ripeness of plants bursting from a hot bed. And will you pause in this policy at a moment when you are urged onward by an animating and interesting benevolence? No, sir. If you must frown upon such charters, let it not be on this, which merits only your smiles. Let the strength of your displeasure be reserved for some great and wealthy institution, when it shall ask a renewal of its powers and privileges.

The House is warned against the measure, because it is believed to be the first of a long series, and gentlemen prophesy that the incorporation of officers of the Navy will be followed by that of the officers of the Army. Be it so. Whenever the officers of the Army shall pray Congress to enable them to frame a society, kindred in its object and motives with this, I hope the permission will be promptly accorded. It seems to me that we should evince a distrust inapplicable to them, and unjust in ourselves, to refuse it. I do not believe that there is a feeling of hostility to our republican institution either in the Army or Navy. I know that the esprit du corps exists in both; but that it is also to be found in the House of Representatives, and in the Senate, and everywhere, among bodies or assemblages of men, to whom there is identity of feelings and pursuits. I would not excite this spirit by legislative pampering, or foster it by unnecessary enactments; but, where the purpose is to direct it, through proper channels, to the welfare of mankind, to direct it, if you please, from the dreams of mad ambition to peace and good will, I would throng your archives with statutes of incorporation.

I hope, sir, the bill will pass. The boon is slender, and the request commended to your attention by a modesty characteristic of the officers of the Navy. If there be any one thing more than another, in the character of our naval heroes, which extorts admiration, it is a gentleness and simplicity, which is only equalled by skill in their profession and invincibility in war.

Mr. COLDEN spoke against the bill.

On motion of Mr. McLANE, who wished the opportunity of replying to Mr. ARCHER when the House should be less fatigued than now, the bill was laid on the table until to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY, January 8.

A new member, to wit: from Maryland, ISAAC McKIM, elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Samuel Smith, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, and others; which was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled “An act for the relief of John Byers,” reported the same without amendment, and the bill was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was recommitted the engrossed bill to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois, reported the same with an amendment; which was concurred in by the House, and the bill ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. HERNANDEZ presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of St. Augustine, in East Florida, praying that the Floridas may be formed into two distinct Territorial governments; that a separate board of commissioners may be appointed to ascertain titles and claims to land in the eastern section of said Territory; that the expenses attending the exhibition of proof of title to lands may be defrayed out of the Public Treasury; that settlements may be allowed on the public lands, with permission to the settlers, subsequently, to purchase their improvements at the minimum price established for said lands; that the aid of Congress may be extended in the opening and repairing of roads, and the erection of bridges in said Territory; that lighthouses and buoys may be erected and placed at certain points, designated in said memorial; that adequate measures may be adopted to insure the tranquillity and security of the Territory against the aggressions of the Seminole Indians; that measures may be adopted for settling the claims to land derived from grants from the British Government, commonly called British grants; that the members of the Legislative Council may hereafter be elected by the people; that the operation of an act, passed by the said council, for the levying and collection of taxes, which the memorialists complain of as oppressive and unjust, may be suspended by act of Congress. The memorialists further complain against another act of the said council, whereby common soldiers of the Army of the United States, quartered in said Territory, are permitted to vote in the election of a delegate to Congress, and praying for a correction of the evil. And further, that the judicial system of said Territory may be so altered as to be better suited to the genius and condition, and the present political situation of its inhabitants; which memorial was read; and its subjects referred to the proper committees.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

On motion of Mr. BAYLIES, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were instructed to consider the expediency of authorizing by law the transportation of the eastern mail of the United States in steamboats from the city of New York, to Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, or to some town situated on Taunton river, in the State of Massachusetts, during the whole, or during a part of the year.

On motion of Mr. McCoy, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, measures are necessary to protect and secure the Government, in the several departments, from impositions by the exhibit of fraudulent claims.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to locate, in sections, the quantity of one township in the district south of Red river; and the quantity of one township in the district north of Red river; and the quantity of one township in the State of Louisiana, appropriated to the support of seminaries of learning, by the seventh section of "An act providing for the final adjustment of claims to land, and for the sale of public lands in the territories of Orleans and Louisiana," approved 3d of March, 1811.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, the Committee of Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a lighthouse on the eastern coast of Florida, at Cape Carnaverill, or at some suitable point between that cape and the lighthouse to be erected at Key Largo.

On motion of Mr. RANKIN, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of changing the mode of surveying the public lands on the river Mississippi, and adopting that formerly used by the Spanish Government.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the widowed mother of James Denny, late a gunner in the service of the United States, who was killed in the boat with Lieutenant Allen, the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars a year, for five years.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering the times of holding the circuit court within the sixth circuit of South Carolina district; also, as to the propriety of extending the provisions of an act of Congress, approved the 2d of March, 1809, entitled "An act to amend the judicial system of the United States," to meet the exigency arising out of the death of a district judge, as well as that which results from his occasional disability.

On motion of Mr. JENNINGS, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of reserving from sale a portion of the public lands through which a canal may be constructed to unite the navigable waters of the river Wabash, and the Miami of Lake Erie, and to grant a portion of such lands for the purpose of constructing such canal.

Mr. INGHAM submitted the following resolution, which was read, and laid on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House a statement of the custom-house bonds outstanding on the 1st of December, 1822, and falling due within the year 1823, with the amount of debentures chargeable upon the same, and the probable expense of collection.

Also, A statement of the amount of the bonds outstanding on the 1st of January, 1821, and at the commencement of each quarter during that year, with the debentures chargeable upon the same at the respective periods.

Also, The amount of revenue from customs which will probably accrue in the year 1823, and the portion thereof which will probably be received in the course of that year; stating the average amount which has been received on the customs accrued within each year, since 1816, inclusive.

Also, A statement of the whole amount of the unexpended balances of the sinking fund, distinguishing each year since 1817; and on what principle he distinguishes the balances that will accrue against that fund, in 1823 and 1824, from those of preceding years, by which he proposes in his annual report of the 22d of December, 1822, to charge the estimated unexpended balances of 1823 and 1824, upon the revenues of 1825.

The House took up, and proceeded to consider, the engrossed bill entitled "An act for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan Territory, and for other purposes;" and the bill having been read the third time, the question was taken, Shall it pass? and passed in the affirmative.

NAVAL FRATERNAL ASSOCIATION.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, the bill "to incorporate the Naval Fraternal Association."

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, said, that, having already submitted his views, generally, upon the subject before the House, he would not have intruded again upon their time, if he had not been so particularly alluded to, in the course of their remarks, by his friend from Virginia (Mr. ARCHER) and the two gentlemen from New York (Mr. GOLDEN and Mr. WOOD.)

Notwithstanding the debate had arisen very unexpectedly, he believed to all, and certainly to him, he was not surprised at the range it had taken, and the zeal with which it had been conducted. When he heard the prejudices in behalf of State rights, and the jealousy of Constitutional power invoked by the opposition, he was aware that numerous spirits would come forth, and he knew as well, that his friend from Virginia, who stood the Ajax Telamon of the band who watched so carefully the movements of the General Government, could not be insensible to the charm. He would not detain the House in attempting an answer, in detail, to each objection which had been urged against the power of Congress to incorporate this association. If he understood them correctly, they might be reduced substantially to two points: 1. That the powers of Congress within the District of Columbia were not municipal or universal, but merely exclusive of other legislation; 2. That the objects of the association were the true test of our power, and that, as in this case, these were exterior to, and to extend beyond the limits of the District—we have no power to grant the corporation.

Mr. McLANE said, his object would be to show that the positions were unfounded. He entered into a discussion of the powers of the Government, generally, and of Congress over the District of Columbia. He contended, that the terms exclusive legislation, as used in the Constitution, imported full sovereignty, and vested in Congress the same supremacy, within the District, as could be exercised by any sovereign Power, within its acknowledged territory.

He proceeded to say, that all the powers of the General Government, within their sphere, were necessarily exclusive of other legislation, because they were supreme. He asserted the general distinction to be, that, without the district, the powers of Congress were limited as to their objects, and unlimited as to territory; but that, within it, they were circumscribed as to territory, and unlimited as to their objects; but that, in both cases, they were supreme, and exclusive of all other legislative interference. Congress, he said, had power to raise armies; to provide and maintain a navy; to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States; to coin money, and to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises, which might be exercised in any, or all of the States of the Union, exclusive of the control of either. In the exercise of these powers, the laws of Congress bore a supreme sway, and rode over all conflicting authority; and if, as a means to carry them into execution, it should become necessary to create a corporation, it might be created with authority to exercise its functions in any part of the United States. These, he admitted, were all national objects, and left the State authorities in the full possession of their municipal power, within their respective limits.

But, within the District of Columbia, the same supreme power of Congress prevailed, and embracing a greater diversity of objects. Here it encountered no other power whatever. Here, all State authority had ceased to exist—it had passed to the General Government, whose power might be exerted to the entire exclusion of any other, and embrace as well municipal as national objects.

The terms exclusive legislation, could not presuppose the existence of another power, whose entire extinction was the very object of the cession of the District to Congress, but must have intended to vest in Congress the same power which had been exercised previous to the cession of the States ceding it—to add to its general objects those of a municipal character. It was absolutely necessary, he said, that such power should exist somewhere; and, if it did not belong to Congress, he asked gentlemen to tell him where it was to be found. Could it be pretended that the authority of Virginia and Maryland had any operation in the District for any purpose whatever? No; it had entirely disappeared.

He said, he could not conceal his surprise that a principle so clear had been seriously contested; but, as it had become necessary to discuss it, he begged leave to refer to the text book of the Constitution; and he invited the attention of gentlemen to a number of the "Federalist," in which the nature of this power of Congress over the district had been adverted to. It was understood to be the production of the late President of the United States, whose regard for State rights, it would be admitted, was not inferior to his accurate conception of the true spirit of the Federal Constitution. "The indispensable necessity," says Mr. Madison, "of complete authority at the Seat of Government, carries its own evidence with it. It is a power exercised by every Legislature of the Union, I might say of the world, by virtue of its general supremacy."

Mr. McLANE then proceeded to show the exercise of municipal powers by Congress, over all objects, in virtue of this general supremacy. He instanced the application of private property to public purposes; the regulation of private property generally, the definition of offences, and the creation of punishments. If, in virtue of this general supremacy, said he, you can exert one or more of these municipal objects, you may, for the same reason, embrace the whole family of municipal powers. And, if you can do this; if you can make rules without limit, which concern the lives, liberties, and property of the people; if you rule supreme, and without control; can you not create a corporation, which is little more than prescribing a rule, by which a number of individuals may manage their common property, by their own consent?

Gentlemen appeared to consider, that, in creating a corporation, we were originating an association of individuals for some tremendous purpose, who, under color of our authority, were to assert unlimited privileges in every part of the Union. Instead of which, finding a number of men associated, to raise a fund for a particular purpose, we give them individuality merely, and authorize them to do certain acts within this District, for the more easy attainment of their object. We do not presume to bring them into conflict with any State authority whatever. We give them the power to exist and act as a corporation here, and we leave to the discretion and courtesy of other powers to treat them as they do all other corporate bodies deriving their being from a local authority.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

II. OF R.

If we cannot create such a corporation as this, how have we created our Territorial governments, which are corporations of the highest grade, themselves exercising municipal powers, and possessing an authority to create other corporations within their respective limits? No one doubts, said he, that it would be competent for Congress to establish a local Legislature within this District, and for himself he regretted it had not been done. Such a Legislature, he contended, exercising an authority similar to that possessed by the respective State Legislatures of the Union, could create such a corporation as is now applied for; and how, therefore, can it be argued that we, who can create the Legislature, are incompetent to create the corporation? In short, said he, I know no limit to the powers of Congress, over this District, other than are necessarily prescribed by the principles of the Government, and I believe none can be shown. It is an absolute, though a local supremacy, and the mere statement of the proposition furnishes a complete answer to the fears of the gentleman from Virginia and from New York.

Where, he asked, was the danger which had been apprehended from such power? It is easy to deal in frightful terms, and dress an object in terrors, which in reality should be as harmless as the dove. One gentleman had said we were planting a lever in this District which might sway the Union! But, said he, there are twenty-four levers of a similar kind in constant operation. All the States of the Confederacy are in the daily exercise of the same power, and are perpetually granting acts of incorporation, and yet the Union has never been moved from its centre! The authority of no one State comes into conflict with another; each exerts its own machinery within its own limits, without even producing a jar in that of its neighbor, or in any manner disturbing the harmony of the whole; so that, in fact, that which is affected to be most dreaded, is the greatest beauty of our whole system. But the same power which is so harmlessly and beneficially exercised by New York, or Virginia, when exerted by the General Government over its own District, is denounced as full of peril to the Republic! The fears of gentlemen are immediately aroused, and they appear to be alarmed at the size of the object by whom the power is wielded. It has been denominated a monster, that is to sweep away our liberties! a giant that will devour us! But gentlemen do not recollect that the giant is confined within a narrow space, whose limits are accurately defined and securely guarded. He is a giant mildly presiding over his own narrow municipality, and quietly managing his domestic concerns. He resembles much more an Hercules playing with the distaff, than waging war against the Nemæan lion. Sir, said Mr. McLANE, it is not by the operations of the General Government, within the circumscribed limits of the District of Columbia, that State rights are to be subverted or invaded. The danger is to be apprehended, if at all, when we come to raise and discipline armies, to levy war with foreign nations, and to graduate the scale of State authority. It is when the giant puts on his complete armor, and, drawing to himself the whole train of Executive, Legislative, and Judicial powers, express and implied, strides abroad, and stretches his arms over the States of the Union, that his step requires to be watched, and in such a case, said he, I will place myself by the side of my friend from Virginia, and assist him in preserving the inviolability of State jurisdiction.

By what he had already said, Mr. McLANE assumed it as proved, that Congress had the power to create a corporation within this District, for all purposes whatsoever, provided its functions were to be performed there. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. ARCHER) had conceded, and, if he had not, it could be easily shown that the residence of the members of the incorporation was immaterial, and furnished no test of its locality. He agreed with that gentleman, and with others that had spoken, that the true test of locality depended upon the place in which its corporate functions were to be exercised, though to him it was apparent, that the gentleman had confounded the objects of the association with the functions of the corporation; and because the former might extend beyond the District, he argued that the corporation had no locality within it. The whole argument of the gentleman from Virginia rested upon this foundation, and, unless he could reconcile two things essentially dissimilar, it would entirely fail him. The gentleman had obviously mistaken the fruits resulting from its exercise for the function itself, and in this consisted the fallacy of the argument. A function, said Mr. McLANE, is the power or faculty by which either a material or artificial person discharges its duties. The functions of a corporation are the powers conferred upon it by the charter, and which it exercises in virtue of its corporate capacity. This corporation is the artificial person of our creation, and the powers with which we endow it, and those only, constitute its being, and can be properly called its functions. The creation of these functions involves our power, but the consequence flowing from their exercise are matters of expediency merely. If the locality of this corporation should be tested by these distinctions, our power is susceptible of the clearest demonstration.

When I first submitted my views upon this bill, said Mr. McL., I mentioned the power to have perpetual succession as the principal function, being, in truth, the very end of the incorporation. That all the powers of this function were to be exercised within the District, could not be denied. All the elections were to take place here; here they were to designate the objects of their fund; here, in effect, they were to dispense their charity. If the payments were to be made to the objects of their charity, in person here, he presumed the doubts of the most sceptical would be removed; and he could perceive no difference between the order for payment, and the payment in fact; or between the receipt of the money in person, or by power of attorney. But the gentleman from New York, (Mr. COLDEN,) feeling the force of the argument, had said that the power of perpetual succession was no function, but a "quality." As the gentleman had not obliged us with his idea of the distinction between a quality and a function, as applied to a corporate body, he would not differ about words, but would appeal to the gentleman's legal knowledge upon this subject. He could not avoid reminding the House, however, that, while the gentleman denied the power of perpetual succession to be a function, he zealously contended, that the meeting of the officers was a most essential one! for which Mr. McL. could discover no other reason than that it enabled the gentleman very gravely to argue, that, as the bill merely directed the meetings to be holden "at the Seat of Government," they were not necessarily confined to the District of Columbia!

H. OF R.

Naval Fraternal Association.

JANUARY, 1823.

Mr. McL. here, passing over some observations which he had intended to make in reply to the gentleman from New York, (Mr. COLDEN,) if he had been in his seat, proceeded to enumerate and animadvert upon the other functions of a corporation, which he said consisted in the power to sue or be sued; to grant or receive by its corporate name; and do all other acts that natural persons may; to purchase lands for the benefit of themselves and their successors; to have a common seal through which to speak and act, and manifest its intentions; and to make by-laws for its government, provided they were not contrary to its charter or the laws of the land. The performance of each of these functions, he repeated, was confined, by the bill, to the District of Columbia; and the gentleman from New York (Mr. COLDEN) was once more unhappy in attributing to the by-laws the power of changing the place of the elections, as he was also superficial, in seriously asserting the impracticability of a man in New York voting at an election in Washington, overlooking entirely the use of the proxy, with which, if he had not been previously familiar, he had been reminded in the debate.

If, therefore, said Mr. McL., all the legal functions of this corporation are to be performed within, how can it be unconstitutional, if some of the objects who are to derive aid from its benevolence, but are not members of the body, reside without the District? If the residence of the corporators be no test of locality, can that of the objects, who had no concern but in its charity, be more so? Is it not clear that, to pronounce the function illegitimate, the gentleman is obliged to follow the consequence of its exercise? You find a number of your citizens associated together, to raise a fund for charitable purposes—to relieve the necessities of the widow and orphan of those who may die in your service; and in order to facilitate the management of this fund, you endow the contributors with certain corporate functions, and authorize their performance in this District. They are performed here, and the benefits of this performance are shared by citizens of other States; but can this render their performance unlawful? It is obvious you do not mean to empower these corporators to do any thing beyond these limits in opposition to the laws of any State, that they could not have done without your interference. You mean to say that their powers shall be exerted here, and their objects may flow wheresoever they may be unobstructed by any higher authority. I admit, that before you confer the powers, it is your duty to be satisfied of the expediency and beneficial tendency of their exercise; but, being satisfied of these, I concur in opinion with the eloquent gentleman from Georgia, (Mr. REID,) that the more the benefits were to be diffused, the more urgent would be the propriety of granting the powers. Suppose it to contemplate objects of charity in another State, it does so in the same manner as any individual would, who designed to apply his private purse for a similar purpose. It is in the nature of every association, for general or public purposes, to spread its influence over an extent proportionate to its objects; and it is with corporate bodies as with natural persons, that their operations will be felt as far as their ordinary intercourse and relations in business may be extended. If the powers of Congress should depend upon circumscribing these effects or objects, within this District, they would be too impotent to be practically executed. Such a principle would prevent an individual from dispensing charity to objects beyond the District, and the law which should protect his industry, by which he acquired the fund for this purpose, would be void. You could not incorporate a trading company, because the effects of a wise and prudent exercise of its corporate functions here, might beget relations and enrich objects in other parts of the Union. The doctrine, he said, was at variance with every principle of sound reason, and the whole practice of the Government.

In the exercise of your municipal power, you incorporate a bank, with a large amount of capital, and locate it within the District; but do you mean to say, that it will or can have no object exterior to the District? Do you not mean to recommend the circulation of its paper to every part of the community where it can be received? Do you intend that it shall create no debts, and establish no relations in business elsewhere? No, for this would be utterly vain. You mean, though, to give it a legal existence here, and you leave its influence elsewhere to the operations of the laws and interests of society. A part or the whole of the stock of your bank may be owned by the citizens of other States; its operations controlled by their management, and the profits paid and received wherever the owner may be; and would the charter, for that reason, be unconstitutional? The gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER) has attempted to distinguish this from the case before the House, by alleging that, in the case of the bank, the objects exterior to the District are merely collateral, or incidental, and, therefore, could not be foreseen. But this is evidently a distinction without a difference. The objects enumerated are certainly "incidental," but they are necessarily so, and flow naturally from every banking operation. Besides, sir, you are bound to foresee the most natural consequences of your laws, and you act under a blind policy if you do not. And, sir, said Mr. McL., if you fail to foresee consequences, which are thus naturally incident to your measures, would your want of common foresight legalize that which would be otherwise unconstitutional? If there were any force in this argument, a non-resident of the District could not purchase any stock in one of your banks; and, if he did, his purchase would be void, or the charter be violated.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Fraternal Association.

H. OF R.

Again, sir, you desire to clear the navigation of the river which flows through this District; or to unite some distant stream with its waters, and, as necessary to this, you cut a canal through a part of your limits. The proposed object is to bring the trade of a remote part of the country to your city, and as much for the advantage of those at a distance, who are to bring their merchandise hither, as for your own merchants here, you foresee, and, foreseeing, design avowedly to promote the exterior object. Will any gentleman deny your power to incorporate a company to do this? And may not those who live remote from the District, and who reap the benefit of the improvement, become members of the incorporation? You also authorize money to be raised by a lottery, and grant an act of incorporation, if it be necessary, to accomplish it; if you cannot force the sale of your tickets in the several States, do you not design to invite their citizens to come here and buy; and may they not do so, and receive the prizes, if they be fortunate?

But, said Mr. McL., at the same time that the gentleman from Virginia argued upon this distinction, his accustomed candor and intelligence led him to admit, that Congress possesses the same power to create a corporation within this District, as is possessed by any State of the Union, within its limits; and this appeared to him to be a surrender of the whole argument. Let me ask, sir, said he, if a State Legislature cannot incorporate a charitable association? Can it not incorporate this one? Certainly it may. One gentleman, from New York, (Mr. COLDEN,) had referred these applicants to the States, and appeared ambitious to acquire for the State he in part represents here, the honor of granting that which he now withholds. And what greater power has New York to dispense with locality than we? But, sir, does any one imagine that, if that munificent State were now granting this charter, she would deem it necessary to inquire if all the objects of its charity resided within her territory, or consider it in any degree essential to provide that its favors should not extend beyond it?

Mr. McL. said, he could not dismiss this part of the subject, without adverting to the law incorporating the Columbian College within this District, and in which, it might not be improper to observe, though it was not at all material, that not a single member of the corporation was at the time a resident therein. He referred to the case of the college as an instance illustrative at once of the nature of our power, and the discrimination between the exercise of the corporate functions and the fruits of their exercise. In that case, it was deemed sufficient that the college should be located, and its powers performed here; but it was clearly foreseen that most of its objects must be necessarily exterior, and that all might be so. No one was weak enough to imagine, that only the youth of this District would be educated in this Seminary. It was the offspring of a more liberal and enlightened policy. The object avowed by its founders, and which prevailed with Congress, was to bring hither the youths of every part of our country, to plant in their minds the seeds of future distinction; to instruct them in the principles of science and the history of their Government; to return them again to the bosom of their respective States, to spread the influence of their example, and become the ornaments of the nation and the expounders of its rights. You confined the means of acquiring these accomplishments here, but you designed that their fruits should be widely disseminated.

And where is the difference, in fact, between that institution and the one you are now asked to incorporate? You bring, said he, to your college incorporation, the youth from a distant quarter, and fill his mind with knowledge and virtue; and to the Naval Association you invite the widow and orphan of the man who has fallen in the battles of his country, and supply them with food and raiment; you give them a husband and a father. You open here two fountains—one of learning, and the other of charity—and may not those who require either come and be refreshed at their streams? If you open here the springs of science, may you not provide the means by which the fatherless orphan may go and buy their waters? To drop the figure, if you can incorporate a college, at which the youth of any part of the Union may be educated, that youth may be the son of a man who has died in your defence, and may you not incorporate a company to supply him with the means of paying for his education?

Mr. McL. then proceeded to notice some of the objections which had been urged against the bill, as it respected its influence upon the discipline of the Navy. He thought all the fears of gentlemen on this score were groundless, and he had already shown that the force of the by-laws could never counteract the higher obligation to the laws of the service. The first duty of a soldier, said he, is to his country, and you cherish his obedience to this, when you associate with it his pride and all the finer feelings of the man. If you make it contribute to the protection of the dearest objects of his affections, you secure it his devotion in life, and you blunt the last agony of his dying moments.

H. OF R.

Naval Fraternal Association.

JANUARY, 1823.

Sir, said Mr. McL., if you possess the power and the object be so laudable, you are bound by considerations the most sacred to grant this charter: you cannot with any propriety refuse it, much less can you refer these officers elsewhere. To whom else should they apply? To which of all the States are they to go? That which is not within the peculiar province of any one, is generally neglected by all. These officers, moreover, being exclusively in the employment of the United States, are, to most purposes, disconnected with the State authorities, and it might be a matter of delicacy for a State Legislature to interfere with your concerns. They must, therefore, come to you, of whose jurisdiction they are the peculiar objects. They belong exclusively to your service; they brave the battle and the storm for you; they are the means by which you give protection to the country; they devote their time and labor for you, and it is the scanty savings from that labor which they design to have protected for the most benevolent purposes. They bear the proud insignia of your power; they carry your eagles in triumph over the main; they sustain your banner in every sea, and spill their blood in your defence; and if you refuse them this favor, on whom else have they claims of equal obligation?

And why, sir, will you not grant a boon so humble to you, but so consolatory to them? They do not solicit you to create an institution by which they are to grow rich and powerful; they reap, personally, no emolument from the association. You are not establishing a moneyed incorporation to increase the swollen circulation of bank paper; you have done all this before; but you are raising up the Goddess of Charity, who is to diffuse her beneficence over all parts of your empire. It is a perversion of terms for gentlemen to call it a terrible engine, that is to sweep away our liberties, and carry desolation in its train! No, sir; it is a mild and charitable spirit, which springs up after the genius of desolation has spread its havoc far and wide, and clears away its ravages; it comes to heal the broken heart, and administer comfort to those who are the real sufferers by war and pestilence. The warrior who lies cold on the deck of your ship, or buried in the wave of the ocean, feels no longer the pang of separation; his brave soul has been poured out in his country's cause, or offered upon the altar of her service, and is insensible to the fame which follows his actions, or the misery produced by his death. The real calamities of war fall upon the survivors; on those who live to mourn his fall, and struggle with the anguish of wretched poverty and desolated affections; the widowed mother and her numerous offspring, whom, in the midst of penury and want, the eye of a cold world can never reach; and it is these to whom the charity of this association is to administer consolation. It proposes to snatch the orphan of your deceased officer from the abode of want and misery, and furnish him with the means of support; to train him up in the paths of honor and virtue, and teach him to deserve and emulate the fame of his sire. Sir, said Mr. McLANE, I had rather be the means, by my vote on this bill, of contributing to the attainment of such objects, than the author of all the banks Congress has ever incorporated.

When Mr. Mc L. had concluded—

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, spoke against the bill.

Mr. FORWARD, also, against it.

Mr. RUGGLES, after a few remarks, offered the following additional section as an amendment:

"And be it further enacted, That this act shall not be construed to have any further force, authority, or effect, out of the District of Columbia, than acts of incorporation granted by the Legislature of any one of the United States ought to have in any other of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to—58 to 53.

Mr. WOOD then spoke against it.

Mr. HEMPHILL, of Pennsylvania, said, he was in favor of the bill; as to its laudable object it was not worth while to say any thing; there appeared to be a concurrence of sentiment and feeling upon it. The bill was principally opposed on Constitutional grounds. Some, it was true, entertained doubts as to its expediency. If he understood the objection, it was, that the beneficial effects of the bill would be exterior to the District. The officers, it was said, did not reside in the District; but he believed that it was not denied that a due proportion lived within its limits. A legislative body should always have an eye to the interest of those for whom it was legislating.

Objects entirely exterior and unconnected with any interest, would not fall within the ordinary scope of legislation; while objects solely interior, would be the peculiar subject of legislation. But there were mixed cases, where the benefits of the law would be partly exterior and partly interior. In such cases, how can you draw any Constitutional line? In relation to these cases, it never can be a question of Constitutional power, but a mere question of expediency. The legislative body will decide, whether the interest to its constituents is sufficient to lay the foundation of a law.

Banks in the District are of this description: their benefits may extend beyond its limits; the stockholders, who are entitled to the dividends, may reside any where in the Union. The Columbian College is of a similar character; the youths who receive their education at this institution, may come from any part of the United States. In all such cases there can be no Constitutional line; it must be discretionary. If a law should be passed on an object which was too remote, it would be no more than bad legislation.

One thing ought to be conceded, and that is, that the power of Congress over this District is equal to that of a State Legislative body within its jurisdiction. Congress has within this District the right of exclusive legislation: Nothing could be more ample or supreme. Legislative bodies will look even beyond the limits of their own States. The Legislature both of Pennsylvania and Maryland, created incorporations to make a canal from the Chesapeake to the Delaware. It would be perfectly immaterial, who subscribed for the stock, or where they lived; the functions of the corporations, it is true, must be performed in the respective States, as a State could not create a corporative body out of its own jurisdiction. If the canal, I have alluded to, had been perfected, its benefits would not have been confined to the States of Pennsylvania and Maryland; the United States, particularly, in a time of war, would have received incalculable advantages from it.

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Could not a State pass such a bill as the one on the table? Every State has its interest in the Navy; and it would be discretionary whether it would allow of such a corporation within its jurisdiction. A local legislative body in this District would have a similar power; and could not such a legislative body follow the examples of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and incorporate a company to improve the navigation of the Potomac? and would it be material where the stockholders lived, or what the advantages would be to sections of the Union beyond the limits of the District? What more persuasive argument could be urged, in favor of the law, than that it would not only be beneficial to the District, but to the Union at large? If a law is to be considered unconstitutional, because its advantages spread beyond the limits of the District, there could be neither a road or a canal constructed in this place. The roads here are convenient and necessary for the National Legislature.

As to State rights, I am as friendly to them, as a citizen of the Union ought to be. We must consider that we are citizens of the United States, as well as citizens of the particular State to which we belong; and that it is as much our duty to protect the rights of the General Government, as it is to protect the rights of the States. There is, however, a peculiar incident in this case, that has not been observed, and that is, that the friends of the bill, are, on this occasion, the supporters of State rights.

It has been remarked, that the location of the corporation will not be in this District, as its functionaries will principally reside out of the District. On this head, it is only necessary to reply, that its functions are all to be performed here, and that is the test of locality, and not residency.

It must be acknowledged, that if the law passes, a corporation will be created, and that the corporation must be located somewhere. A simple question will solve this difficulty. Where is the location of the corporation, if it is not in this District?

If a State could pass such a law, why should the right be denied to a local legislative body of this District—the people of this District? What is the object of this bill? Is it not for the encouragement of the Navy: for the benefit of a National Establishment, which, on account of its gallantry, has become one of the proudest ornaments of the country? The creation of a fund for the relief of the widows and children of deceased officers, is merely the means by which the grand object of the bill is to be carried into effect. And are not the people of this District as much interested in the welfare of the Navy, as any other portion of the Union? It is upon the same principle that a State legislative body would act. It is on the same principle on which the General Government acts, in the establishment of navy hospitals.

Mr. HEMPHILL said he had other remarks to make on the expediency of the bill, but that, being indisposed, he should decline proceeding any further.

Mr. FULLER spoke in reply to the opponents of the bill.

The question recurring on the engrossment of the bill for a third reading, the yeas and nays were taken, and stood—yeas 65, nays 91, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen of Massachusetts, Barstow, Baylies, Bayly, Bigelow, Brown, Burrows, Cambreleng, Carter, Cassedy, Condict, Cook, Cushman, Cuthbert, Dane, Darlington, Dickinson, Durfee, Dwight, Eddy, Edwards of Connecticut, Edwards of Pennsylvania, Farrelly, Findlay, Fuller, Gorham, Hamilton, Harris, Hemphill, Herrick, Hill, Hobart, Holcombe, Ingham, Keyes, Lathrop, Little, McCarty, McKim, McLane, McSherry, Mattocks, Mercer, Moore of Virginia, Neale, Nelson of Massachusetts, Pitcher, Plumer of New Hampshire, Plumer of Pennsylvania, Reed of Massachusetts, Reid of Georgia, Rogers, Ruggles, Russ, Sterling of New York, J. Stephenson, Swan, Tattnall, Taylor, Tod, Van Rensselaer, Warfield, White, and Williamson—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbot, Alexander, Allen of Tennessee, Archer, Barber of Connecticut, Barber of Ohio, Bassett, Bateman, Blackledge, Borland, Buchanan, Burton, Butler, Campbell of New York, Campbell of Ohio, Cannon, Chambers, Cocke, Conkling, Crafts, Crudup, Denison, Edwards of North Carolina, Eustis, Floyd, Forrest, Forward, Garnett, Gebhard, Gilmer, Govan, Gross, Hardin, Harvey, Hawks, Hubbard, Jackson, Jennings, F. Johnson, J. T. Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Jones of Virginia, Kent, Kirkland, Leftwich, Lincoln, Litchfield, McCoy, McNeill, Matlack, Matson, Metcalfe, Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Morgan, Murray, Nelson of Virginia, Patterson of New York, Patterson of Pennsylvania, Phillips, Pierson, Randolph, Reed of Maryland, Rhea, Rich, Rochester, Rodney, Ross, Russell, Sanders, Sloane, Arthur Smith, Alexander Smyth, W. Smith, A. Stevenson, Stoddard, Thompson, Tomlinson, Tracy, Trimble, Tucker of Virginia, Tucker of South Carolina, Udree, Upham, Vance, Van Wyck, Walworth, Whipple, Williams of Virginia, Williams of North Carolina, Wilson, Wood, and Woodson—91.

And so the said bill was rejected.

THURSDAY, January 9.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which the subject was referred by resolution of the 9th ultimo, reported a bill authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to correct mistakes in entries of land; which was read twice and committed to the Committee of the Whole to which is committed the bill to establish an additional land office in the Territory of Michigan.

Mr. SLOANE, from the Committee on Elections, made a report, declaring the legality of the credentials of Mr. UDREE, Mr. McKIM, and Mr. HAMILTON, members of this House; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The resolution of Mr. INGHAM, yesterday laid on the table, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to report a statement of the bonds out standing on the 1st December, 1822, and falling due in 1823, with the amount of debentures chargeable thereon, and the expense of collection; a statement of the amount of bonds outstanding on the 1st January, 1821, and at the commencement of each quarter during that year, with the debentures chargeable on the same in the respective periods; the amount of revenue from customs which may accrue in 1823, and what portion may be received in the course of that year, stating the average amount which has been received on the customs accrued within each year since 1816, inclusive; a statement of the whole amount of the unexpended balance of the sinking fund, distinguishing each year since 1817, and on what principle he distinguishes the balances that will accrue against that fund in 1823 and '24 from those of preceding years, by which he proposes to charge the estimated unexpended balances of 1823 and '24 upon the revenues of 1825; was considered and adopted.

Mr. CAMBRELENG rose and said, that, when the resolution relating to the case of Mrs. Denny was yesterday adopted by the House, his colleague (Mr. MORGAN) was not aware that he (Mr. C.) had then in his possession a petition and document upon that subject, which he had been prevented from presenting by a rule of the House, he would now ask leave to present it.

Leave being granted—

Mr. C. presented the petition of Penelope Denny. Mrs. Denny, he said, had a double claim on the liberality and justice of the nation; she was the widow of a Revolutionary officer and the mother of James Denny, late a quarter gunner of the United States schooner Alligator, who fell at the side of his gallant commander. Accompanying the petition was a certificate of General Robert Swartwout, stating that the deceased, during his life time, had appropriated the half of his pay to support his aged and destitute mother. While the House were passing a bill for the relief of the mother and sister of his commander, it would not dishonor the memory of a brave man, if it should be accompanied by a bill for extending the same justice to the mother of an humble but gallant sailor.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion of Mr. EUSTIS, a select committee was appointed to inquire whether any legislative provision is necessary to effect a final adjustment of the accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins, Esquire, relative to advances made to and disbursements made by him, during the late war; and Mr. EUSTIS, Mr. TRIMBLE, Mr. McKIM, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. HAMILTON, were appointed the said committee.

On motion of Mr. RANKIN, a committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of assigning to the Territory of Arkansas, such limits as shall constitute the limits of any State hereafter to be formed from said territory; and of preventing settlements on the lands of the United States, or Indian lands, west of those limits, and that the said Committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise; and Mr. RANKIN, Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. RICH, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. SLOANE, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. JOHN T. JOHNSON, were appointed said committee.

The engrossed bill "to confirm certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois," was read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

The bills from the Senate for the relief of Daniel Seward, Amos Nicholls, and Robert Purdy, were severally twice read, and committed.

A bill from the Senate, "appropriating money for the purpose of repairing the National Road, from Cumberland to Wheeling," was twice read, and committed.

ALTERATION OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. TOD, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported a bill for the more effectual encouragement and protection of certain domestic manufactures, which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole on the state of the Union. The bill is as follows:

A bill for the more effectual encouragement and protection of domestic manufactures.

Be it enacted, &c. That, from and after the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law, on the importation of the articles hereinafter enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, the following duties, that is to say:

First. A duty of thirty per centum ad valorem on all manufactures of wool, or of which wool is a component part: Provided, That all woollen cloths, or cloths of which wool is a component part, excepting blankets, flannels, and worsted or stuff goods, the original cost of which, at the place whence imported, with the addition of ten per centum, shall be less than eighty cents per square yard, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost eighty cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.

Second. A duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem on all manufactures of cotton, silk, flax, or hemp, not herein particularly specified, or of which either of these materials is a component part: Provided, That all cotton cloths, or of which cotton is a component material, (excepting nankeens imported directly from China, and excepting cloths colored or dyed wholly or in part,) the original cost of which, at the place whence imported, with the addition of twenty per centum, if imported from the Cape of Good Hope, or from places beyond it, and of ten per centum, if imported from any other place, shall be less than twenty-five cents per square yard, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost twenty-five cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly. And, that all cotton cloths, or of which cotton is a component part, colored or dyed wholly or in part, the original cost of which, at the place whence imported, with the addition aforesaid, shall be less than thirty-five cents per square yard, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost thirty-five cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly: And that all unbleached and uncolored cotton, twist, yarn, or thread, the original cost of which shall be less than sixty cents per pound, shall be deemed and taken to have cost sixty cents per pound, and shall be charged with duty accordingly: And all bleached or colored yarn, twist, or thread, the original cost of which shall be less than seventy-five cents per pound, shall be taken and deemed to have cost seventy-five cents per pound, and shall be charged with duty accordingly: And, provided, also, That all linen or hempen cloths, or cloths of which flax or hemp is a component material, not herein particularly specified, the cost of which at the place whence imported, with the addition of ten per centum, shall be less than twenty-five cents per square yard, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost twenty-five cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.

JANUARY, 1823.

Alteration of the Tariff.

H. OF R.

A duty of thirty per centum ad valorem on nankeens.

Third. A duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem on printing-types, brass wire, cutlery, pins, needles, buttons, button moulds, buckles of all kinds, japanned wares of all kinds, cannon, muskets, fire-arms, and side-arms, and on all manufactures, not herein specified, made of brass, iron, steel, pewter, lead, or tin, or of which any of these metals is a component material.

A duty of forty per centum ad valorem, on all Leghorn and silk hats; Provided, That, if the cost of the same, at the place whence imported, with the addition of ten per centum, shall be less than one dollar each, they shall be deemed and taken to have cost one dollar each, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.

The following duties severally and specifically:

On lead, in pigs, bars, or sheets, two cents per pound;

On leaden shot, three cents per pound;

On red or white lead, dry or ground in oil, four cents per pound;

On hemp, two and a quarter cents per pound;

On tarred cables and cordage, four cents per pound;

On untarred cordage, yarns, twine, pack-thread, and seines, five cents per pound;

On linseed and hempseed oil, twenty-five cents per gallon;

On wool, — cents per pound;

On copperas, two cents per pound;

On iron, in bars and bolts, not manufactured, in whole or in part, by rolling, one dollar per hundred weight;

On round iron or braziers' rods, of three-sixteenths to eight-sixteenths of an inch diameter, inclusive, three dollars per hundred weight;

On slit iron, in nail or spike rods, three dollars per hundred weight;

On iron, in sheets or hoops, three dollars per hundred weight;

On iron spikes, three cents per pound;

On nails, five cents per pound;

On iron or steel wire, not exceeding number eighteen, five cents per pound; and over eighteen, nine cents per pound.

On plough places, or share moulds, one and a half cents per pound;

On anvils, two cents per pound;

On iron cables, or chains, or parts thereof, three cents per pound; and no drawback shall be allowed on the exportation of iron cables, or parts thereof;

On spades and shovels, two dollars and fifty cents per dozen;

On screws, manufactured of iron or brass, weighing twenty-five pounds and upwards, fifteen cents per pound;

On screws of iron, for wood, called wood screws, not exceeding one inch in length, eight cents per groce; over one inch, and not exceeding two inches in length, fourteen cents per groce; over two inches in length, twenty cents per groce;

On all wares, of flint glass, of whatever description, cut or uncut, a duty of six cents per pound, and in addition thereto, an ad valorem duty of twenty per centum;

On window glass, not above eight inches by ten inches in size, three dollars per hundred square feet; not above ten inches by twelve inches in size, three dollars and twenty-five cents per hundred square feet; and if above ten inches by twelve inches in size, three dollars and seventy-five cents per hundred square feet.

On black glass bottles, two dollars per groce;

On all other articles of glass, five cents per pound;

On Russia duck, per piece of fifty-two archeens, two dollars;

On Ravens duck, per piece of fifty-two archeens, one dollar and twenty-five cents;

On Holland duck, per piece of fifty-two archeens, two dollars and fifty cents;

On all printing paper, eight cents per pound;

Wrapping paper, six cents per pound;

Colored paper, six cents per pound;

Writing paper, not otherwise described, twelve cents per pound;

Sugar-loaf paper, four cents per pound;

Letter or folio-post paper, fifteen cents per pound;

Bookbinders', bandbox, and sheathing paper, three cents per pound;

On printed paper-hangings, fifteen cents per pound;

On all other paper, six cents per pound.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, in all cases, all articles composed of mixed or various materials, shall pay the highest duty to which articles manufactured from any of such materials are subject.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the — day of —, one thousand eight hundred and twenty —, to the duties on any goods, wares, and merchandise, whatsoever, there shall be added and paid the full amount of such bounty or premium, or allowance in nature thereof, as on the exportation of similar articles may be given, paid, or allowed, in the place or country whence the same shall be exported, or in the place or country wherein the same shall be produced or manufactured, which shall be calculated and ascertained under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time prescribe.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That an addition of ten per centum shall be made to the several rates of duties hereby imposed upon the several articles aforesaid, which, after the said thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, shall be imported in ships or vessels not of the United States: Provided, That this addition shall not apply to articles imported in ships or vessels not of the United States, entitled by treaty or by any act of Congress to be admitted on payment of the same duties that are paid on like articles imported in ships or vessels of the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed a drawback of the duties by this act imposed, upon the exportation of any articles that shall have paid the same, within the time and in the manner, and subject to the restrictions, prescribed in the fourth section of the act, entitled "An act to regulate the duties on imports and tonnage," passed the twenty-seventh day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixteen.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the existing laws shall extend to and be in force for the collection of the duties imposed by this act, for the prosecution and punishment of all offences, and for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission, of all fines, penalties, and forfeitures, as fully and effectually as if every regulation, penalty, forfeiture, provision, clause, matter, and thing, to that effect in the existing laws contained, had been inserted in and re-enacted by this act.

ROAD FROM OHIO TO MICHIGAN.

The House then, on motion of Mr. VANCE, took up the bill to appropriate a certain quantity of land to defray the charge of laying out and making a road from the mouth of the Miami of Lake Erie to the Connecticut Reserve.

Mr. VANCE delivered, more at length than heretofore, the views which he entertained of the importance of the measure proposed by the bill. He stated facts showing the enormous charge of transportation of supplies from Ohio to Michigan, during the late war, for the want of a passable road. He replied to anticipated objections, on the score of the value of the land proposed to be applied to this object. The whole quantity to be granted to the purpose, he estimated at 57,000 acres, worth, at the minimum price, $72,000, but in fact worth much less to the United States, from its inaccessibility. He did not believe, however, it was worth, in the market, more than sixty-two and a half cents per acre, which would make only an amount of $36,000 to be applied to this great object. He hoped it would not be considered a heresy in politics to state that the Northwestern frontier was equally entitled to protection with other parts of the United States. If this land was in reality worth two dollars and a half per acre, it would amount only to a total of one hundred and forty-four thousand dollars, which was a very small amount, certainly, compared with the magnitude of the object of protecting that frontier by this military road. In addition to all these arguments of expediency and necessity, in favor of this measure, there is, he said, a treaty stipulation by which the United States have bound themselves to make the road, (referring to the Treaty of Brownstown;) and he made some statements to show that the Indians, who were parties to that treaty, were desirous the road should be made. There was such a disposition to impute to the Western members interested motives, in regard to all measures concerning public lands, he had rather ask this as a matter of right, under the treaty, than as a matter of favor. But, in the name of the people of Michigan, though there had been no treaty, he would ask the passage of this bill as a matter of justice as well as favor to the people of Michigan, to connect them with the settled parts of the United States. As respects the State of Ohio, though somewhat interested in the road, it was much less so than the people of Michigan. Nor was the whole Union less interested in it. The defeat at Frenchtown, during the late war, was occasioned by the want of it, from the impracticability of uniting the different detachments of the army, and during the whole war there was much waste of life and treasure from the same cause. Mr. V. added other remarks illustrative of these positions.

After moving an amendment, which was agreed to by the House—

Mr. SIBLEY, the Delegate from Michigan, also spoke in favor of the bill, in which he said his constituents were deeply interested, separated as they were from the rest of the United States, and in a manner isolated from the Territory with which they are particularly connected. He first adverted to the provision of the treaty, held under the authority of the United States, wherein a grant of the land for the road, and of a mile deep on each side of it, was made by the Indians to the United States, on the condition and for the purpose of making this road. Since that time the remainder of the territory had been ceded by the Indians to the United States, but nothing had been done by the United States towards making the road. The interest of the Government, in making this road, with a view to military operations, Mr. S. said, was in fact much greater than the local interest in it. It was a portion of the territory of the United States, weaker, more exposed, and more likely to fall into the hands of an enemy during war than any other. During a war, (with Great Britain, should it ever again happen,) it would be of the first importance to make this point safe; and to do this securely, the population of the adjacent States, on which its defence must greatly depend, ought to have the means of concentrating its strength, the want of which means was so severely felt during the late war. Mr. S. added other arguments in support of the bill; such as that the road is necessary to secure any thing like a regular transportation of the mail; that the Michigan Territory must people slowly until an access is opened to it, without being obliged, as was now necessary at some seasons of the year, to go through foreign territory to get to it. Thus, Mr. S. said, supposing there was no right derived from the treaty, the object was of the utmost importance, and the bill proposed no new principle. Lands had been often granted by Congress for objects of much less importance, and, as for this land, it would be of no value to the United States until a road was made, and it became worth the trouble to drain it. The quantity of land proposed to be allotted to this purpose would not, in his opinion, be sufficient to accomplish it, but it was probable that, by the aid of this grant, those who were interested would be able to complete the work.

Mr. COCKE said, that a reference to almost every treaty with the Indians, for twenty years past, would exhibit provisions for roads in almost every direction. It was no new thing to prevail upon the Indians to give their consent to have a road made. The Indians are pressed into the measure; and it was the first time he had ever heard it suggested that the Indians were desirous of having a highway through their lands. Such an idea was contrary to their nature; their pursuits are repugnant to it. He could not therefore yield to the argument, in favor of this bill, that the Indians are desirous to see the road made. He did not understand, he said, how the making of a road through it was to drain the swamp, and he wished for information on that head. And why were the United States to pay for making this road any more than roads in other parts of the country? Were the people of Michigan so regardless of their interest that they would not make a road to lead to their Territory? If it was necessary to appropriate this land to this object, for the benefit of the people of Michigan, why was it to be given to the State of Ohio? Why not let Michigan have it? No, Mr. C. said, let us keep it in our hands, that we may ourselves regulate the matter, if the road is to be made. He was obliged to the gentleman for the suggestion that the proceeds of the land would not be sufficient to make the road. This bill would then be but a beginning. And, said he, once enter the wedge, and you will not get clear of it for ten years to come. Mr. C. concluded by requiring the yeas and nays on the question of ordering this bill to a third reading.

JANUARY, 1823.

Road from Ohio to Michigan.

H. OF R.

Mr. LITTLE said that, to any measure calculated to promote the prosperity and happiness of any section of our country, and not impairing the rights of any body, he felt himself bound to give his support. That the public is greatly interested in the measure proposed by this bill, had been sufficiently shown. The treasure of the country, as well as its blood, had been wasted for want of the road. His reflection on the subject, too, had induced him to believe, that it was in consequence of the access being so difficult, that the Michigan country had filled up so slowly. It was an inconvenience which ought to be remedied; that, in order to get into the United States, it was for one half of the year necessary for the people of Michigan to pass through the territory of a nation with whom we have already had two wars, and with whom he should not be surprised to live to see a third. It was no reason against this bill, that application might be hereafter made from other quarters for similar grants. This is not the first grant which has been made for similar purposes, but no grant had been made for any as important. The facts which had been stated respecting the evils suffered in the late war for want of this road were undoubted; and Mr. L. hoped that, on further consideration, the gentleman from Tennessee would withdraw his opposition to the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, said that he knew very little of the merits of this question, but what he had gathered from the report which accompanied the bill. He was of opinion, however, that this cession ought to be made. In the first place, he said, this land was conveyed to the United States for the express purpose of making the road; and with the same object the land had been surveyed, without any thing further being done upon it. If we choose to give this land, he said, while we do not diminish the funds of the nation, we comply with the condition of the cession to us, and effect a valuable object to the nation. It was, he said, a matter of great importance to the United States, that this road should be made. The country between the Miami river and the Connecticut Reserve is a swamp, often impassable, and intercepts the communication between Michigan and Ohio. Michigan is a frontier country; it adjoins Upper Canada; its population is so small that it cannot defend itself in the event of a war again occurring with the owners of Upper Canada, and must fall, unless a communication be established between it and the more populous parts of our country. It is our interest, therefore, if we wish to hold the Territory of Michigan, to have the road cut. At present, it is understood that the communication to and from Michigan with the United States must, for a considerable portion of the year, be carried on through Upper Canada. Ought we, he asked, to permit our territory to be so dissociated as to have to communicate with it through the medium of a foreign territory? He thought not, and was therefore in favor of this bill.

Mr. HARDIN said that, of the power of Congress to pass this bill, he entertained no doubt. One of the most vulnerable points of our country to an enemy is the Michigan Territory. It has not within itself strength for its defence, and has to call on the neighboring States for succor to repel invasion. Mr. H. adverted to the enormous expense to which the United States were put on that frontier during the late war, which would not have been one-fourth as great had the proposed road then existed. The whole army, when at Fort Meigs, &c., had to be supplied by transportation on horses for a hundred or a hundred and fifty miles, so that every barrel of flour consumed had cost the United States some fifty dollars per barrel. It was important, therefore, that a direct intercourse should be opened between the settled country and that part of our territory. There could be no objection, in a Constitutional view, to making this road, in the character of a military road. As to the expediency of the road, Mr. H. said, he entertained no doubt. The two vulnerable points of our country are Florida and Michigan. Mr. H. said, he wished to see them strengthened as much as possible and as fast as possible. He also adverted to the increased value which would be given to the lands of the United States in that quarter by the increased facility of access. There was but one objection to the bill, that he could see. It was this: that, if we cede the land to the State of Ohio, and she does not make the road, we shall have no power to get it back again. But, Mr. H. said, he had so much confidence in the integrity of the State of Ohio, that he was willing to pass the bill without a clause providing for its reversion in such case. He had no doubt the State of Ohio would lay out every cent of the proceeds of the sales of the lands in making or repairing the road. This case being clearly distinguishable from the exercise of the general power of internal improvement, as contemplating a military road, he hoped his friend from Tennessee would withdraw his opposition, and let the bill pass by a unanimous vote. He hoped, too, when the question regarding the Cumberland road came up, to witness the same spirit of unanimity in its favor, which was to be seen on this occasion.

H. OF R.

Road from Ohio to Michigan.

JANUARY, 1823.

MR. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, rose, not so much to urge arguments in support of the bill, as to notice a remark which fell from the gentleman who had just taken his seat, as to what might be the conduct of the State of Ohio in regard to the road. A year ago, Mr. C. said, the Legislature of Ohio had passed an act on this subject, in which she had evinced her willingness to take upon herself the trouble and expense of making this road, if the right of the United States to the land in question were ceded to her. He did not pretend to say that this road would not be an advantage to the State of Ohio, but it would be of more importance to the interests of the Union generally. The country in which this road lies is one of the most valuable in the Union, and as little had been done for it, as for any section of the Union. On this point he would only observe, he said, that so great was his zeal to increase the population of the Peninsula of Michigan, he was willing to vote even two or three hundred thousand acres of land to those who would settle it, or he would sell the land at fifty cents per acre if it would induce a settlement of it. He would use every means to accomplish an object so desirable. On the score of money, which was said to be the sinew of war, much that was expended during the late war, would have been saved, had the proposed road then existed; and the petitions even at this day presented by the delegate from that Territory remind us in what condition the fortune of war has once placed it. In a pecuniary point of view, Mr. C. said, the House could not err in passing this bill. As far as he knew the sentiment of the State of Ohio, she would take a deep interest in making the road. Mr. C. examined the treaty-provision respecting this road, which, he argued, did not assimilate itself to the general treaty provisions respecting roads, adverted to by Mr. Cocke, inasmuch as those provisions were inserted to accommodate the United States, and to be executed at our pleasure, whilst in this case the stipulation was obligatory and binding on the United States. The population of Upper Canada, Mr. C. said, had greatly increased in consequence of the liberality of the British Government to settlers. That Government considers its possessions in that quarter vulnerable; but they are not as vulnerable as ours. Whilst they are increasing their strength in that direction, ought we not to be increasing ours? Any course different from this must be a blind one, and such as the Government ought not to pursue. The gentleman from Tennessee had said, if the people of Michigan are interested, let them make the road. But, Mr. C. asked, will their physical means enable them to make it? They are interested in the road, it is true; but there is no population in the Union of ten thousand souls able to make a road of forty-five miles in length through such a swamp as that. They are already weighed down with taxation, and are perhaps the most oppressed people under the Government of the United States. In answer to the remark that, if this bill passed, application would be hereafter made to the United States for further aid to complete the road, Mr. C. said, when those applications were made it would be the duty of Congress to act upon them as should appear to be right. They must stand or fall on their own merits or demerits. If rightful, they would be granted; if otherwise, they would be rejected.

MR. FARRELY observed, that he lived on the Northwestern frontier, and rose to communicate facts, which every one on that frontier must know. Michigan was, without doubt, the most exposed point, and also the weakest of the Union. The Territory was inhabited by numerous nations of Indians, who had been accustomed to war with the people of the United States. From the close of the war of the Revolution down to the defeat of General Wayne, they were in a state of continual hostility. During the late war, they desolated that Territory; and, in case of any rupture between us and the British Government, we know, from the experience of the past, on which side they will be engaged. If the Territory of Michigan were able to protect itself during the late war, what a saving it would have been to the nation in treasure and blood; the Kentucky militia would not have been massacred—which happened after they passed that swamp. It is an object of the greatest importance to the United States to encourage the population of Michigan, which has been hitherto kept down by the impracticability of going to it. By passing the bill, the United States will secure the most important advantages. I know it to be a fact, that the merchants of the place where I reside, and generally of the district I represent, who have commercial relations with Detroit, have to go there and return, at some seasons of the year, through Upper Canada, in consequence of the obstacles opposed by the Black Swamp. The United States fleet has disappeared on Lake Erie; and it is of the utmost importance to strengthen the interior of the country, which has not resources itself to make this road.

MR. SIBLEY again rose. There was, he said, in reply to Mr. Cocke, no want of patriotism and liberality in the Territory of Michigan. He mentioned large appropriations of money which they had had to make for roads, of which the United States were deriving the benefit; and also that there was a road of considerable length which the Territory would have to make to meet the very road embraced in this bill. He appealed to the House whether Michigan, who had been doing her utmost to connect herself with the rest of the Union, ought to be expected to make this road.

The question was then taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and decided—yeas 130, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbot, Allen of Massachusetts, Allen of Tennessee, Archer, Barber of Connecticut, Bar-

9 JANUARY, 1823.

Disciplining the Militia.

H. OF R.

ber of Ohio, Bateman, Baily, Bigelow, Borland, Brown, Buchanan, Burrows, Butler, Cambreleng, Campbell of New York, Campbell of Ohio, Cannon, Carter, Casseidy, Chambers, Conkling, Cook, Crafts, Crudup, Cushman, Dane, Denison, Dickinson, Durfee, Dwight, Eddy, Edwards of Connecticut, Edwards of Pennsylvania, Farrelly, Findlay, Forrest, Forward, Fuller, Govan, Hardin, Harris, Harvey, Hemphill, Hill, Holcombe, Hooks, Hubbard, Ingham, Jackson, Jennings, F. Johnson, J. T. Johnson, Jones of Virginia, Jones of Tennessee, Kent, Keyes, Kirkland, Lathrop, Leftwich, Lincoln, Litchfield, Little, McCarty, McKim, McLane, McNeill, McSherry, Mallary, Matlack, Matson, Mattocks, Metcalf, Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Mitchell of South Carolina, Moore of Virginia, Moore of Alabama, Morgan, Murray, Neale, Nelson of Massachusetts, Nelson of Virginia, Newton, Patterson of New York, Patterson of Pennsylvania, Phillips, Pierson, Pitcher, Plumer of New Hampshire, Plumer of Pennsylvania, Reed of Massachusetts, Reed of Maryland, Rhea, Rochester, Rogers, Ross, Ruggles, Russell, Saunders, Scott, Sloane, William Smith, Spencer, Sterling of Connecticut, Sterling of New York, J. Stephenson, Stewart, Swan, Tattall, Taylor, Thompson, Tod, Tomlinson, Tracy, Trimble, Tucker of Virginia, Tucker of South Carolina, Udree, Upham, Vance, Van Rensselaer, Walker, Walworth, Whipple, White, Williamson, Wilson, Wood, Woodcock, and Woodson.

NAYS—Messrs. Alexander, Bassett, Blackledge, Burton, Cocke, Condict, Conner, Edwards of North Carolina, Garnett, Gilmer, Gorham, Hawks, McCoy, Rich, Rodney, Russ, Arthur Smith, Stoddard, Van Wyck, Williams of Virginia, and Williams of North Carolina.

So the bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

DISCIPLINING THE MILITIA.

The House then, on motion of Mr. CANNON, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to provide for disciplining the militia of the United States.

After some conversation between Mr. J. SPEED SMITH and Mr. CANNON, on the subject of amendments to the bill; and Mr. ARTHUR SMITH having moved an amendment to the bill to limit the proposed encampments to once in two years, instead of once in each year—

Mr. CANNON, of Tennessee, said he felt it his duty to ask the indulgence of the Committee of the whole House while he would endeavor to give some of the views of the select committee who had reported the bill under consideration; also, some of the opinions he himself entertained on the subject. It was a subject, he said, that heretofore had not been thought unworthy of the attention of the greatest and most distinguished statesmen of our country. It had been pressed with great zeal and ability on the attention of the first Congress of the United States, by him who had passed through the difficulties, and encountered the dangers of the Revolution; who had powerfully aided in the establishment of our independence; who was called to the highest office in the gift of the people, and who has been justly indeed called the Father of his Country. It was WASHINGTON, who, in this early period of our Government, thought this a subject of the highest importance. He felt and expressed to Congress, during his administration, a constant solicitude to see the militia of the United States placed on an efficient establishment, as did also Mr. Jefferson, during his administration: he repeatedly urged on the consideration of Congress the improvement of this great force; and expressed his reliance on them for national defence; and Mr. Madison, throughout the whole of his administration, had also urged upon the consideration of Congress, with great force and unexampled zeal, the necessity of arming, organizing, and disciplining the militia; and, after the close of the late war, with all the experience it had afforded, he expressed his entire confidence in this great means of national defence, for the preservation of the principles of our Constitution. These high authorities, he thought, ought to be sufficient, at this time, to entitle the subject to the serious consideration of the Committee. Were it necessary, others could be given. He said since the time he was first honored with a seat in the House, the subject had, at different times, been brought up; committees had been appointed, had acted on it, and systems reported to the House, but never fully examined or discussed. He remembered that a distinguished member from the State of Ohio (Mr. HARRISON) had evinced a deep interest in the improvement of the militia; while a member from that State some years past, and as chairman of a committee, he reported a general system, but did not succeed in its adoption by the House. Indeed, every effort which had been made since the origin of our Government to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution, in relation to this great object, has been defeated; no provision whatever has yet been made for the discipline of the militia; not one dollar has yet been appropriated in this way for our national defence, our Constitutional defence, and chief reliance; while on our auxiliary defences, regular Army, Navy Fortifications, and Military Academy, we are expending six or seven millions every year.

With this experience before us, had we viewed this as a subject of only ordinary importance, we might have been deterred from presenting to the House this bill, or even attempting to draw the attention of the Committee to its investigation. But, sir, said Mr. C., the principle contained in the bill now before us, is not one of ordinary character; it is one of the highest importance that ever has or ever can come before this body, whether it is seen in a military or a political point of view. He said, the entire control over the militia, in relation to this subject, was not given to the General Government. This would appear by reference to a clause in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States. Here, he said, the power was given to Congress "to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress." Thus, he said, it was evident Congress could not carry fully into effect any system providing for the discipline of the militia, independent of the State governments; and the system now proposed, contemplated the acceptance, by the Legislatures of the respective States, as well as provisions adopted by them to carry it into effect. He had no doubt every State in the Union would readily accept the provisions of this system, because it offered to pay their militia officers for the time necessarily devoted to the acquisition of military science. This, he thought, would be a sufficient inducement to insure its acceptance by all the States.

H. of R.

Disciplining the Militia.

JANUARY, 1823.

He then begged leave to call the attention of the Committee to the general provisions of the bill, which he briefly enumerated. As to the expense of the system, he said it was impossible to arrive at any thing like certainty or precision, though he had taken great pains to be enabled to give the House the most correct information that was practicable, or could be arrived at by calculation; the whole of which he submitted to the Committee, in the fullest confidence that they would bear the test of a fair and impartial examination. He said the whole number of the militia of the United States and Territories, agreeably to the latest returns that have been made, (and allowing five thousand for the Territory of Arkansas, from which no return appears to have been received,) amounts to 937,447, which number, divided into captains' companies of 85 each, including officers and non-commissioned officers, gives us 11,028. This number, divided into regiments of eight companies each, as an average number, gives us 1,378 regiments, which, divided into brigades, at an average of five regiments to each brigade, gives us 275 brigades in the whole United States and Territories, which, according to the provisions of the bill, will constitute the same number of 275 encampments as schools of instruction, in which all the commissioned officers, and the brigade and regimental staff of the militia, will be instructed in camp duty, field exercise, and military science. The bill proposes to give to each person ten cents per mile as travelling allowance, for the distance he may reside from the place of encampment, one ration and the following pay per day, during the time they are thus encamped, to wit:

A Brigadier General	-	-	-	$2 50
Aid-de-camps	-	-	-	1 50
Brigade Majors	-	-	-	2 50
Brigade Quartermasters	-	-	-	2 50
Inspectors	-	-	-	2 50
Colonel Commandants	-	-	-	2 00
Lieutenant Colonels	-	-	-	2 00
Majors	-	-	-	2 00
Adjutants	-	-	-	1 50
Regimental Quartermasters	-	-	-	1 50
Sergeant Majors	-	-	-	1 00
Quartermaster Sergeants	-	-	-	1 00
Musicians	-	-	-	1 00
Surgeons	-	-	-	1 50
Paymasters	-	-	-	1 50
Captains	-	-	-	1 50
Lieutenants	-	-	-	1 50
Ensigns	-	-	-	1 50

At this rate, the pay of one brigade encamped would amount to $259 50 cents for one day; the rations, at 20 cents each ration, would amount to $34 40, and the travelling allowance to $258, taking fifteen miles as the average distance each officer lived from the place of encampment, making the total sum of $553 90 cents as the whole expense of each brigade, exclusive of the camp equipage, as provided to be furnished by the bill. Then, agreeable to this calculation, the whole United States, containing 275 brigades, encamped, will cost—

For one day	-	-	-	$152,322 per annum.
Two days	-	-	-	232,595
Three days	-	-	-	313,417
Four days	-	-	-	394,240
Five days	-	-	-	475,062
Six days	-	-	-	555,885

per annum, including the pay, rations, and travelling allowance contemplated by the bill, which provides they shall be encamped for not less than four, nor exceeding six days; then take five days as the medium, it will cost $475,062 to encamp and instruct, agreeably to this system, annually, the militia officers of the United States, being in number estimated at between forty-seven and forty-eight thousand. By this system, military science, he said, would be diffused throughout the whole United States, and the money expended, to carry it into effect, would also be distributed in every State and Territory, agreeably to its number of militia. There would be expended in the State of Tennessee, annually, about	-	$20,000

Virginia	-	47,000
North Carolina	-	23,000
Pennsylvania	-	73,000
New York	-	62,000
Ohio	-	42,000
Kentucky	-	30,000

and in all the other States and Territories in the same proportion, agreeably to their numbers, while in each our military science would be diffused on the same principle of equality for the great purpose of national defence. The expenditures, he said, on the Army, Navy, Fortifications, and Military Academy, for the same object, had been about 7,000,000 per annum; yet he did not believe they were our main reliance for security; they were only the auxiliary means of defence; the militia were the main stay and only safe reliance for the perpetuation of the principles of our Government. But, he said, he did not wish to make this exclusively a military question. It was a great political question, and he wished gentlemen to view it as statesmen; in that way he thought it would have a most potent aspect. What! said he, when we are expending $7,000,000 annually on the Army, Navy, Fortifications, and Military Academy, as auxiliary means of defence, surely no one will object to this comparatively pitiful expenditure, of less than half a million, on our great Constitutional defence. In his opinion, he said, it was much too little; for, if we go on in this course, in making such large expenditures on objects that will not give us security, and at the same time continue to neglect the great bulwark of our safety, what is to be the consequence? I need not point it out, for the reflections of every gentleman must bring him to the same result. The attention of the people is to be drawn from reliance on themselves, so far as the influence of such measures, and those in authority can go; and, while their attention is constantly directed to the Army, Navy, Fortifications, and Military Academy, they are persuaded to forget that they are their own and their country's defenders. But, sir, said he, I hope the time is very far distant when they can be brought to this. When you inquire about the defences of our country of those in authority, you are told of the Army, the Navy, Fortifications, and Military Academy, and these we are told are to diffuse military science to the militia throughout the Union; but, sir, this will never be realized. The science of the Army and the Military Academy is like the light under the bushel, to the militia, or the great body of the people. They are not enlightened in military science from that source. It is partial, and confines this science to a few, while I wish, so far, as it is taught at the public expense, to teach it to the great body of the people. I have been often told, not in the House, but out of it, that nothing can be done, in regard to giving military science to the militia. This doctrine I do not believe in; the experiment has not yet been fairly made; not one single dollar has ever yet been appropriated by the General Government to that object. He thought the public money could be as well applied to national defence in this way as any other; the system he had presented was a simple and easy one to be carried into effect. It only wanted the sanction of Congress, and the appropriation of the money, and the great object would readily be attained. The militia officers of the whole United States would soon be instructed in all the duties required of them in a state of war; and, while in a state of peace, would be constantly in some degree disseminating, to the great mass of the people, the principles by which they are to be governed when called into the public service. This, he confidently believed, would result from the passage of this bill. Though he did not like the details of it in every respect himself, he at the same time was anxious for its adoption. The principle was the great point to be gained. To give discipline by a general and impartial system to all the officers of the militia, would effect every thing necessary; for, when all the officers of an army are acquainted with their duties, all goes on well with the service. He was also in favor of arming this great national force, and during the last session of Congress had introduced a resolution, which was adopted by the House, inquiring into the expediency of increasing the annual appropriation for arming the militia. The resolution was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, who reported against it, on the ground that there was a large amount of the present annual appropriation to that object unexpended. While the appropriation to the regular Army, Fortifications, and Military Academy, could be applied to the fullest extent, and amounting to many millions, the comparatively small appropriation of two hundred thousand dollars, for arming the citizens of our country, could not, it seemed, be applied to that object. This, he said, indicated to him the feelings of those whose duty it was to see our appropriations faithfully and impartially applied to the objects for which they were intended. Such feelings, he feared, prevailed with at least a part of those engaged in the administration of our Government, and he wished, by the adoption of the measure before the Committee, to draw more strongly the attention of the administration of our Government to what he believed to be our great reliance for national defence, and such, he had no doubt, would be the effect of its adoption. There were, he said, many enlarged and important views connected with this great subject, which he declined, at this time, going into. He had stated to the Committee, as briefly as he could, the leading objects and provisions of the bill, and with as much correctness as was in his power, or, as he believed, was in the power of any one, the annual amount of its expense. He wished the members to examine well and reflect on the subject. He contended that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, in relation to this great object, should be carried into effect. He had no doubt the framers of the Constitution as much intended this power should be exercised as any of the other powers given to Congress. This was the object of the bill, which he said was based on the great principles of equality, in relation to the distribution of military science, as well as the expenditure of the money. It would go equally into every State and Territory in the Union, every county, and even into every captain's company. The people will be instructed in military science; then give them arms, and we are fortified at every point, and over every part of our territory, so far as population has extended, or shall extend. He hoped that this Congress would not adjourn, or that the 3d of March would not arrive, before the adoption of this measure, or some other, equally calculated to secure, to the latest period, the great principles of free government and republican liberty. It is true, he said, we are not now threatened with the dangers of war, but if peace is indeed the time to prepare for war, now is the time for the adoption of this measure.

JANUARY, 1823.

Disciplining the Militia.

H. OF R.

Mr. ARTHUR SMITH, of Virginia, moved to amend the bill so as to require the encampments to take place every two years instead of yearly.

Mr. KEYES, of Vermont, proposed to amend the proposed amendment, by adding two years more, so as to have the bill provide for an encampment of officers to take place once in four years. Mr. K. acknowledged his object in making this motion was to destroy the bill under consideration; for he looked upon the passing of it as greatly enhancing the expenses of the United States, without their receiving any benefit in return for this expense. The militia of New England was now well disciplined, and could form column or battalion, and display, from centre or either wing, as circumstances should require; but he did not know how it was in other parts of the Union. But, Mr. K. said, he did not consider the forming column, and displaying, of militia, was of much use; for, all that was, or ought to be required of militia, in his opinion, was, to place them behind trees, stone walls, and breast-works; and learn them to prime, load, take aim, and fire—upon the enemy's fronts, wings, and rear, as occasions should require. And, said Mr. K., this is the best way for militia to fight their enemy. He hoped that this Congress had not forgotten the many great battles of the militia, fought within the United States, since the separation from our mother country; and, said he, being an old soldier, and an old man, he would name a few of them—and commenced with naming, that, in the beginning of the year 1775, the British army, being in the town of Boston, stole a march in the night, and arrived in the town of Lexington early the next morning, murdered, killed, and wounded about twelve men, inhabitants of said town. That, in consequence of this outrage of the British troops, the militia of Massachusetts rallied, fell upon the flanks and rear of the enemy, and ran behind stone walls, trees, and every kind of breast-work, occasionally, as circumstances required, giving them a shot or two, and then running to the next advantageous place, and so on, until they drove the British back to Boston, with great slaughter. And, in June, 1775, the British army passed over from Boston to Charleston, in Massachusetts—burnt the town, and then attacked the New England militia at Bunker's Hill; but here the British ranks were two or three times broken—and in this engagement the militia killed and wounded of the British disciplined army, more than thirty wagon loads. In the year 1777, the British army, passing through our country, under the command of General Burgoyne, the General sent a heavy detachment of the army to destroy the military stores at Bennington, in Vermont; but, before their arrival, they were attacked by the militia of New York, and what then were called the Green Mountain Boys of Vermont and New Hampshire—and they were totally killed, wounded, and dispersed, by the aforesaid militia. Now, Mr. K. said, he would give some account of the United States militia, in the last war. In September, 1814, the British army, from Canada, came against the town of Plattsburg, in the State of New York, to the amount of 14,000 well disciplined troops; but they were turned about by 1,400 of the militia of New York and Vermont, and driven back into Canada. And, further, in the same year, a powerful British army came against New Orleans; but that powerful army and disciplined generals, were astonishingly met by the militia of Kentucky, Tennessee, and our Western Territories, who dropped them down by thousands, and totally destroyed and dispersed them.

Mr. Chairman, said Mr. K., I now will speak of the British army which came against this city, in August, 1814. This army was met at Bladensburg, by the Baltimore militia and the militia of this city, and would have been completely slain and destroyed by them, had not their commander ordered them to retreat. This commander was a man well disciplined in the camp, in the field, and in the woods. After the enemy had burnt the Capitol and what else they chose, they returned to their ships, and sailed to Baltimore; but the brave Baltimore militia, who were commanded to retreat from the battle of Bladensburg, retreated to Baltimore, and there, joined by more of the Baltimore militia, met, with the greatest courage, the enemy, and killed their general and men at such an awful rate, that they were compelled to reembark, and the beautiful city of Baltimore was thus saved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, asked Mr. K., what more do Congress want the militia to do? They have, by the blessing of Heaven, destroyed all your enemies—and would do so again, and again, if our country should hereafter need to be defended by militia. Our militia will not degenerate, but will fight to defend their liberties and rights, as their fathers and grandfathers have done. But, if they will not, after being so much better prepared, both as to numbers of men and every implement of war, then let them be conquered; for, in that case, they would not be worthy to inherit so goodly a land, which has, thus far, been defended for our descendants.

But, Mr. Chairman, pay off your national debts, and not burden the rising generation with heavy taxes, to pay interest and principal, if you have money in the Treasury to spare, and not throw away five or six hundred thousand dollars a year, to discipline men who are now equal, or better than any regular troops in any part of the world. We have beaten the British twice, and I cannot believe that they will ever attempt to fight us again. He hoped this bill would be destroyed.

At this stage of the business, the Committee rose, and the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, January 10.

Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to amend the ordinance and acts of Congress for the government of Michigan, and for other purposes; which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Jacob Shafer; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Private Land Claims were discharged from the further consideration of the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel Seward," and it was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. REED, of Maryland, the Committee of Claims were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing the claim of the representatives of William Lee, who was killed on board the Essex, for his proportion of prize-money, and pay as a seaman.

On motion of Mr. NEALE, the Committee for

JANUARY, 1823.

Disciplining the Militia.

H. OF R.

the District of Columbia were instructed to inquire into the state of the accommodations at present provided for the circuit court for the county of Washington, in said District; and whether any, and, if any, what, provision is necessary to be made for the security of the records of the said court.

The resolution of Mr. WRIGHT, laid on the table on the 20th ultimo, instructing the Military Committee to inquire into the expediency of providing for arming the militia with rifles, was considered and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SIBLEY, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a lighthouse at the foot of Lake Huron, at or near Fort Gratiot, in the Territory of Michigan.

A motion was made by Mr. Cook that the Committee of the Whole to which is committed the bill to authorize the laying out and opening of a road from Wheeling, in the State of Virginia, to the seat of government of the State of Missouri, be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

This motion was decided in the negative; and it was then ordered that the Committee of the Whole, to which the said bill is committed, be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that the said bill be laid on the table.

Mr. McLANE gave notice that, on Wednesday next, he should move to go into Committee of the Whole on the bill for further regulating the duties on imports and tonnage.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act for laying out and making a road from the lower Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie to the western boundary of the Connecticut Western Reserve, in the State of Ohio, agreeably to the provisions of the Treaty of Brownstown," was read the third time, and passed.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act making a partial appropriation for the support of Government for the year 1823." Also, bills, entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others;" and "An act for the relief of Joshua Russell;" in which they ask the concurrence of this House.

Ordered, That, when the House shall adjourn, it will adjourn to meet again on Monday next.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Thomas Carr, and others," was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Joshua Russell," was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports of the Registers of the Land Offices of the Eastern District, and of the district north of Red River, in the State of Louisiana, made in obedience to the 6th section of the act of the 11th of May, 1820, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana;" which were referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

DISCIPLINING THE MILITIA.

The consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill providing for disciplining the militia of the United States, was resumed, when—

Mr. SAUNDERS, of North Carolina, said, he trusted the gentleman from Tennessee, who had reported the bill, would not accuse him of a want of liberality in doing then what he should have done on a previous occasion, but for the purpose of enabling the friends of the measure to render it as perfect in detail as practicable. He thought, from what had already occurred, there was but little reason to believe that they would agree among themselves. And as the gentleman (Mr. CANNON) had gone into the argument in full, he, (Mr. S.,) would at once test the opinion of the Committee, by moving to strike out the enacting words of the bill. In making this motion, Mr. S. said, he must be permitted to say, it was with real reluctance he was induced to engage in a debate on a subject about which, notwithstanding its apparent importance, the Committee seemed to manifest so great an apathy, and feel so much indifference; and nothing could have induced him to have done so, but the circumstance of his holding a military rank in his own State, and being a member of the committee who had reported the bill then under consideration.

Mr. S. said he had no great pretensions to military science, and prudence on that occasion might admonish him not to speak of war in the presence of Ilannibal. He was, however, emboldened in the opinions which he should advance, from the views which had been expressed with so much effect by the venerable soldier of the war of your Revolution and of your rights, (Mr. KEYES,) and by what he understood also to be the opinion of another patriot of former days, (Mr. REED, of Maryland,) then in his eye. The principal arguments which had been urged by the gentleman (Mr. CANNON) in favor of the measure, was his hostility to large standing armies, and the expenditures on the navy, forts, and fortifications. He (Mr. S.) would say to the gentleman that he too was opposed to large standing armies. He would have a standing army, but it should be one merely in miniature, yet perfect in all its parts. It so happens, however, said Mr. S., that we have not at present, nor was it even contemplated to have, a large standing army. It had been greatly reduced, and he presumed it would not be again increased, unless there was some manifest necessity for doing so. If we had a large standing army, then the gentleman's fears might be well-founded, and his reasons entitled to greater credit; but, in the language of Falstaff, there was much virtue in if; and such not being the case, he could not give in to the strength of the arguments urged in support of the measure on this score.

As to the expenditures on the navy, forts, and fortifications, he, Mr. S., would agree with the gentleman so far as to say, that they should keep pace with the advancement and means of the country; that they should follow and not precede those means. These were, however, in Mr. S.'s view, the only objects on which any thing like permanent preparations could be made in time of peace for a state of war. Mr. S. said, that as he did not wish to detain the Committee, he would proceed to offer the considerations which had brought his mind to the conclusion, that the attempt which was proposed by the bill, to impose upon the militia the discipline of regular troops, would lessen their real efficiency and respectability; and an abstract consideration of the nature and qualities of men would satisfy any inquiring mind that such would be the result. It is proposed by the bill, said Mr. S., by way of disseminating military science among the great body of the militia, to collect the officers of each brigade, from the brigadier general down to the sergeants, at some place, to have them encamped for a period not less than four, nor exceeding six days, and drilled by some officer designated for that purpose. This was the principle of the measure; and, said Mr. S., such a camp service and drill as was thus contemplated was what no man of elevated feelings and sentiments would submit to. They knew its uselessness, and would feel disgusted at being ordered for days at a time, "right and left," by some pet in epaulettes, for whom they would feel no personal respect. There was not to be found in service officers upon whom should be imposed these burdens and duties without some adequate advantage to the country. If their duties, labors, and humiliations, were thus to be increased, it would drive those out of service whom it would be worth retaining. They would consent to undergo the drill that was now practised, but they would not leave their families and homes for days at a time for no purpose. The pay might possibly induce a few to remain in service, its novelty might please for a time, but it would exhaust the Treasury, and add nothing to the efficiency or respectability of the militia. It would then be impracticable, said Mr. S., to carry this scheme into effect, because officers could not be found, capable of receiving and imparting information, who would take upon themselves its onerous burdens and duties for effectuating its object. But supposing, said Mr. S., that he might be mistaken in this opinion, and grant that officers could be found, who would be willing to place themselves as so many machines in the hands of this self-created Steuben, for the purpose of becoming versed in all the minutia of tactical evolutions, and still they could not carry this discipline into the great mass of the militia. How many officers of the late war, said Mr. S., had been induced to accept of militia commissions, entered with spirit and zeal upon the task of regular discipline, but soon found their men not disposed to submit to those kind of restraints which were practised among regular troops; and, though they may have effected much, soon discovered the task a vain and fruitless one. The fact was, said

Mr. S., the militia of this country were too free and independent, and he trusted in God they would ever continue so, to submit to that rigor of discipline which was practised in the regular armies, and which might be necessary there to keep up a proper degree of subordination. If, said Mr. S., the situation of the country required these sacrifices—if war threatened their homes—then the militia would be ready to do any thing which the public service might require. In peace, and in a country where every man was equally free, it could not be expected for these things to be effected. It is known to every one that when the militiaman and regular were called to act in concert, the regular felt a pity for him who did not understand that kind of discipline which he knew so perfectly; but the militiaman felt indignant at those restraints and humiliations which were imposed in order to acquire this information. The Emperor of Russia had, to a certain extent, introduced discipline into the great mass of his subjects, but it had been by pushing his authority to its utmost limit; that kind of authority against which Mr. S. protested, and which, he said, the man who would be willing to confide to the hands of any class of officers, over the freemen of this country, would be a fit subject for the Autocrat of all the Russias. If, then, said Mr. S., the system proposed should give disciplined officers, which he did not believe, but should fail to introduce that discipline into the great body of the militia, of what service would it be to the nation? Let experience answer. And here he might rely on the facts which had been disclosed by the gentleman from Vermont, who spoke from what he had seen and known. But, asked Mr. S., was not a Braddock and his officers disciplinarians, and yet he had met with a grave, and his troops with defeat. At Lexington, at Bunker's Hill, and at King's Mountain, the militia fought with success; at the latter place their victory was complete. These names had been hallowed in the sacred page of American history; yet here they were commanded by men of equal grade and experience with themselves. The militia are to be relied on, and on proper occasions they are efficient, but their efficiency does not consist in their discipline; it consists in their patriotism, their honor, and impetuous courage; it is this which distinguishes them from regular troops, who were mere mercenaries, (he spoke of the ranks,) and strangers to those noble sentiments which warmed the bosom and nerved the arm of the militiaman in the hour of danger.

The science of military tactics, said Mr. S., was studied by the pusillanimous, as that of medicine was by the sick; they seek the art of avoiding defeat and resisting attack, and not that which was calculated to command and insure success, and the principles of the bill seemed to accommodate itself to that timid kind of policy. It disdained to rely on the natural courage, sense of duty, and love of country, which would always serve the militiaman in the hour of need, but sought to make him subservient to useless restrictions in times of the most profound peace, for no possible good. It was not to be expected that such things would be endured, because there was no necessity for it; and they would not. Mr. S. said, what had once happened, might possibly happen again; but that we were not to expect that to occur, which a long train of exertions had failed to produce. Every State in the Union had its militia laws, and most of them their own discipline; yet, after a series of legislation for forty years, they were about where they commenced. Every attempt at perfection, like the repairs of an old woman's clock, only tended to make confusion worse confounded. We were not then, said Mr. S., to expect, that our experiments would be more successful than those of the States. They had managed in such a way as to get along, and he thought it was best to let them go on in their own way. But, the gentleman from Tennessee, (Mr. CANNON,) had told us, said Mr. S., that if the nation went on as it had done, encouraging the army, the academy, the navy, forts and fortifications, that she would experience the same fate, which had attended other republics. For his part, Mr. S. said, he entertained no such fears; these were national objects subject to the control of the people's representatives, and from the policy hitherto pursued, he thought there was nothing to fear. Mr. S. said, that he was free to confess that he should entertain much greater fears, if the gentleman should succeed in diffusing the military spirit to the extent which he seemed to desire. If, indeed, the free people of this country should so far catch the military spirit, as to believe the only path to fame and distinction was the military one, then there might be some cause of alarm. He did not wish, therefore, to see their attention diverted from their peaceful pursuits, much less to see them filled with that martial feeling, "the pride, the pomp, and the circumstance of war," which might lead them in quest "of food, of plunder, and of glory." The greatest enemy, said Mr. S., to the mild spirit of social life was the military one. History was false if the assertion was not true. The Prætorian band at Rome, the Janissaries at Constantinople, and the Imperial Guard at Paris, were alike the enemies of liberty and of their country. And though it might be said, that those who had sprung up in the world and established military despotisms, had usually come from the military order, yet it would be found that the nation itself had first been prepared for the sacrifice, by the diffusion of the military spirit, and the pride of martial fame. Seek not, then, to make this nation a military people; lest some extraordinary genius may arise, created by nature, and called into action by fortuitous events, who might aspire to his own elevation on the ruins of his country. Mr. S. acknowledged that he entertained no serious fears of this kind—that they were mere dreams of fancy; yet he considered them of as much weight as any apprehensions from the present or any future standing army, that we were likely to have in this country.

JANUARY, 1823.

Disciplining the Militia.

H. OF R.

Having thus offered his general objections to the principle of the measure, Mr. S. said he would now notice its expense. There were at present about one million of effective militia, which were divided into two hundred and seventy-five brigades, and in each brigade there were upwards of one hundred and seventy officers proposed to be encamped. The pay proposed to be given, though not adequate to their expenses, would cost upwards of one hundred dollars per day. Thus, the expense for the number of days proposed, would exceed half a million of dollars. Would the Committee authorize such an expenditure on an object both impracticable and useless? There was already directed to be appropriated $200,000 for arming the militia; and when these arms had been procured and distributed amongst the States, they knew not how to dispose of them. They were not generally put into the hands of the militia; and, in some States, where they were, the ramrods were not unfrequently used as a poker, and the arms themselves found an arsenal in a bar-room. Mr. S. said, however, he did not complain of this appropriation, as it was a means of defence intended for a state of war. He said, he would barely mention one section of the bill, which was its last. This section authorized an exemption from militia duty on the payment of five or ten dollars per year. Mr. S. said, this was perfectly in accordance with the main principle of the measure. The duties which it sought to impose upon the officers would drive most of them from commission, and this commutation principle would be accepted by every man who could raise his five dollars; and thus the ranks would be as thin as the officers would be few. But we had been told, said Mr. S. that the Constitution had given to Congress the power of regulating the discipline of the militia, and its powers should be carried into effect. It had indeed given to Congress the power of adopting some uniform system of discipline, which had or ought to be done; that we should also have the numerical strength of the militia, render them obedient to the commands of the Government when called into service; and he doubted the propriety or authority of doing more. He, at least, never would consent to render the militia subservient to martial law in time of peace, and obedient to those "rules and articles of war," which went to abridge their civil rights—which ought not to be done—which they would not submit to, and which he thought the good sense of the Committee would not impose.

Mr. SAUNDERS was followed by—

Mr. CHAMBERS, of Ohio, in support of the bill, who observed that the boldness with which this bill was attacked, induced him to offer his feeble aid in support of the contemplated measure. Yet he had little hopes of exciting, in any degree, the attention of the Committee to the subject, and lamented the very great apathy and indifference which was apparent in the House during the discussion of this bill. Why it should be so, he could not tell. Whether it arose from the character of the House, or of its members, he knew not. To him it appeared a subject of very great importance—a subject which had elicited the attention of successive Chief Magistrates of this nation, and

H. OF R.

Disciplining the Militia.

JANUARY, 1823.

was particularly recommended to the consideration of Congress by one, whose judgment would not be questioned by any gentleman in this Committee. It was very evident that, for all great national purposes, in case of war, by invasion, or insurrection, the militia must, unquestionably, constitute at all times our main reliance for defence. To him it appeared very extraordinary to discover so great an indifference to a subject, apparently so interesting and important; every argument which could be adduced in support of a standing army in time of peace, would apply with equal force to promote the discipline of the militia of the country. We incur a national expense for the Army proper (excluding ordnance and fortifications) amounting to upwards of $2,326,000 per annum, for the mere purpose of keeping alive a portion of military science, and garrisoning our forts. We vote immense sums for the Army and Navy, without the least hesitation, or much inquiry, as auxiliaries to the national defence. In the Navy Department, we have voted as a contingent fund, a mere contingent fund, the sum of $200,000; which, in the language of the late honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, when inquired of as to the uses this money was to be applied to, replied, that, so far as he could designate the items, it would be principally for needles and twine. Yet, gentlemen became extremely alarmed at the idea of appropriating $500,000 towards disciplining the militia of the United States. For his part, he would as readily appropriate a portion of the funds of this Government to that object as he would for the Army, the Navy, or fortifications. He was sorry to hear such a description of the militia as had been given by the gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. SAUNDERS,) who had just resumed his seat, considering that he himself belonged to the corps of militia officers. Mr. C. differed entirely with him in supposing that the republican freemen of this country would consider it degrading to be placed under the command of the officers of their respective brigades; nor would they conceive them mere petty tyrants, wearing epaulettes, &c. If that gentleman would advert to the mode of organizing the militia, and the appointment of the officers, no such conclusions of disrespect, or spirit of disobedience, could be drawn. [Here Mr. SAUNDERS explained.] Mr. C. resumed. From the explanation given, he believed he had understood the gentleman correctly. The reasoning of the gentleman, however, argued too much, and would go to the total annihilation of all discipline. He had no doubt that, when you give the militia a more important character than they now possessed, their pride and emulation would impel them to a perfection in discipline. They needed some stimulus—they required the attention and legislative sanction of the General Government. It has been long wanting. What do you say to the nation, in refusing to pass this bill? You solemnly hold out the distinct idea that the Congress of these United States consider the militia of this country as unworthy of the least legislative consideration. This, sir, will be a damper on the remnant of patriotism, in the breast of the great body of your militia officers. Their duty is onerous and irksome, and still they hold on in many instances, hoping for encouragement. This bill holds out the best inducement to perseverance, and would no doubt stimulate them to the performance of their duties. It is but justice, to pay them for the time they must necessarily lose in acquiring military discipline.

Mr. C. was sorry to find the advocates of this bill but few in number. There were a few, however, in the House, who appeared to feel a particular interest in the measure under consideration. He was himself among those few. He had the honor to be a militia officer, and had attended to all the details of duty. From personal knowledge, a large proportion of the subaltern officers in the country he represented had not a clear annual income to spare of one hundred dollars. Yet these men, to perform their duty in an officer-like manner, and to furnish themselves with uniform, arms, and equipments, must sustain an expense equal to one hundred dollars, besides losing from six to ten days per annum in attendance upon duty, at company and regimental musters, at brigade officer musters, courts of inquiry, and assessment of fines, courts-martial, &c., together with the disadvantage of leaving their homes a distance, and bearing their own expenses. In objecting to the provisions of this bill, gentlemen ought to recollect that they are neither extraordinary or novel; that in many, if not all the States, under the different State authorities, they were now in the practice of a similar system. If the system of militia discipline shall be determined as useless and unworthy of legislative attention, dismiss all your militia officers, and relieve them at once from all further responsibility or duty. For his part, there was no object of a public character that he would more freely appropriate a portion of the public moneys to, than that under consideration. He finally concluded by entreating the serious attention of the House to the subject-matter of the bill, and hoped it would pass.

Mr. CANNON said it was not expected by the committee who reported this bill, that it would pass the House without the most thorough examination. He was well aware that there were some who entertained the opinion that military science, as well as every other science, ought to be confined to a few, and not disseminated throughout the great mass of the people generally. He, however, was not one of that sort of politicians. He entertained opinions altogether of a different character on those subjects. He knew it had heretofore been a very favorite policy of some of those who administer the Government, as well as many members of the House, to confine military science to the Army and Military Academy. This course of policy, he had often objected to on this floor, during the former sessions in which he had been a member. His policy was of a more broad and extensive nature. It was one that afforded all sections of our Union something like an equal participation in the benefits afforded; for, he said, it would not be denied that the money in the Treasury was the common property of the whole people of the United States. Therefore, whatever appropriations were made for the purpose of teaching military science or any other science, ought (instead of being made in such a way as to benefit a few only) to be applied on some general principle of equality, by which the whole people of the United States would participate equally in the advantages afforded; and this, he said, was the principle sought to be established by the bill under discussion. There is nothing complex or intricate in it. It only requires the sanction of the House, with the appropriation it contained, and it will be carried into effect. The principal objection he had yet heard made against the bill, was the expense to the Government that would be incurred by its adoption; this was really the only objection of any weight he had yet heard urged against the measure. He said the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. SAUNDERS) had stated that yesterday he had expressed a desire to diminish the expenditures on the Army, Navy, and Military Academy, but he had not then expressed himself so, whatever his sentiments might be in relation to the expenditures on those objects, nor did he place the merits of this bill on that ground or contingency. He had stated to the House the large amount annually expended on those objects, as a means of national defence, which was also the object of this bill. He had contrasted the large amount of about seven millions annually expended on the Army, Navy, Fortifications, and Military Academy, (which could only be considered as the auxiliary means of our national defence,) with this sum of less than half a million for this great object, which was our only safe and sure reliance. And he would now place the merits of the bill on what he considered to be the only true ground on which we could fairly test the system it proposed. It was this, we are making large expenditures annually for national defence. This bill proposes a comparatively small expenditure, though in a different way, for the same object; and the true question is, whether the mode I propose by the bill, is not better, and does not more accord with the principles of our Government, than that which has heretofore been pursued. If it can be shown by the opponents of this measure that our present mode of expending the public money for national defence is better calculated to effect that object than the system contained in the bill, he would give up the question, and agree that the bill ought to be rejected; but, on the contrary, if the expenditure proposed to be made by the bill, is calculated to give us more safety and national power for defence in time of war, he thought it ought to be adopted. This was the fair view he wished taken on the subject. It was the ground on which he was prepared to meet the opponents of the bill; for he entertained the most decided opinion that the expenditure proposed by this system for the discipline of the officers of the militia of the United States would, if made, be found to be the most efficient that ever had been made for national defence.

JANUARY, 1823.

Disciplining the Militia.

H. OF R.

Mr. C. said he did not pretend to be a military man, like the gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. SAUNDERS,) or the gentleman from Ohio, (Mr. CHAMBERS.) The question involved political as well as military considerations—whether we are to go on and exhaust our Treasury on the skeleton system of an army and a military academy, for the purpose of keeping up military science in our country for its defence, or shall we adopt a system calculated to disseminate this science throughout our country in the manner he had proposed? The surplus officers of your army, said he, are military sinecures, whose annual expense to the Government, together with that of the Military Academy, amounts to nearly as much as would be the expense of this system, by which nearly or about fifty thousand militia officers would annually be instructed. Between the course pursued by the Government heretofore, and that he had here proposed, he thought, after a full examination and due reflection, none could hesitate. There might, he said, be some faults pointed out in the details of this bill. It could not be expected that any system, so extensive in its operation, would be perfect when first adopted. Experience would, no doubt, point out amendments that would be necessary. He did not approve himself of every part of the details of this bill; but he was so deeply impressed with the importance of the adoption of the principle it contained, that he was willing to surrender his judgment on those points which he considered of but little consequence. His great object was to introduce a system by which the militia officers of the United States would be enabled to obtain, in some small degree, a practical knowledge of military science, and this must be done at the public expense. This part of our citizens are not always the most wealthy, and the entire sacrifice of time, as well as the expense they would be necessarily subjected to, was too much to require of them. Indeed, they were not able to bear it. We were now, and always have been, entirely indebted to this patriotic class of our citizens for the military science, however little it might be, which has been extended to the great body of the people. He believed any system that would enable the officers to obtain a knowledge of military science without subjecting them to expense, or an entire sacrifice of their time, would effect every thing necessary to be done by the General Government.

He said he was sorry to differ in opinion on this subject with the venerable and honorable gentleman from Vermont, who had so much more experience on this as well as every other subject than he himself had. He was also sorry that the gentleman entertained opinions so diametrically opposite to the opinions of the great statesman and soldier under whom, he understood, he has fought during the Revolution, and to whom our country is so much indebted for national independence and civil liberty; and he hoped that, the long lapse of time that had intervened since the gentleman from Vermont had been associated with this great statesman and soldier of our Revolution, he had not ceased to feel great respect for his opinions on this subject, which was deemed by him (WASHINGTON) ton) to be one of great national importance. And in answer to what the gentleman has advanced in opposition to this measure, he begged leave to read to him and to the Committee a part of the Message of this great statesman to the first session of the fourth Congress, in the year 1795, where he says, "With the view of our Army establishment, is naturally connected that of the militia. It will merit inquiry, what imperfections in the existing plan further experience may have unfolded. The object is of so much moment, in my estimation, as to excite a constant solicitude that the consideration of it may be renewed till the greatest attainable perfection shall be accomplished. Time is wearing away some of the advantages for forwarding the object, while none better deserves the persevering attention of the public councils." If these opinions, said Mr. C., have no influence on the gentleman from Vermont, I could not have the vanity to suppose that any other arguments in my power to advance would have the slightest effect. They were opinions that had been urged by General Washington on the consideration of Congress throughout his administration, and also subsequently by Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison. Yet, notwithstanding the great zeal which they displayed on this subject, nothing has ever been done to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution in relation to it. Not one single dollar has ever yet been appropriated to provide for the discipline of the militia. Gentlemen would not object to the large appropriations made to the regular Army, Navy, fortifications, and Military Academy, though opposed to this small amount for the discipline of the militia.

The gentleman from North Carolina has told us that the officers are too proud to submit to be disciplined in the manner provided by this bill; but, sir, said he, if I am not mistaken, they are now in the constant practice of being drilled, in many of the States in this Union, where they encounter the expense as well as loss of time, without any compensation whatever. The regulations of the States in this respect are similar in their character to those contained in this bill; and the rules for the government of the Army are the rules which also govern the militia throughout the Union. But, sir, said he, the gentleman is mistaken when he supposes this system will be objected to by the officers of the militia. It is calculated to place them on still higher ground; to pay them a small compensation for the time employed in gaining this practical knowledge of all the duties of the camp and the field, will make those appointments in the militia more desirable. It will enable them to be better qualified for the discharge of all their important duties, consequently will command respect, and give them an elevation of character heretofore unknown among the people of our country.

How, he asked, can it be said, that the adoption of this system will impoverish the treasury? Seven millions were now appropriated for national defence, when the application of the sum of less than half a million, in the manner provided by this system, would produce more effect, in the time of war, than double the amount expended on the Army, fortifications and Military Academy. Nor are the officers of the militia, when encamped agreeably to the provisions of the bill, to be drilled by any self-created Steuben, as stated by the gentleman from North Carolina. This bill contains no such provisions. They are to be drilled and instructed in camp duty, military discipline, and field exercise, by the brigade major, or such persons as may be appointed by the Legislatures of the respective States, who, we may fairly presume, at least, will select the most enlightened men in military science for that purpose. If the gentleman will examine more attentively the provisions of the bill, he will find his fears on that point entirely groundless. He has, however, said, that discipline would be productive of no good among the militia. Such, also, was the amount so far as he could understand it, of the doctrine of the gentleman from Vermont, (Mr. KEYES.) Mr. C. said, he would not enter into any argument whatever, in answer to such opinions; for the experience of the whole world would prove the contrary; and he believed it was as important to teach military science to the officers of the militia, as it was to teach it to the regular Army or the Military Academy; and, for his part, he would be willing to expend a million annually to accomplish so great an object, in preference to making such large expenditures in the manner we have heretofore done. He said it was true, that all the efforts that had heretofore been made to improve the militia had been unavailing; that the object has never yet been accomplished, and, he thought, the reason must be obvious to every one. Not one dollar had been applied to that purpose. We all know that this substantial means of our national defence has been heretofore neglected by Congress. Had their attention been drawn to it with the same degree of interest that has been manifested for the regular Army, Military Academy, and fortifications, great improvement might have been made, and with much less expenditure of the public money than that made on those objects; while, at the same time, the power and capacity of the nation, for defence, would have been greatly increased, and the objects held in view by the enlightened and patriotic framers of our Constitution, would have been carried into effect. But, sir, what are the arguments we have heard against this bill? They amount simply to this: Open your treasury to your Army, to your Navy, to your fortifications, and to your Military Academy, but don't expend one dollar to improve the militia. This has been our course of legislation. And, sir, is this to become the settled policy of this country? Is the public attention to be entirely drawn to these objects on which we are exhausting our treasure, as the surest and safest means for the defence of a free people?

Sir, while such doctrines are held by men in power, and continually aided by such vast expenditures of the public money, who can tell what is to be the ultimate consequences? He hoped the people were not yet prepared for the adoption of the principles that such a course was calculated to establish. Time, however, aided by the powerful influences he had alluded to, he feared, might make a change in the political character of our country; for such, we know, has been the effect of a similar course in other countries; and to guard against this silent, gradual, though certain course of influence on the principles of our Government, was one of the great objects contemplated by the measure he had proposed. It was not in the smallest degree calculated to interrupt the peaceful pursuits of the citizens, as had been urged by the gentleman from North Carolina. There was no provision contained in this bill of any such character. The gentleman's fears on that point are also groundless. It has been urged, as an argument against this bill, that the States have adopted measures to improve their militia. This he considered rather an argument in favor of the measure, though he believed no State in the Union had gone so far as to pay the officers any thing for the time they devoted to the acquisition of this science; and without some compensation, not much improvement could be expected. The most of the officers were not able to afford such sacrifice, in justice to themselves and their families; and, although this is a new system, he could not see any good reason why gentlemen should seem to be so much alarmed at its introduction. For his part, he said, he believed if it should be passed into a law, the effect would be to prevent, forever, either in peace or in war, the necessity of a large regular army, the evils of which have been felt in a more or less degree by every Government in the world.

JANUARY, 1823.

Disciplining the Militia.

II. OF R.

But, Mr. Chairman, said he, the gentleman from North Carolina tells us there is no danger of such effects from a regular army in this country. Sir, I am as little under the impulse of present fear, from that source, as he is. Its influence is silent and gradual; and this doctrine of no danger, is the doctrine that has been preached to the people of other countries to lull them to sleep, while this gradually increasing power was rapidly gaining the ascendancy; and, in the end, destroyed their liberty. It becomes the people of the United States, therefore, to look out in time, and guard against the slightest advances towards such principles. Let us adopt a system that will give expansion to military science over our whole country. It is much more in accordance with the principles of our Government, than that of confining it to a few, as contended for by the opponents of this measure. The gentleman from North Carolina is also opposed to arming the militia. He thinks they cannot be trusted with the weapons necessary for the defence of their liberty; that they would make pokers of the ramrods, and barter away their muskets for a drink of grog. Sir, I will not admit that the people of this country are so lost to a sense of the duty they owe to themselves and their country; they are not yet brought to that point of degradation; nor is any freeman in this country so depraved as to throw away his weapons of liberty, or barter them away, when furnished him by his Government, in a grog shop. [Mr. SAUNDERS explained.] Mr. CANNON said he was glad the gentleman had not meant to apply his remarks, on this point, to his own State, however he may have intended them for the people of other States, as little deserving such reflections as that of his own; but he said he had confidence in the virtue, intelligence, and patriotism of the people of our country, and was much more willing to trust them with the arms necessary for its defence, than he was to trust them in the hands of the regular Army. Indeed, he felt no fears on the score of arming our citizens, and believed the arms would be perfectly safe in their hands, though it was no part of the provisions of the bill under discussion.

When an appropriation is asked for to make a road, or to repair a road, what have we heard? Why, sir, said he, we are told it is a great national object; that its tendency is to bind together the different States. This is the language and the doctrine I have often heard in this House, when the subject of making a road, in any section of the Union, was under discussion. But, sir, if you will appropriate your money among the different States for the purpose of diffusing military science for national defence throughout the whole Union, on the great principles of equality contained in this bill, you will form a stronger cement to the Union, and do more to bind the States together than you have done, or can do, by all your expenditures of money in making roads, and I think it is the safest, as well as the cheapest mode of providing for the national defence.

Sir, after all the expenditures that have been made, or can be made, on a regular army, navy, fortifications, and Military Academy, they are not to be relied on as the main stay to the Union—they are the broken staff of this country, that will fail us whenever it shall be made the chief reliance in the hour of danger. Mr. C. said, he was anxious to see the adoption of this measure, because it was calculated to put down forever the growth of a regular army, which had been the poisonous bane of every republican Government on earth. He thought we owed something as a duty to the young independent nations that are springing into existence around us, and endeavoring, in the formation of their systems, to imitate our example; we also owed it, in a still greater degree, to ourselves. If we go on in the habitual course of exhausting the whole of our money on an army and military academy, and entirely neglect the improvement of a militia, the tendency must be to fix and confirm, ultimately, a reliance on such means of defence. Sir, said he, this country cannot be defended by a regular army; even if you could maintain one to the extent of one hundred thousand. Our territory is too extensive; they must be scattered around its borders in small numbers, and could not be brought to an invaded point with sufficient facility and despatch, and in sufficient force to repel any formidable invasion. I have said, on former occasions, that the strength of this country is not to be seen in our army, navy, and fortifications. No, sir; it consists in the strength of the attachment of the people to the Government, in a far greater degree; and how much more imposing would be the aspect of our country, to every foreign Power, when, instead of a system of defence, by regular armies and fortifications, we shall present to them our great bulwark of liberty, our Constitutional defence, a million of freemen, armed, and officers commanding them, skilled in the discipline of the camp and the field, ready and willing to defend against foreign invasion, or insurrection, any and every part of our Union? In this system there is great national power and safety. It is the true foundation on which we may rest in the most perfect security, and is calculated to preserve and maintain, forever, the principles of freedom and republican liberty; while, if we neglect it, the effect must be, to pursue a contrary course of policy, not designed by the authors of our Government, which may, in the end, terminate in the same evils and mischiefs that have, from similar causes, befallen the people of other countries.

Mr. KEYES rose, and said, Mr. Chairman, it will be expected undoubtedly for me to make some apology for the time I shall take up, in answering the gentleman from Tennessee. True, as he says, I was bred under the greatest Captain in the world, and true it is I was one of his soldiers. Sir, the militia of the United States are not so ignorant of military discipline as he seems to think; for I well know that the militia in New England understand forming and displaying column as well as any troops whatever; but I do not consider the instructing militia in the field exercise to be of much use.

General WASHINGTON, during the Revolution, received great support from the militia; and he recommended that the States should discipline their militia, and it is already done; and so I said, Mr. Chairman, when I had the honor to speak on the subject yesterday; and I feel very grateful to the Committee for the attention paid to me. I hope they will indulge me now, and I will not detain them long.

Sir, said Mr. K., the militia have always considered training and reviewing twice a year as a common tax upon life, and have never complained. The militia, with a few firelocks, (merely fowling-pieces, and those very rusty,) have beaten the regular soldiers of England with all their discipline; and why, Mr. Chairman, would you expend five or six hundred thousand dollars to learn them camp and field duty? This knowledge serves only to destroy them; for, as soon as they get so wise as to keep in close column, they do nothing. All they want is to learn how to load, prime, take aim, and fire, when they have a good opportunity. This they always know very well. I said yesterday we had beaten the British in two wars, and that neither the British, nor any other Power of Europe, would be likely to attack us again. I said nothing about fortifications nor the Navy; but we find by the conduct of the pirates we have use for the Navy, a part of which is now about to go against these rascals. The gentleman from Tennessee says that he is willing to give a million of dollars a year to discipline the militia. What do you think of that, Mr. Chairman? And how do you like it, sir? I think this would be throwing money away fast. If your Treasury is full, pay your debts, and not pay interest money—I mean your national debts.

This bill provides that the militia officers, from a brigadier general down to a sergeant major, shall be called into camp once a year, and that they there shall stay four days at least—six if they please. Mr. Chairman, I ask how much would they learn in that time, and what good would their meeting do? It would take them six days to get acquainted with each other. Sir, what does Congress do the first six days after they meet? They only get acquainted with one another, and conclude what is best to be done.

If you have money to spare, Mr. Chairman, replace on the pension roll your old Revolutionary soldiers, whom you have dropped off of said roll—such of them, at least, as are now suffering for want of help. It was these brave men who fought your battles, and who have made you what you are. If it had not been for their bravery, you would not have had a Congress now sitting in this splendid House. No, Mr. Chairman. Had they not defended our country, we should now be in slavery, and paying tribute to Old England; and further, when they chose, they would take any of us, and transport us to Old England for trial for supposed crimes; and they also would have tax-gatherers amongst us, and tax us at will and pleasure. And if this had been our case, we should not have had money to purchase so much land of the French, the Spaniards, and the Indian chiefs.

Mr. DWIGHT, though approving its general principles, was opposed to the bill in detail.

Mr. WILLIAMSON warmly advocated the bill.

Mr. WOODCOCK spoke against it; and

Mr. FLOYD also opposed it.

Mr. DWIGHT, from impressions of respect for the principle of the bill, and believing that in some other shape it would be more agreeable to the House, moved that the Committee rise and report progress; which was agreed to.

Mr. WOODCOCK then moved that the bill be laid on the table; which was also agreed to.

MONDAY, January 13.

Mr. NELSON, of Virginia, presented two petitions from sundry inhabitants of the counties of Washington and Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, stating that serious inconvenience and injustice frequently arise to the inhabitants of the District, by the removal of debtors, against whom suits have been commenced, and before judgment, out of the District, into one of the neighboring States; where proceedings must, of necessity, be commenced de novo; and praying that a law be passed, authorizing executions upon all judgments which have been, or may be rendered, by the courts of this District, to be directed to the marshal of any State or Territory, where the party or his property may be found, as in case of debts due the United States; which petitions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WRIGHT presented a petition of James

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Smith, late vaccine agent, praying the aid of the Government in extending the limits of his vaccine institution to the citizens of the United States generally; which petition was referred to a select committee, consisting of Messrs. WRIGHT, FLOYD, HALL, WHIPPLE, and BATEMAN.

Mr. HAMILTON presented a petition of Sarah Perry, of the State of Rhode Island, setting forth that she is the mother of the late Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, and of the late Lieutenant James Alexander Perry, of the Navy of the United States, both of whom, after honorably and successfully fighting the battles of their country, perished in its service; that she derived her support solely from the gratuitous assistance of her brave and lamented offspring; that she is now old, borne down with sorrow and poverty, and without the means of support, and praying that she may be placed upon the navy pension list.—Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HERNANDEZ presented a petition of sundry inhabitants of East Florida, praying that the assent of Congress may be withheld from the acts of the Legislative Council of Florida, as far as they relate to taxes or county courts.

Mr. HERNANDEZ presented a memorial of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of St. Augustine, in East Florida, praying that their claim to a tract of land, to be used as a common by the inhabitants of said city, may be allowed and confirmed.

The said petition and memorial were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALWORTH, of New York, rose and said it had become his unpleasant duty to inform the House, and particularly his worthy friend from Kentucky, who a few days since moved a resolution on the subject, (to whom Mr. W. took this opportunity to tender the thanks of the friends of the deceased,) that it was no longer in their power to render a tribute of gratitude to the memory of the gallant Allen, by providing for the necessities of his bereaved mother. Mrs. Allen's health, said Mr. W., had long been impaired, and she was unable to sustain the shock, produced by the sudden and tragical death of her brave son, who was the hope of her old age, and on whose filial piety she depended for the support of her declining years. Her heart, said Mr. W., has been broken, by this cruel and unexpected stroke of adversity, and her spirit has taken its departure to meet its kindred spirit in another and a better world. But, said Mr. W., although we have thus been deprived of the power of making provision for the support of the mother, whose welfare occupied his latest thoughts, there is one still left, who has a right to our protecting care. And, said Mr. W., I hope and trust the sister, whose desolate situation gave an additional pang to the heart of the dying hero; that she, who has thus been deprived, not only of the support of a kind and worthy brother, but also of the guardian care of a pious and affectionate parent; that she, who has now a double claim to our protection and to our sympathy, may receive that bounty which Congress intended to bestow upon the mother, who is now removed beyond the reach of a nation's gratitude. Mr. W. concluded by moving a recommitment of the bill, for the relief of the mother and sister of Lieutenant Allen, to the Naval Committee, that it might receive such amendments as present circumstances had rendered necessary.

And the question being taken thereon, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCIS JOHNSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill to authorize the Postmaster General to pay for certain repairs to the General Post Office, and to keep the engine house, the fire engine, and apparatus, in repair; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision for the widow and child of Lieutenant George Pearce, late of the United States Navy, made a report thereon, which was read, and the resolution therein submitted was concurred in by the House as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of the 16th of December last, in relation to the provision for the widow and child of Lieutenant George Pearce, deceased, and that the same be referred to the Commissioners of the Navy Pension Fund.

Mr. FULLER, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Penelope Denny, the mother of James Denny, late a gunner in the Navy; as also, a resolution of the 8th instant on her behalf, made a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the Whole to which is committed the bill for the relief of the mother and sister of Lieutenant William H. Allen, deceased.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, the Naval Committee was discharged from the further consideration of two letters from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to moneys drawn from the Treasury, on account of the naval service, for the year ending on the 30th June, 1822; and of the expenditure of the moneys appropriated for the contingent expenses of the Navy, for the year ending on the 30th September, 1822; and they were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHN SPEED SMITH, from the committee to which was recommitment the bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, reported a new bill of the same title; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of sundry merchants of Baltimore, for further compensation for damages sustained by vessels sunk in the entrance of the harbor of that city; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the same committee, also made a report on the petition of Richard Henry Wilde, representative of James Wilde, deceased, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the rep-

H. OF R.

Land Office Clerks.

JANUARY, 1823.

representative of James Wilde, deceased; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

The Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Abraham Snyder, and it was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a district court of the United States in the western district of Louisiana.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, the Committee on Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a separate Surveyor General's district in the State of Louisiana.

On motion of Mr. ROCHESTER, a select committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of continuing in force, for a further term, so much of the act, entitled "An act regulating the currency, within the United States, of the gold coins of Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Spain, and the crowns of France and five franc pieces, passed on the 29th day of April, 1816, as relates to the crowns of France and five franc pieces, with leave to report by bill or otherwise; and Mr. ROCHESTER, Mr. TOMLINSON, and Mr. ALEXANDER SMYTH, were appointed the said committee.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, enclosing a report, with sundry statements, in relation to the loan of one hundred thousand dollars, made to Scott, Thornton, and White, formerly Commissioners of the City of Washington, furnished in obedience to a resolution of this House, of the 7th inst.; which were referred to the committee appointed to make certain inquiries in relation to the disposal of the public lots within the said city.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, accompanied by an exhibit, showing the number of officers of each different grade necessary to command, in actual service, the vessels now on the stocks and building, and communicating further information in relation to the objects of inquiry embraced by the resolution adopted on the 30th ultimo; which letter, &c., were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill in addition to the act, entitled "An act for the prompt settlement of public accounts," and for the punishment of the crime of perjury, were discharged from the consideration thereof, and the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

LAND OFFICE CLERKS.

Mr. STERLING, of New York, submitted for consideration the following resolve:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any, and if any, what, further provision by law is necessary to prevent or limit the allowance of clerk-hire in the several Land Offices, and to reduce the incidental expenses attached to the same.

Mr. COCKE having inquired the object of this resolution—

Mr. STERLING said, he owed, perhaps, an explanation to the House of the reasons which had induced him to offer this resolution; because, on the face of it, many gentlemen, acquainted with the laws establishing the compensation of the land officers might suppose the proposed inquiry to be superfluous. Mr. S. said he had particularly examined this subject, and he had taken some pains to satisfy himself that the inquiry is not only not superfluous, but absolutely necessary. The law appears to be plain; but there had been either a misconstruction of the law, or a departure from it. It might be recollected, Mr. S. said, that at the last session he had called upon the proper department for information as to the expenses of the land offices. From this information it appeared that their expenses had transcended what was correct, and what he believed to be authorized by the laws of the country. The report, however, was general, and he thought it necessary to know more particularly the nature of the expenses which he deemed illegal. He therefore called for the items of expenditure in several of the offices. Upon examining the report in answer to this call, Mr. S. said, he had discovered, to his entire satisfaction, that many of the items of the expenses in the land offices were contrary to law; that, of the contingent expenditures, many particulars were entirely unauthorized. He had investigated this matter with a view to discover how these errors crept in. He was satisfied that they had arisen in part from a misunderstanding or misconstruction, of the law. The sum of four hundred and fifty-six dollars had been charged in one of the offices for posting the books of one of the receivers. He found no law to justify this expenditure; and he could see no reason why a large compensation should be given to this officer, and afterwards his successor or a clerk should be paid for posting the books, which is as much the duty of the officer himself as any other part of his duties. Several items for clerk-hire—one of $1,500 and another of $1,076 82, for rent and clerk-hire, had been reported by the Secretary of the Treasury, among the contingent expenses of these offices. The law establishing the compensation of Registers and Receivers, Mr. S. said, was clear and explicit. It provides that "instead of the compensation now allowed by law to the Receivers of Public Moneys for lands of the United States, they shall receive an annual salary of five hundred dollars each, and a commission of one per centum on the moneys received, as a compensation for clerk-hire, receiving, safe-keeping, and transmitting, such moneys to the Treasury of the United States; provided that the whole amount which any Receiver of Public Moneys shall receive, under the provisions of this act, shall not exceed, for any one year, the sum of three thousand dollars." How then the expenditures to which he had referred, could have been allowed or reported as among the expenses incident to these land offices, had struck him with great surprise until he found that the law had been misunderstood. To show how it had been misunderstood, Mr. S. said he would read an extract from a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to John Brahan, one of the Receivers, which is as follows:

JANUARY, 1823.

Land Office Clerks.

H. OF R.

"The construction which I shall give to the act fixing the compensation of Receivers and Registers of the different land offices will enable them to pay clerk-hire, to a reasonable amount, in proportion to the service rendered, where the commission of one per cent. shall exceed the maximum of their compensation fixed by law.

"It is, however, intended to keep the expenditure of clerk-hire under the control of the Treasury, in order to prevent extravagance."

Such a construction of the act of 1818, as is contained in this extract, Mr. S. conceived to be wholly unwarranted by the terms of that act. To prevent extravagance, the Secretary says he will keep the expenditure for clerk-hire under the control of the Department. Now, Mr. S. said, he conceived that the clerk-hire is under the control of this House; that it is fixed by law, and that no Secretary has a right to pay out any money from the Treasury, for clerk-hire or otherwise, without authority from Congress. In case the allowance of one per cent. shall exceed the maximum allowed by law, the Secretary says he will allow clerk-hire to a reasonable amount. But what says the law on the subject? Why, that in lieu of clerk-hire one per cent. on the amount received shall be allowed, and that there shall not be received by any receiver, as a compensation for clerk-hire in one year, more than three thousand dollars. The law, therefore, had been misunderstood or departed from, and in either case it was high time that the subject should be referred to the proper committee, to see whether or not the law needs alteration or explanation. In the case of the registers of the land offices, the question was more doubtful. In that section of the law which relates to them, though otherwise following the preceding section respecting the receivers, the words "for compensation for clerk-hire" are not contained. He believed, nevertheless, that it was the intention of the makers of the law to give precisely the same compensation to both these officers.

Mr. S. said he was disposed to put a stop, as far as possible, to all these incidental expenditures. He believed that the incidental and contingent expenditures were the curse of this Government, not only in the land offices, but in every other department where they were permitted. His object in moving the present resolution was, that the proper construction may be put upon the law, and the proper practice introduced.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the resolve was so modified as to refer the subject to the Committee on the Public Lands, instead of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. COOK moved to amend the resolution by adding to the end of it the words, "and what measures are necessary better to equalize the compensation of the registers and receivers of the public land offices."—Agreed to.

Mr. SLOANE did not rise to oppose the motion, but to suggest that, by turning their attention to the documents of the last session, alluded to by the gentleman from New York, it would be seen that the items of accounts to which he had referred were not items settled at the Treasury, but presented for settlement. Mr. S. said he was authorized to state that no clerk-hire had been allowed to the receivers or registers, except in one case to the amount of fifteen hundred dollars. In that case, the officer had been removed for improper conduct in office. His books were in arrear, and, it being necessary that they should be brought up, persons were employed for that purpose, who were paid for the service, and the securities of the removed officer had been sued for the expense thus necessarily incurred. It was impossible for the Treasury Department to prevent claims being preferred, and it was equally impracticable to avoid some contingent expense, such as that of the criers at the sales, stationery, blank forms, &c., which must either be paid for on the spot, or furnished from the Seat of Government to the several officers.

Mr. EDWARDS, of North Carolina, said it seemed, from the statements which had been made to the House, there was some difference of opinion between the gentlemen from New York and Ohio as to the fact of the allowance of clerk hire, &c. If the gentleman from New York was correct, these allowances had been improperly made; if the gentleman from Ohio was correct, then the gentleman from New York was wrong. He suggested to the gentleman from New York, whether he ought not to call on the Secretary of the Treasury for a full statement of the facts on the subject, before referring it to a committee.

Mr. STERLING said, he did call upon the Secretary of the Treasury, at the last session, for precisely such a statement, and the report was received, to which he had referred for the facts which he had stated. If they were charges simply, how could the items in question have been reported as incidental expenditures? But, Mr. S. said, he had a satisfactory reply to the gentleman from the State of Ohio, in addition to the evidence derived from the terms of the report, which was an extract of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to one of these very receivers, showing that he considered himself authorized to allow such charges. These charges being reported among the contingent expenditures of the land offices, the presumption was that they were paid. That a wrong construction of the law had taken place, Mr. S. said, was evident, because here was the letter of the Secretary, expressly stating the fact of the construction which he had put upon it. And when we have from that very officer the fact, that among the contingent expenditures, at one of the offices, was the sum of $1,500 for clerk hire, for three-quarters of the year, how could the fact be doubted that the charge had been allowed at the Treasury Department?

The resolve was then agreed to, without opposition.

OCCUPATION OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

The House then took up the bill making provision for the occupation of the mouth of Columbia river; when Mr. GOLDEN proposed to amend the bill, by striking out the words "and required," in the first section, and inserting, in lieu thereof, the words "when, in the opinion of the President, it may be consistent with the public interest." In support of this amendment, and on the general merits of the bill, Mr. C. delivered his sentiments at considerable length. They are as follows:

Mr. C. said, the course which has been pursued in relation to the bill now under consideration, has accidentally manifested the disposition of the House towards it, and shown its friends that, in its present form at least, they will be in a small minority. There is the more reason why those who intend to give it their support should offer their reasons for voting in its favor. I shall ask the indulgence of the House for a short time, while I submit the views I take of the subject.

I shall, sir, before I resume my seat, offer an amendment, the effect of which will be to refer the execution of the provisions of the bill to the discretion of the Executive. I will not attempt, sir, to show the importance of the contemplated establishment to our commerce in the Pacific ocean. I could add nothing to what has been said on this part of the subject by the honorable mover of the bill, and by the honorable member from Massachusetts. But to show the great value of the oil and ocean fur trade of the South and North Pacific, let me communicate to the Committee the history of some adventures which accidentally came to my personal knowledge. They are transactions of some ten or fifteen years ago; I cannot be accurate as to dates or sums, but I shall take great care not to exaggerate either.

A citizen of New York, who was, by profession, a mariner—(I may name him, for I shall say nothing that is not honorable to him and to his country)—a Captain Fanning, associated with some twelve or twenty other persons, determined to engage in an expedition to search for islands in the South Seas, where they had heard seals abounded. They purchased a ship, called the Catharine, the cost of which could not have been above $15,000. The parties were to be sharers in proportion to their respective contributions. The resources of some were so limited that they could not advance money for the necessary supplies. One furnished cordage, another sail-cloth, another iron, another provisions, most of which were obtained on credit. Part of the outfit, I well recollect, was some casks of wine, furnished by one of the parties because he had it in his power to obtain a credit for that article, when he could not for those more suited to the expedition. Another part of the equipment was a forge. Many of the hands were artisans. The vessel left the port of New York in the Summer. She was then inadequately rigged, but while in her progress her sails and rigging were completed; and, by means of the forge, the tools and instruments by which they were to execute their plan when they arrived at their destination, were manufactured on board the vessel. The whole outfit, independent of the vessel, I verily believe, did not cost five thousand dollars.

After traversing the ocean for a length of time, in high and unfrequented latitudes, and after encountering great hardships, they found the barren and desert island of which they were in search. They soon obtained a cargo of seal skins, with which they proceeded to Canton, leaving a part of their crew on the island, with no other supplies than some few barrels of provisions, and some two or three casks of the wine I have before mentioned. As to the rest, the reliance for subsistence was on the seal's flesh. In China, the skins were sold to great profit, and the Catharine returned to New York with a cargo of not less, I am certain, than one hundred thousand dollars; and I believe I should be within bounds if I were to say a great deal more. Another vessel was despatched for the party left on the island, who, it was found, had provided a second ample cargo, which again was carried to China; and with the proceeds another East India cargo, of great value, was procured and brought to New York. This trade continued and augmented, till it employed many vessels, and its profits were so large, that they formed the capitals of several mercantile houses, which were considered among the opulent of the city. It is true, they have all, I believe, shared the fate of many who have been ruined by the vicissitudes of past times.

It is curious to trace what was the usual course of this commerce. The teas and other Indian goods were generally sent to Amsterdam, Hamburg, Bremen, and other places in the north of Europe, where they were sold at enormous profits. The proceeds were remitted to England, for which the adventurers sold bills in New York, which were purchased by British agents, who advanced for them the precious metals, in money brought to our continent from South America, as the price of English manufactures sent to that country. Sir, I have related the circumstances of these adventures, not only for the purpose of exhibiting the value and importance of the trade in the South Seas, but I have been anxious to avail myself of the opportunity of showing, by this relation, how fallacious are the calculations of those who estimate the prosperity of our country by the custom-house account of our exports and imports. In the instances I have mentioned, it is probable the vessels carried little or nothing which was entered to the credit of our exports; whereas, their return cargoes swelled the amount of our imports, many hundreds of thousands of dollars. Finally, the value of these cargoes in a foreign market, were realized in our own country, and a sum equal to their worth actually added to our stock of specie. Every day, the consequences of the China trade are deprecated. It is accused of robbing us of our coin; but it is easy to see, that, for every dollar taken from us, to be laid out in India, many may be returned. The goods purchased in Asia, are sold in Europe, with the additional value they will acquire from our enterprise, industry, mercantile knowledge, skill in naval architecture, and navigation. These are part of the riches of our country, and it is with these that we pay, in part, at least, for the merchandise we import. It seems to me utterly fallacious, to say that we can give nothing for the goods which come to us from abroad but the produce we export. If this were so, inasmuch as our imports have ever been so much greater than our exports, we must, indeed, long since, have been bankrupts; and yet, is it not certain that, in spite of all predictions, and notwithstanding some local and temporary embarrassments, the nation has been uniformly and rapidly increasing in wealth and prosperity?

JANUARY, 1823.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

I acknowledge, sir, that I have suffered myself to digress from the direct object of my arguments, which is to show the value of that trade which has relation to the contemplated establishment on the Columbia. I shall say no more to this point—but ask the Committee to turn their attention to the importance of the trade which is, even now, carried on with the post itself. I find, sir, in the Treasury documents submitted to us last year, (we have as yet had no similar report from that Department this session,) a statement of the trade to the Northwest coast. I presume this must mean to the country near the Columbia; because, sir, I believe, that, from Port San Francisco, which is in 38°, to the Russian possessions, to the north, which are forbidden ground, there is no other post that is frequented by our vessels. Indeed, sir, we do not know that there is any post capable of receiving them. For all this space of the western shores of our territory is perfectly unknown to us, and is as much terra incognita as the wilds of Africa. Supposing, then, that the Northwest coast, in the Treasury Report, means the country circumjacent to the Columbia river, it appears that, in the year 1821, seventeen vessels sailed from the United States, for that post. These were of more than four thousand tons, were navigated by about three hundred hands, carrying foreign and domestic produce to the value of nearly four hundred thousand dollars. Let us ask, sir, for whom is this great amount of merchandise intended? It cannot all be for the savages who inhabit that coast; a great part must be for the supply of the British merchants who established themselves there when the post was taken from us, during the last war—a branch of the great United English Fur Company, which is now carrying on a valuable land fur trade. To show of what importance the post and harbor at the mouth of the Columbia must be to this trade, we have only to look at the vast water communications that are afforded by the Columbia and Clarke's rivers, to the north, the Snake river to the south, and to the manner in which that whole northern region is intersected by lakes and rivers. From the lake Winnipeg, which is in the heart of the Hudson Bay Territory, to the Missouri, there is a navigable water communication, with the expense, only, of a portage of about one mile.

But it is not alone with reference to any existing trade that we must consider the importance of the position to which the bill relates. We must take into consideration a trade which, at no distant day, must grow out of the great improvements we have made, and are daily making, in the means of communication and transportation. Sir, I do verily believe, that, in twenty years, and if not in twenty, in fifty years, a person setting out from London to go to India, will find New York, Albany, and Sandusky, post towns on his route. By pursuing, continually, nearly a west course, he will cross the Atlantic, reach Albany, follow the New York canal, embark on Lake Erie, pass through the Ohio canal, and pursue the Ohio, Mississippi, and Missouri, to the foot of the Rocky mountains, over which he will traverse a turnpike of only seventy-five miles, which will bring him to the waters of the Columbia; upon these he will reach the Pacific, and from thence he will cross a ferry to the Asiatic continent—a ferry of some two or three thousand miles, I admit, but one which, in reference to steamboat navigation, for which those seas are particularly adapted, would be no more than so many hundred miles would have been some few years since. By pursuing this course, the traveller will have but 120 degrees of longitude to traverse. Whereas, if he proceeded east from London, he could not reach the eastern coast of Asia without traversing 240 degrees of longitude; and, if he pursued the usual route, by doubling either of the capes, to the difference of longitude must be added the degrees of latitude he must necessarily twice pass over. Is it not reasonable then to suppose that, at some period, not very remote, the eastern trade may be pursued in the course I have designated? And will not the measure, which is contemplated by the bill, accelerate the arrival of that period? Sir, I am aware that, by many, these will be considered as extravagant and visionary ideas. But, let me ask, are they more extravagant than it would have been, only ten years ago, to have predicted that the waters of the great lakes would be emptied into the Atlantic at New York; that the course of the Hudson would be turned, and part of her waters sent to seek the ocean through the Gulf of St. Lawrence; that, by artificial means, this great continent would be divided into islands, the borders of which are more extensive than all the shores of Europe, and these islands infinitely better adapted to navigation and commerce than if they were surrounded by oceans?

It cannot be denied that the distance between the Seat of Government and the mouth of the Columbia is very great. But, in reference to the facility of communication between two places, the distance must not be estimated by miles, but should be computed by the time required to pass from the one place to the other. If steamboats were established in all the waters between this and the mouth of the Columbia, capable of steamboat navigation, the journey might be made, I do not doubt, in less time, and with greater ease, than the Representative from Missouri, now on this floor, could have come, (unless by sea,) from his State to this city, only ten years ago. The limits heretofore prescribed by the opinions of statesmen, as the necessary boundary of united empire or

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

JANUARY, 1823.

dominion, must be extended upon a scale proportioned to the astonishing improvements of the present times, in the means of communication and of transportation.

It seems to be thought, Mr. Chairman, that whatever may be the advantages in reference to our present condition or to our prospects, we ought not to occupy this part of our territory, for fear it should bring us in collision with some European nation. But what grounds can there be for these apprehensions? The only nations on earth who have ever made any claims to these regions are Spain, Russia, and England. Spain never had any pretensions other than were comprised by her province of Louisiana. This, she contended, extended as far north, I think, as sixty. At any rate, whatever her claims were, beyond the latitude of forty-two, they were transferred to us by the Treaty of Paris. Russia has, of her own accord, and entirely to her own satisfaction, settled a boundary between us. And, however amusing the process may be by which she has come to the conclusion that we ought also to be entirely satisfied with the course she has pursued, it is sufficient to our present purpose to remark that Russia makes no pretensions south of the fifty-first degree of north latitude. We find by our diplomatic correspondence with Russia, communicated to us at the last session, that she does not pretend to have even discovered the coast below forty-nine. To that point, she said, one of her captains had pushed his discoveries, but not in such a way as to give any title. The Emperor fixes on the latitude of fifty-one by a curious kind of compromise, with the terms of which he does not permit us to have any thing to say. You have a possession, he tells us, at the mouth of the Columbia, in forty-six—I have one (Novo Archangelsk) in fifty-seven. The difference between us is five and a half, which will bring us to about fifty-one. We will, therefore, take that as the boundary. If I may be permitted to adopt an expression used by the respectable and venerable member from Vermont, who sits near me, I would say that this is what he would call "coming to a split." And though, upon some other occasion, we may insist upon the unreasonableness of this ex parte mode of settling matters, yet it must satisfy us that our good friend, the Emperor of Russia, will never quarrel with us for any thing we may do south of his latitude of fifty-one. We have only to keep clear by an hundred miles of this boundary upon land, and to take care not to enter his "close sea," of some three thousand miles in width, and we may hope not to offend the Emperor.

We have no reason to believe that the measure contemplated by the bill will involve us in any controversy with Great Britain. She has never had any possession, and I believe never pretended to any title so low as the mouth of the Columbia. To territory more to the north she had made claims; but, as to these, if she be not satisfied with the possession of half the Eastern World, and will quarrel about the Northwest coast, she must quarrel with the sacculus sanctissimus of the Holy Alliance. We cannot be in her way. It is remarkable that, though it was well known at the time of the Treaty of Ghent that our boundary, as given by the treaty of 1783, would not close at the north, yet, not a word was said in the Treaty of Ghent of that boundary. The English fur trade was then conducted through the Lakes and by the St. Lawrence. And, though the settlement of Astoria had been made, I think, in 1810 or 1811, and had been taken from us during the war, the English had not yet profited by the enterprise of our citizens, and learnt the importance of communication to the Pacific by the waters of the West. Their trade had not yet taken that course. But when the convention of 1818 was formed, they had in a measure forsaken the trade by the St. Lawrence, and the united Northwest and Hudson's Bay Companies had established their Western route to their market in the East. They were, therefore, desirous of settling a boundary, which would secure to them a port in the Pacific, and would have continued, it may be presumed, the latitude 49 as the boundary between us beyond the Rocky Mountains, if we would have consented. This would have left to them, undisputed by us, the port of Nootka Sound, their old bone of contention with Spain. But we were not willing to give this limit to the purchase we had made of Louisiana, and therefore, it may have been, an article was introduced in the convention of 1818, by which it was stipulated, that either party might possess himself of stations on the Northwest coast, without its being cause of quarrel or evidence of title. But I will not believe that this provision was intended by our negotiators to imply any doubt of our title below the 49th degree. An evidence that Great Britain herself so understood it is, that, in 1818, she restored to us possession of our settlement at the mouth of the Columbia without the least intimation, in all her negotiations on the subject, of any question as to our title.

It is not then any adverse claim of title in any nation on earth that we are to fear may produce collision. But the ambition or cupidity of foreign nations may lead them to desire a possession offering so many advantages as does that of the mouth of the Columbia.

According to official representations on our files, the harbor is safe and capacious—accessible to the largest merchant vessels—peculiarly defensible. The climate is so mild that frost is rare. The soil is fruitful, and produces luxuriantly. If such a country should be left unoccupied by us, can we believe that other nations will respect our title, and refrain from occupying it? If they do not, and we should learn to-morrow that Spain, or Russia, or England, had possessed itself of the mouth of the Columbia, what should we do? We should then be obliged to assert our right, and defend the integrity of our territory. We have sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, and cannot abandon any part of it to any other Power. If this be so, I submit, sir, whether there is not much more danger that, by neglecting this fair country, we shall be involved in collision with some State that covets this possession, than we could be by adopting the measures proposed by the bill.

JANUARY, 1823.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

The amendment I propose, sir, is to strike out the words "and required," from the 4th line, and insert, in place thereof, as follows: "When, in his opinion, it may be consistent with the public interest." This will render the bill harmless, at least it will amount to no more than an appropriation, which will put it in the power of the President to pursue the measures authorized by the bill, if he should think them consistent with the public interest.

Mr. MALLARY, of Vermont, said he was opposed to the proposed amendment. He thought that Congress should take the responsibility of directing the occupation of the territory, and not place it on the President. It was not to be supposed the President had more information than is in possession of the House. It would be very extraordinary that this measure should be suffered to progress for weeks, and yet some deep reasons of State should remain undiscovered. For one, Mr. M. said, he was willing to meet the proper responsibility of his station, and not cast it off on any other department. Mr. M. stated, that he had prepared an amendment, which he should offer, if the one now under consideration should be rejected. He wished an occupation, by military force only, with some encouragement to settlers. The establishment of a civil government was unnecessary until there were people over whom it might be exercised. Besides, this course would avoid a considerable expenditure, and would remove some objections to the original bill. As it respects the occupation of the territory in question, Mr. M. said he was decidedly in its favor. The advantages it would afford to the fisheries, to commerce, and to the fur trade, had been most clearly shown. He would only add that, if any encouragement was to be given to the prosecution of the latter, now certainly was the time. The western part of the continent was overrun with traders of almost every nation, and shortly that trade would be of little value, if not annihilated. We ought promptly to secure whatever may fairly belong to us. The present is the proper time to adopt the measure. We are at peace with the world. Our means are abundant. Should we be hereafter engaged in war, a place of security would be provided for the millions of property we should have on the Pacific. Some thought the measure visionary; too hazardous for Americans to undertake. How often are we reminded of American enterprise? It is made a constant boast, and yet we appear to be alarmed at the idea of occupying our own domain! The smallest nation of Europe would not fear the undertaking, yet we are fearful it is beyond our power. Portugal, small as she was, did not hesitate to plant her colonies in every part of the world. Russia, with her capital in the centre of Europe, enclosed with walls of ice one half of the year, extends her colonies and commerce to every continent, and yet, with all our enterprise, we dare not venture beyond the Rocky Mountains. This subject occupies a great share of public attention; it is anxiously looked for—the interest and enterprise of the nation requires the adoption of the proposed measure.

Mr. M. observed that an argument had been pressed into service, in favor of the bill, to which he could not give his assent. He alluded to the observations of a gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. BAYLIES,) who had advocated the bill, in which a reference was made to the system of colonization adopted by European Governments. We have been told of the wealth which they had acquired from the colonies; the points of grandeur to which they have ascended by the aid derived from their foreign dependencies. Mr. M. said, such a system could never be adopted by our Government. It was abhorrent to its first principles. The nations of Europe, it is true, have aggrandized themselves on the spoils plundered from their colonies; but this Government can never employ a Pizarro or an East India Company to desolate colonies and conquered countries to enrich itself or its people. Whatever portion of the world we may occupy must have the benefit of our institutions. Its people must have the rights of American citizens. If wealth is acquired, it can be obtained only by legitimate means. It becomes a portion of national wealth, because it is enjoyed by a portion of the American family.

It has been urged, in opposition to the bill, that, if it succeed, our capital and population would be drawn from the United States; that it would drain us of our wealth and deprive us of the benefits of the enterprise of our people. Mr. M. said, he thought little was to be apprehended from this source. If wealth was acquired, it would be of course by American citizens. They would prefer the enjoyment of it here. It must, from necessity, flow into the United States. As to dangers resulting from emigration, they must exist only in imagination. We can furnish population for a respectable settlement abroad every year, and it could never be felt by the nation. Mr. M. said his feelings were not much excited by the subject; he did not consider it as a question of the first magnitude; yet he believed it would afford valuable facilities to our fisheries, navigation, and commerce; it would afford security and protection to a vast amount of property in the event of a war; it would secure the possession of that portion of our dominion to ourselves, and prevent an encroachment upon it by others. He thought the advantages resulting would more than overbalance any danger or expense which would follow the adoption of the measure, when restricted, as it would be, should the amendment, which he had suggested, be allowed.

Mr. TRACY, of New York, said he had had no expectation of participating in the discussion of this bill, until he heard the remarks of his honorable colleague, (Mr. COLDEN,) who had just sat down; but the views which this gentleman had expressed were so extended, and, he must be permitted to say, so extravagant, that he could not excuse himself from expressing his dissent from them. In common with other members, he had thought of the subject under consideration; but, as he had not intended to trouble the House with his views he had never afforded himself one moment's time to arrange the few and imperfect ideas which he entertained in relation to it. This circumstance, while it would, as Mr. T. hoped, be considered as some apology for the uninteresting and confused manner of his remarks, would, at any rate, afford to the House the comfortable assurance that its patience would not be long detained in attending to them.

Mr. T. said that, although the information which he possessed of the country proposed to be occupied, was neither extensive nor precise, still he believed it was more correct and valuable than any which had been disclosed by the gentlemen who had preceded him. This information induced him to think that the importance and utility which had been attached by them, to a settlement at the mouth of the Columbia, to say the least, were extravagantly overrated. He believed that he should succeed in satisfying the House that there were connected with this scheme no objects of national advantage, which would justify the very considerable expense which the experiment must occasion; and that the country generally, but peculiarly the mouth of the Columbia, afforded none of those attractions with which the fancy of the gentleman had decorated it. But, said Mr. T., if I had not thought that this measure involved consequences of more importance than the useless waste of a few thousands of dollars, however utopian the views of its advocates might have appeared to me, I should have rested my opposition on a silent vote against it; but it does seem to me that this bill involves a principle of great national consequence—a principle which he was sure this House was not prepared to establish, without, at least, pausing to reflect on its nature and importance. I allude, said Mr. T., to the principle of colonization which is contained in the bill. This principle of policy, should it now be recognised, may hereafter be quoted as a precedent for measures which will change the condition and nature of this Government. Mr. T. said he proposed to give his views on this feature of the bill, after he had first afforded the House the information he possessed of the country, and examined the nature of the advantages which the gentlemen anticipated from its occupation.

It had been his good fortune, Mr. T. observed, to have become acquainted, within the last two or three years, with several gentlemen of much intelligence and candor, who had been at the mouth of the Columbia river, some of whom had resided there for a considerable time. It was to conversations which he had, at different times with these gentlemen, that he was indebted for the information which he should now afford respecting this place and the circumjacent country—it was information upon which he was sure the House might implicitly rely, notwithstanding it will go so far as to dissipate the pleasing illusions which have been indulged of the beauty and fertility of the land of promise—it will indeed change an imaginary Eden and a fancied metropolis into a rude and inhospitable wilderness, and an inaccessible and dangerous coast; but, disagreeable as this transformation may be, it was one which must be produced by the facts he should disclose.

The coast, in the vicinity of the mouth of the Columbia, is high, rugged, and, to use the technical phrase of sailors, iron-bound. The entrance into the river, or rather into the estuary into which the river disembogues, is difficult and dangerous, owing to the bars or shoals which stretch out from Capes Disappointment and Adams, the two points which form the bay. These shoals approximate so much as to leave the channel between them too narrow to allow vessels to pass through with safety. It is only, therefore, with a fair and free wind that a ship can enter; for, without a leading wind, the strong tides which set here, at the rate of five or six miles an hour, would strand her on one or the other of the capes, as the tide should happen to be either at flood or ebb. The anchorage within is tolerably good, except that the great action of the tides is calculated to make the anchors foul, and render much labor necessary to keep the vessel safe at her moorings. But, as the winds which prevail on the coast are principally from the west, the difficulty in going out is much greater than that of entering. Vessels in the harbor would often be detained for weeks before an opportunity would present for putting to sea. Upon the whole, the harbor must be considered, at all seasons, bad, and, during the winter months, almost, if not altogether, impracticable. The climate, instead of being as I have heard it described, bland and salubrious, is bleak and inhospitable. It is true that deep snows or severe frosts are seldom known, during four or five months of the year, but the vapor arising from the ocean, which is driven by the constantly prevailing west winds on the high mountains, is condensed by the cold, and descends in drenching rains almost unremittingly. A dry day at this season is a luxury rarely enjoyed, and the cheering ray of a sunbeam scarcely ever experienced. As you ascend the river the period of the rainy season diminishes, and at the first spurs of the Rocky Mountains, a distance of four hundred or five hundred miles, it is almost unknown. But the climate, owing to this excess of humidity at one season, and the feeble influence of the sun in the other, is believed, from experiments which have been made, to be incapable of nourishing many of the valuable products which are cultivated with success in the corresponding latitudes of the Atlantic. The attempts which were made to cultivate maize wholly failed; and, although turnips, cabbages, and some other culinary vegetables have succeeded, the prospects for wheat, rye, oats, &c., are miserable indeed. The face of the country, for some distance from the ocean, although presenting a strong and deep soil, is rugged, broken, and covered with impenetrable forests of hemlock, spruce, and white cedar, of prodigious size, and affording the most discouraging prospects to the settlers. The country generally continues of this character until you reach the Wallamut river, which enters the Columbia about one hundred miles from the sea. In this distance, there are occasionally some small tracts of alluvial land, which, being level and less burdened with timber, might be more easily fitted for cultivation than the broken uplands; but even these are often subjected to inundation in Summer, when a dissolution of the mountain snows swell the river. It is true, spots might be found above the reach of high water, but they are too insignificant in extent to be considered in relation to this object of forming a compact and important settlement. There are places along the Columbia where a few families might sit down together, but they are not numerous, nor is there any spot sufficiently large for a considerable population throughout the whole timbered country, which extends a distance of about two hundred miles from the sea. Between this point and the spurs of the Rocky Mountains, forest trees totally disappear, and nothing larger than the common willow is to be seen. This whole intervening tract is one of gravel and sand, with just soil enough to sustain a scanty covering of grass. On the Wallamut, a tract of country of moderate extent is found, which affords some advantages of soil and climate superior to those which have been just mentioned; and it is here, and here only, that the least prospects for an agricultural settlement can be found.

JANUARY, 1823.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

Mr. TRACY observed that, if the statements which he had now furnished to the House were correct, and he was sure they were substantially so, they must dispel the reveries in which some of the advocates of the bill had indulged, of witnessing a new and powerful nation rising up on the borders of the Pacific, which should be indebted to us for their religion, their institutions, and their laws, and which, at no distant day, was largely to participate in the blessings and powers of the Government which we enjoy. For his own part, he was satisfied that no extensive civilized settlement would or could be made in that country within any period of time to which, as rational and practical men, we can extend our views.

Mr. T. said, he should now examine some of the advantages which gentlemen anticipated from the adoption of the measure. Several gentlemen who have advocated the bill, and particularly his worthy colleague (Mr. COLDEN) had insisted very much upon the great commercial advantages which would be produced by a settlement; for his part, he had not been able to discover them. The peculiar nature and great value to this country of the Northwest trade had been urged, and a striking illustration of its productiveness afforded. He was not disposed to dispute the utility and importance of this branch of our commerce. He was aware that it was one which required small capital, and which had returned prodigious profits. But he begged gentlemen to recollect that it was not so important for them to establish the value of this trade as it was to show that its safety and success depended upon our taking possession of the coast. Unless they can satisfy the House that a military occupation of the mouth of the Columbia will either promote or protect this traffic, they can gain nothing by showing its value and importance. Mr. T. said, he would state a few facts relating to this trade, which he hoped would satisfy gentlemen, not only that they misapprehended both its character and extent, but that the measure they proposed might have a very different effect upon it from what they had anticipated. The first trade on this coast by our citizens was as early as 1787. For some time after this, it was confined to a few vessels; but, as early as 1801, there were fifteen American vessels employed in it, a greater number than has ever since been engaged. The present number, he understood, was twelve or thirteen, but this limitation or diminution of the trade had not been produced by any difficulties which were experienced on the coast, but by the limited supply of the article for which alone the trade was valuable—he meant the skins of the sea otter. The number of these animals was sensibly diminishing; but the supply had never been obtained from the vicinity of the Columbia river, but much further North, and within the undisputed limits of Russian territory. No gentleman had succeeded in showing that a settlement at the mouth of the river would facilitate or increase this trade. We now enjoy all the advantage for this commerce, which we have a right either to expect or demand. It cannot be materially extended, for the supply of the article in which it principally consists is limited and diminishing. Besides, said Mr. T., what effect could the small garrison which it is proposed to place there, have in increasing or facilitating our trade with the natives? Its influence would be to produce on their minds jealousy and apprehension; and, instead of promoting the friendly intercourse which now exists, in all probability it would destroy it. I object altogether, said Mr. T., to the principle of extending our military posts beyond the pale and protection of our civilized population. Its effect is to expose our troops to dangers from which they cannot be relieved, and to provoke cruel and expensive wars with the Indians. Military posts should be placed for the purpose of protecting an existing frontier population, but not for the purpose of attracting our population to an exposed situation. Its natural tendency is to diffuse. Its limits are already sufficiently large; as it becomes more dense, it will extend them; but it is not the true policy of the Government to invite its dispersion.

It was for these reasons, said Mr. T., that I opposed the Yellow Stone expedition, in which opposition I was happy in having the concurrence of the gentleman who introduced this bill, and yet the destination of that expedition was within the circle of civilization. I might almost say in the bosom of the nation, when compared with the mouth of the Columbia river. As respects the advantages of the settlement for our whale fishery, Mr. TRACY said he did not pretend to be so competent to judge as many others. He believed, however, that the whale fishery had not been prosecuted to any great extent as high up on the coast as latitude 46, the mouth of the Columbia; but, admitting that it shall be so, he could not perceive what assistance or advantage the whalemen could derive from a defenceless and destitute settlement. The harbor, he had already shown, was not such a one as it was desirable to frequent, and it was evident the country was not likely to supply any of those comforts or necessities which might render a port desirable to those who were engaged in so difficult and dangerous pursuits. But, another reason, which more than all the others satisfied him that a military position on the coast was not important for commercial purposes, was the fact that it had not been asked for by any portion of our mercantile community. The merchants of this country, as they are the most enterprising, so he believed they were the most astute class of our citizens—the first to discover their true interests, and the loudest to claim protection in the enjoyment of them. If such splendid advantages are to be realized from this measure, it is incredible that they should have escaped the attention of those who would have been most likely to have discovered them, and who certainly will be the most sure to be benefited by them.

H. OF R.

Columbia River.

JANUARY, 1823.

Another important inducement which is urged for the adoption of this measure, is the influence which a settlement on the coast would have to quiet the preposterous claims, and prevent the dangerous encroachments of the Russian Government. The gentleman had dwelt much on the extravagant and ridiculous pretensions which had been advanced by the Russian Minister in his correspondence with our Government on the subject of this country. Mr. T. said, that he believed no gentleman could entertain a serious apprehension that the Emperor of Russia had ever thought of enforcing these pretensions. He believed they were the abstract speculations of a diplomatist, who had no object in presenting them but to amuse his master by his ingenuity, and to show his own adroitness in defending fanciful titles to wild and unoccupied territory. To suppose that the Russian Emperor ever contemplated exercising exclusive sovereignty over the wide ocean between the American coast and Asia, was to suppose him a madman. Any step which he shall take to enforce this most absurd and unjust pretension, can be regarded as nothing less than an act of direct hostility against us; but it will be an act which a pitiful garrison at the mouth of the Columbia can neither avert nor avenge.

The anticipation which the advocates of the bill had indulged of seeing the trade of this country and of Europe with the East Indies conducted across the American continent, he feared would never be realized. Mr. T. said that his residence was at an important point, on the route which his colleague had designated for this commerce, and, of course, no one could feel a stronger wish for the realization of those views than he did; but, he must confess, they were too sublimated for his imagination. A commerce which was to be conducted from New York by the great canal to the lakes; from thence to the Mississippi, and up to the rapid and unnavigable Missouri for several thousand miles; across the inhospitable and almost rocky mountains; down a most turbulent and obstructed river, to the shore of the Pacific, and thence across the ocean many thousand miles, presented to his mind difficulties and obstacles which were not easy to be surmounted.

Until the knowledge of shipbuilding was lost, and the art of navigation forgotten, he could not believe that a connexion of this nature would be substituted for the present easy, though perhaps circuitous, intercourse with India. Sir, said Mr. T., when we reflect that the interposition of the narrow Isthmus of Suez, between the Mediterranean and the Red sea, although nothing but a level plain, has interrupted the former intercourse with India, and has for ages turned the whole commerce of Europe with that country into a circuitous voyage of many thousand miles, how can we fancy that we shall ever overcome the infinitely greater obstacles which are presented in this imaginary project? To my mind, sir, no scheme can appear more visionary than that of an internal commerce between the Hudson and the Columbia. The God of nature has interposed obstacles to this connexion, which neither the enterprise nor science of this or any other age can overcome.

Mr. T. said, that his colleague seemed to consider the improbability that this occupation would bring us in collision with any of the European Powers who claim territory on the coast, afforded an argument in favor of the measure. He had entered into a considerable investigation of their rights and claims to show that this settlement could not interfere with any of them. Mr. T. said, that he was ready to admit, that neither England, Spain, nor Russia, had the right, or probably would have the disposition to complain of the measure. But, he was sorry that his colleague had forgotten, that, although neither of these nations had a right to object, there was a people who had. He alluded to the present inhabitants, and true proprietors of the country. The Indians of that coast, he had heard, were numerous and warlike, and he did not believe they would regard, with complacency, a military establishment among them. He had no doubt but it would involve us in a war with them. It was probable we might succeed in subjugating, perhaps in exterminating them, but it could only be done at a considerable expense of blood and treasure. And a conquest, under such circumstances, would redound but little to the glory of this nation. Mr. T. said, that he would not undertake to say how far the rights and necessities of civilized man, might justify him in encroaching on the cultivated, though indisputable possessions of the barbarian; but, he would say, that no humane heart could be disposed to add, to the long catalogue of injuries which this nation has inflicted upon the aborigines of the country, a wanton and exterminating war with this unoffending and remote people. His mind revolted at the thought of renewing with them that system of fraud and violence, by which he feared too great a share of our possessions had been acquired. Nothing but an urgent necessity could induce him to support a measure calculated to produce this result.

I have, said Mr. T. consumed so much more time than I intended in examining the advantages which gentlemen have promised from the adoption of the bill, that I shall but briefly notice what I consider its most important and interesting feature. I mean the principle of colonization, which its passage will establish. To be sure, it has been insisted that this bill does not contemplate a colonial establishment, inasmuch as the territory proposed to be settled, is within the nominal limits of this country. This circumstance cannot vary the character of the establishment. Indeed, almost every colony which has been planted by an European nation, was upon territory which belonged, or at least was claimed to belong to the nation. Its being or not being a colony, does not depend upon its location. Will not this settlement, if it shall be made, be a dependency on this Government? Must it not be founded at its expense, supported by its money, protected by its power, and sustained by its resources? Will it not be governed by an Executive which it has no influence in creating, and controlled by the acts of a Legislature, in whose councils it cannot participate? If so, whatever name it may assume, it is, to all purposes, a colony. Indeed, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. BAYLIES,) who spoke some days ago, was so well convinced of this fact, that he considered it necessary to enter into an elaborate and learned argument in favor of the colonial systems of Europe. I shall not attempt to follow him through it; but his speech, although ingenious and eloquent, failed to convince me that the people of any nation of Europe had experienced advantages from colonies, to the extent which he supposed; much less, that the adoption of that policy would be beneficial to the people of this country.

JANUARY, 1823.

Columbia River.

H. OF R.

Mr. T. said he would not extend his remarks, by demonstrating that the possession of colonial dependencies was inconsistent with the genius of this Government and the republican nature of our institutions. Its influence upon them must be apparent to every mind. For his own part, he should look at no event with greater apprehension and regret, than one which should place under the control of our National Government, extensive colonial dependencies. He should consider such an event to be intimately associated with its destruction, or at least with the prostration of that liberty, for the protection of which, alone, we can wish the Government to exist. Against this view of the colonial character of the establishment, it has been urged that, should it be made, the rapid emigration to it would soon exalt it from an humble colonial condition, and entitle it to claim to admission into this Union "on an equal footing with the original States." This event, said Mr. T., if the views I have offered of the country are in any degree correct, cannot be rationally anticipated. But if it shall happen, in what condition will this country be placed? Can any legislator seriously think of extending its limits four thousand miles west of the mouth of the Missouri? Does any one believe that such an extension can be made, without parting the chain of our Union? Elastic as I believe this chain to be, it cannot be stretched from the Atlantic, across the Rocky Mountains, to the Pacific, without breaking! Gentlemen may indulge in the speculative benevolence of extending the blessings of our happy Government to the uttermost ends of the earth. So far as feelings of philanthropy and freedom are concerned, I go with them; but I cannot believe that the people of the Atlantic and the Pacific can ever be brought under the banners of the same Government, consistent with the interests or happiness of either; nature has fixed limits for our nation; she has kindly interposed as our Western barrier, mountains almost inaccessible, whose base she has skirted with irreclaimable deserts of sand. This barrier our population can never pass—if it does, it becomes the people of a new world, whose connexions, whose feelings, and whose interests, are not with us, but with our antipodes.

Mr. Woon, of New York, said the first question that occurs on this proposition, as on the introduction of every measure of public policy, is, what benefit is to result from it? The gentlemen who have advocated this bill, said he, have given us an interesting view of our trade in the Pacific ocean, and on the Northwest coast. If it is as valuable as they have represented it to be, and I have no doubt of the correctness of the representation, I hope they will not suffer themselves to be seduced by a glowing imagination or benevolent feelings, into the adoption of a measure that is directly calculated, in its operation, to divest us of it. They have drawn a splendid picture of the progress of improvement, and of the future destinies of the new State, whose foundations are to be laid by this bill—the change of a wilderness into cultivated fields—the transformation of savages into civilized and polished citizens—the erection of civil society and civil institutions, with all the arts that improve and adorn society, on a soil that has heretofore been the theatre of barbarous manners and barbarous rites, are pleasing ideas; they interest the imagination, and are in accordance with the best feelings of the heart; but they are not safe guides in legislation.

Sir, is there any necessity for a measure of this kind? Is our jurisdiction over the country disputed? No such thing. Have our merchants petitioned for it? Have they represented such a measure to be necessary for their protection or for any other purpose? There is not a single petition upon your table on the subject, from any quarter. The measure is not called for by any great public interest; it is proposed merely as a measure of national policy, and is to be tested as all measures of that nature are, by its bearings on the public interests. Is it, then, the interest of the United States to incur the expense and risk the consequences of a military occupation and forced settlement of the country on the Columbia river? Will the contemplated settlement afford an adequate indemnification?

We are urged to this enterprise in consequence of our legal jurisdiction over the country. Is it contemplated to embrace the settlement as a member of our Union? The distance between us renders that impracticable. The proposed measure must therefore result in the establishment either of a colony or an independent State; neither of which, in my judgment, can be of any benefit to the United States. Colonies are of little importance to any but manufacturing nations. They require a constant supply of manufactured goods, and will, without restraint, seek for supplies from the nation that will afford them on the best terms. How could the United States undertake to supply the necessities of a growing colony, when, for many years to come, without diverting their capital to manufacturing establishments, they will be utterly unable to supply their own wants? The liberation of Spanish America from the restraints of the colony system, has created an extensive demand for manufactures. Are we in a condition to avail ourselves of it? Has not the principal advantage of the change resulted to Great Britain? And is not the greater part of what we export there, the product of the workshops of that nation?

Is the profit we derive from the trade much more than the compensation for carriage, and would not the freight of the goods carried to the new colony be the sole benefit that we should derive from it; and would not this be very inconsiderable in amount; liable to be lessened or lost by competition, and to result in the extension of British manufactures, British commerce, and British navigation?

It is alleged that the European nations have derived great advantages from planting colonies. This is readily admitted, but the situation of England, France, Spain, and Portugal, in the seventeenth century, was very different from that of the United States at present; they were full of people, and had laid the foundations of manufacturing establishments, and were in a condition to export them to any extent, for the supply of their colonists.

To insure their growth, they established the colony system; they confined the trade of their colonies exclusively to the mother countries. The colonists were inhibited from any intercourse with other nations, and contributed much to enlarge the manufactures, commerce, and navigation, of their mother countries. The colony system is a system of oppression; it reduces the colony to political slavery; for, however free the individuals may be, the State is in chains. It was by monopolizing the trade of their colonies, therefore, that the European nations have rendered them beneficial to themselves.

The United States are not at liberty to adopt that system; it constituted one item in the long catalogue of grievances which provoked the Revolution, and is abhorrent to the principles of our political institutions.

In analogy with the course observed, in relation to the Territories of the United States, as soon as the people of the new settlement were capable of self-government, the United States would be bound to emancipate them.

Sir, the operation of the bill will then be the erection of an independent State. Will this result in any advantage to the United States? Independent States are upon an equality; intercourse between them is regulated by mutual interest. What inducement of interest will bind the new State of Columbia to the United States? They are too remote to derive any benefit from political connexions—will any benefit result from commercial intercourse? Trade must be of very limited extent between States situated in the same climate, and in the same stage of improvement; they will abound in the same productions, and will want the same supplies. An extensive commerce can only exist, and become mutually profitable between countries, situated in different climates, whose productions are dissimilar; or between States in different stages of improvement—manufacturing States and infant colonies, whose productions consist of raw materials.

The United States and the State of Columbia lie in the same climate, will be nearly in the same state of improvement, will abound in the same productions, and need the same supplies; there will be no tie of mutual interest to bind them together; no inducement to a commercial intercourse. After they have become capable by your fostering care, and at your expense, of self-subsistence, and self-government, they will pursue such course and form such connexions as their interests and local situation may dictate. Even the benefit of the freight of European goods, which might result to the United States during the minority of the colony, would be lost the moment they became emancipated, and in a condition to make a better bargain with Great Britain, Spain, or any other manufacturing nation.

In such a case the establishment would, with regard to European commerce, become contributory to the extension of the manufactures, commerce, and navigation of other nations.

A voyage to the United States will occupy from five to eight months—a voyage to Acapulco, Coquimbo, or Valparaiso, may be performed in half the time, and will afford a better market for the productions of their soil; these will therefore be carried there, while the produce of the sea and the fur trade will be carried to China.

Again, sir, the settlement, if it should succeed and become an independent State, will be composed of those enterprising citizens who have explored the Pacific ocean from the South to the North pole, and who are conversant with its fisheries and the fur trade; and the moment they are able will engross the whole. Thus, by the growth of the settlement of Columbia river, the United States will forever lose a portion of their most enterprising citizens, and will jeopardize a portion of their European carrying trade—the valuable commerce of the Pacific ocean, and all the revenue derived from it.

I may add, as further objections to the enterprise, the expense with which it must be attended—the danger of its provoking Indian hostilities—the evils arising from draining our population from the frontier settlements, and the mischievous effect this would have in retarding the progress of cultivation and improvements in the new States.

To effect the settlement, a communication by land would be indispensable; a chain of military posts must be extended from St. Louis to Columbia river; a strong fortification must be erected at some convenient place on the river; and a respectable naval force must be maintained there for the security of the settlement. It would become a source of great and increasing expense, incomparably greater than the amount of revenue derived from our trade in that ocean, and probably greater than the profits of the trade to the country. It is not reasonable to suppose all this can be effected without alarming the fears and exciting the jealousy of the Indian nations on both sides of the Rocky Mountains, and without encountering the risk of an Indian war, and endangering the quiet and safety of our frontier settlements, as well as the settlement at Columbia river. The emigration from our interior settlements would probably be considerable; this would invite aggression and lessen their capacity for defence, and must contribute to retard the progress of cultivation and of every species of social and moral improvement.

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

These considerations have produced a conviction in my mind that the operation of the bill will be destructive of the true interests of the United States, and ought not to be passed.

I will barely add, that whenever it shall be deemed proper to encourage a settlement in that part of the country, in my humble opinion, the most eligible course will be to suffer a company to occupy it, to extinguish the Indian title, to form a settlement, and, as soon as they are able, to form an independent representative government; but I am persuaded the longer this is delayed the better.

Mr. COLDEN, after a brief reply to some remarks which had dropped from gentlemen opposed to the bill, renewed his motion to amend as above stated, which he had withdrawn, to give gentlemen an opportunity of presenting their views on the principles contained therein; and, the question being taken, there were in favor of his amendment 48, against it 54.

So the motion was negatived.

Mr. MALLARY then moved to amend the bill by inserting, after the enacting clause, the following:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to occupy that portion of the territory of the United States situated on the Pacific Ocean, north of the forty-second degree of north latitude, and west of the Rocky Mountains, with a military force, and to cause a suitable fort to be erected on the Oregon river, in the region of tide water; which tracts of country in this section described is hereby declared to be the Territory of Oregon.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, as soon as it may be done on reasonable terms, to extinguish the Indian title to a tract of country not exceeding thirty miles square, which shall include the place selected for said fort.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to each actual settler, being the head of a family, who shall remove to said Territory with his family, 320 acres of land; and to an unmarried man, between 18 and 45 years of age, who shall establish himself in said Territory, and pursue any mechanic art, or cultivate the ground therein, 200 acres: Provided, That no person shall be entitled to the allowance of land made by this section, unless he shall be a citizen of the United States: And provided also, That this allowance of land shall not be made after the expiration of six years from the time the Indian title shall have been extinguished as aforesaid.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to open a port of entry within and for said Territory, whenever he may deem the public good may require it, and appoint such officers as may be necessary for the same; after which the revenue laws of the United States shall extend to, and be in force in, said Territory.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the sum of sixty thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to carry into effect the provisions of this act, out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated.

This amendment being read, the bill, was ordered to lie on the table; and then the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 14.

Mr. STERLING, of New York, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel Seward," reported the same, without amendment, and the bill was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STERLING, from the same committee, also reported a bill to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to remit the instalments due on certain lots in Shawneetown, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill to establish an additional Land Office in the Territory of Michigan.

Mr. SLOANE, from the Committee of Elections, reported that "Joseph M. Hernandez appears to have been duly elected a delegate to represent the Territory of Florida in the Seventeenth Congress of the United States; and, as such, is entitled to a seat in this House;" which report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VANCE submitted the following resolution, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to lay before this House a statement showing what contracts for surveying the lands of the United States in Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas, have been made, by the Surveyor General thereof, since the year 1817; with whom made; for what quantities; to whom the payments therefor were made in each case; also, whether the surveying were actually performed by the original contractors, in person, or by others, under sub-contracts; if by others, at what price, per mile, the sub-contractors performed the work in each case; also, the difference, if any, between the amount paid by the United States for such surveying, and the amount received by the actual surveyors of the land.

Mr. STERLING, of New York, submitted the following resolution, which was read, and laid on the table one day, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House what progress has been made towards the completion of the military road leading from Plattsburg to Sackett's Harbor, in the State of New York; how much of said road remains unfinished; the probable expense of completing the same; and, also, any information in his possession showing the importance of said road in a military point of view.

H. OF R.

Internal Improvements.

JANUARY, 1823.

On motion of Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing in force the act to provide for the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, approved March 3, 1817.

On motion of Mr. TUCKER, of South Carolina, the House went into consideration of the report in the case of Samuel Wharton, of the State of South Carolina, who claims compensation for services rendered, under the direction of the marshal of that State, in taking the census for 1820.

Mr. TUCKER moved to strike from the resolution appended to the report the word "not," so as to reverse the report; which, after some debate, in which Mr. T. bore the principal part, was decided in the affirmative; and the report was then re-committed to the Committee of Claims, to report a bill in conformity with the resolution as amended.

Mr. FLOYD rose to state that, as the amendment yesterday proposed to his bill was of some length, requiring examination by members before acting on it, intimating that he was disposed to favor the amendment; and, as the information which had been asked from the Executive on this subject had not been received, he should not at present, nor for a few days to come, call up again his Mouth-of-Columbia bill.

On motion of Mr. McCoy, the bill, entitled "An act in addition to 'An act for the more prompt settlement of public accounts, and for the punishment of the crime of perjury,'" was read, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. Cook, of Illinois, it was

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of requiring all payments of money out of the Treasury of the United States to be paid directly from the Treasury, to the party entitled to receive it, where such mode of payment may not be detrimental to the public interest.

In offering this resolution—

Mr. Cook said he had but a few words to say in support of the resolution. The amount of money that passed into the hands of disbursing officers was very great, and the number of those officers was multiplied to an unnecessary extent. The object of the resolution, he said, was to discontinue the practice of placing in the hands of those officers all moneys that it was not necessary to the public interest to confide to them. He believed that the list of public defaulters was greatly swelled by the number of disbursing officers who had been faithless in making their disbursements. If the individuals who were entitled to money out of the Treasury, for services rendered to the Government, could be supplied with drafts on the Treasury, they would, in most instances, prefer them to the money, particularly in distant parts of the Union; and, if there should be some slight inconvenience to such persons, the door that such a practice would close against official fraud and speculation would more than make amends for it. The effect that the present mode of paying out the public money through disbursing agents had upon the public morals, was highly deleterious; and if the interest of individuals could be properly provided for, and at the same time remove the temptations now so frequently held out to public officers to betray the confidence reposed in them, it would be an important point gained. That some measure could be adopted, which would greatly protect the Treasury against such abuses as had so repeatedly happened of late years, he had no doubt; and no committee was better able to devise that measure than the Committee of Ways and Means.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill to provide for procuring the necessary surveys and estimates for certain roads and canals.

[This bill proposes to provide, "That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, to be made for a national road from the City of Washington to that of New Orleans; and for canals, from the harbor of Boston, to the south, along the Atlantic seacoast; and to connect the waters of the Ohio above, with those below the falls at Louisville; Lake Erie with the Ohio river, and the tide-waters of the Potomac with the same stream at Cumberland, designating what parts may be made capable of sloop navigation; and for communications between the Susquehanna and the rivers Seneca and Genesee, which empty into Lake Ontario; and between the Tennessee and Savannah, and between the Tennessee, Alabama, and Tombigbee rivers; and for such other routes for roads and canals as he may deem of national importance in a commercial or military point of view. The surveys, plans, and estimates, for each, when completed, to be laid before Congress.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, to carry into effect the objects of this act, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ two skilful civil engineers, and such officers of the corps of engineers, or who may be detailed to do duty with that corps, as he may think proper; and the sum of — dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."]

The bill having been read—

Mr. STEWART proposed an amendment to the detail of the bill.

Mr. COCKE requested Mr. STEWART to withdraw his amendment for the present; for, he said, he should like to hear from the gentleman who reported it some reasons to satisfy the House of the utility of this measure. He wished, before proceeding to amend the bill, to be satisfied of the correctness of its principle. He wished the gentleman also to show the power which this House has to pass this bill.

Mr. STEWART consented to withdraw his amendment for the present.

Mr. HEMPHILL then proposed an amendment to the detail of the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR (Speaker) rose to make a mo-

JANUARY, 1823.

Internal Improvements.

H. OF R.

tion, the object of which, he said, was to test at once the principle of this bill. This motion was to strike out the first section of the bill. He did not propose to enter into a discussion of the principle of the bill. The subject has been so much discussed in this House and this nation, that he took it for granted Congress was prepared to determine at once whether it would or would not commence a system of internal improvement. This bill, Mr. B. said, was the means whereby to attain that end, the object of it being to cause surveys and estimates to be made with a view to that end. It could not be necessary, he said, for him to remark, that the House ought not to pass this bill, unless it was disposed to commence and prosecute a system of internal improvement. Being decidedly of the opinion, which he had long entertained, that this House has no Constitutional power on this head, and that the attempt to exercise it would give rise to feuds and jars among the members of the Confederacy; being opposed to the establishment of a system of internal improvement, and considering the measure proposed by that bill as a means to that end, he moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Upon this motion being announced—

Mr. HEMPHILL rose, and addressed the Chair as follows:

Mr. Chairman: It was my intention to offer some remarks in favor of the present bill at some stage of its progress, and I thank the honorable gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. COCKE) for affording me this early opportunity, by calling on me to state the reasons why the measure recommended should be adopted, and to show that Congress possess the power finally to accomplish this object. I cheerfully comply, as I consider the measure of as high concern to this country as any other which could be introduced here for discussion. It is equally interesting to the present generation and to posterity; it contains nothing that is either new or romantic; it is a subject which, on many occasions, has received the consideration of Congress, and it is one which never will be abandoned—nothing but success can terminate its repeated debates on this floor. The importance of it is universally acknowledged; indeed we cannot read of improvements, even in foreign countries, without being infinitely gratified. Great works, of a permanent character, are every where admired, and yet it seems extraordinary that any thing like a general system of improvements has to encounter, in the beginning, a powerful opposition. It is not a century since the erection of toll gates was spiritedly resisted in England; and, if my recollection is correct, it is less than thirty years since the first turnpike road in the United States, from Philadelphia to Lancaster, was violently opposed.

The local jealousies and prejudices which are so fatal to improvements have entirely subsided in England, as respects both roads and canals; and there is now scarcely a spot in that island which is not within a reasonable distance of a water transportation along canals.

The immense undertaking in the State of New York, which would do honor to any age or nation, had similar prejudices to overcome; but I sincerely hope that we have now arrived at a period in which there is a concurrence of opinion among a large majority of the people on this interesting subject.

I will not, Mr. Chairman, detain the Committee, by going into any tedious detail on the capacity of the country for improvements. There is a general knowledge on this subject, which we all equally possess; waters, we know, may be connected by short portages in instances innumerable; the country (if I may be allowed the expression) can be converted into convenient islands, each containing a capacity within itself of water communications, traversing in almost every direction.

Our general knowledge on this subject is derived from various sources; from the valuable maps of the country, and in some instances from actual surveys; from reports made by the heads of Departments; from various reports in the Senate and this House, and from proceedings and writings in many of the States. I will trouble the Committee with the reading only of a single extract from one document—I mean the President's Message accompanying his rejection of the Cumberland Road bill. (Mr. H. then read as follows:)

"I think I may venture to affirm, that there is no part of our globe, comprehending so many degrees of latitude on the main ocean, and so many degrees of longitude into the interior, that admits of such great improvement, and at so little expense. The Atlantic on the one side, and the lakes, forming almost inland seas, on the other, separated by high mountains, which rise in the valley of the St. Lawrence and terminate in that of the Mississippi, traversing from North to South almost the whole interior, with innumerable rivers on every side of these mountains, some of vast extent, many of which take their sources near to each other, give the great outline."

It is the design of the bill to obtain accurate information, with plans and estimates, for the purpose of commencing a general system of internal improvement. The committee which reported the bill, at the last session, selected some of the most prominent objects, leaving a discretionary power with the President to cause plans and estimates to be made in any other places which he might deem important, in a commercial or military point of view.

This is a part of the subject which will present difficulties and create local jealousies; as every portion of the country cannot apparently be benefited alike. But such obstacles must be subdued by the good sense and dispassionate deliberation of those in power. It will, however, be recollected, that the object now is merely to obtain information to enable a future Congress to say when and where the works shall be commenced.

Many improvements have been made by the States, and many more, doubtless, will be made; but the great and national objects never can be perfected by the States. They must be performed by the General Government, or never come into existence. The President, in his Message, has very forcibly illustrated this view of the subject. It is as follows :

H. OF R.

Internal Improvements.

JANUARY, 1823.

"It cannot be doubted that improvements for great national purposes would be better made by the National Government, than by the governments of the several States. Our experience prior to the adoption of the Constitution, demonstrated that, in the exercise, by the individual States, of most of the powers granted to the United States, a contracted rivalry of interest and misapplied jealousy of each other, had an important influence on all their measures, to the great injury of the whole. This was practically exemplified by the regulations which they severally made of their commerce with foreign nations and with each other. It was this utter incapacity in the State governments, proceeding from these and other causes, to act as a nation and to perform all the duties which a nation owed to itself, under any system which left the General Government dependent on the States, which produced the transfer of these powers to the United States, by the establishment of the present Constitution. The reasoning which was applicable to the grant of any of the powers now vested in Congress, is likewise so, at least to a certain extent, to that in question. It is natural that the States, individually, in making improvements, should look to their particular and local interests. The members composing their respective Legislatures represent the people of each State only, and might not feel themselves at liberty to look at objects in these respects beyond that limit. If the resources of the Union were to be brought into operation under the direction of the State Assemblies, or in concert with them, it may be apprehended that every measure would become the object of negotiation, or bargain, or barter, much to the disadvantage of the system, as well as discredit of both governments. But Congress would look to the whole, and make improvements to promote the welfare of the whole.

"It is the peculiar felicity of the proposed amendment, that, while it will enable the United States to accomplish every national object, the improvements made with that view will eminently promote the welfare of the individual States, who may also add such others as their own particular interests may require."

Nothing can be more judicious and enlightened than the remarks of the President throughout, in favor of the expediency of commencing improvements by the General Government.

Roads, to be made by the General Government, would be but few, and these leading to the extremities of the Union ; and such others as may be necessary for military purposes. We have a road over the Alleghany mountain, to the West, which can be extended to the Mississippi ; and it appears to me that it would be exceedingly useful to have a road to the southwest, leading from the city of Washington to New Orleans. The distance would be about one thousand miles. Of the expense I can form no estimate. I presume that the greater part of the way, a good road could be made without being turnpiked. But the greatest aid required of the General Government would be in making canals, and improving the beds of rivers.

The difference in the expense between land and water carriage is almost inconceivable. A barrel of flour can be carried from Philadelphia to England for half a dollar, three thousand miles ; but to Pittsburg, along a turnpike road, about a tenth part of the distance, it would cost five dollars. The same proportion, nearly, would be experienced as to the carriage of cotton, iron, hemp, tobacco, and all bulky articles, as well as in the case of many manufactured articles. The reason of the vast difference in the expense of carriage, by roads and canals, Mr. Fulton told us, is obvious to every one who will take the trouble to reflect, that, on a road of the best kind, four horses, and sometimes five, are necessary to transport only three tons ; but on a canal, one horse will draw twenty-five tons, and thus perform the work of forty horses ; the saving being in the value of the horses, the feeding, wagons, and attendance.

There is an interesting detail on the subject of canals in a number of a late Edinburgh Encyclopædia, which I am sorry is not in the Library. A history is there given of the rise and progress of all canals that are known of in the world. The people of England, after experiencing their advantages, are astonished at the delay that had taken place before their commencement.

In the beginning of the reign of George III. the first charter was granted to the Duke of Bridgewater ; and this canal yields now £80,000 per annum ; and such was the rapid growth of canals in England, after knowing their benefits, that George III. lived to see more than a hundred completed. If the Government had participated in the profits arising from canals, it would have added to her resources an immense revenue. We should take advantage of the oversight of England in this respect, and engage in works of utility, by which the best interests of the citizens will be promoted, and the revenue of the country permanently increased. The book I have alluded to, states that more than 2,400 miles of canalling have been completed, and that scarcely any district of country is more than fifteen miles from a water communication. Since then, the Caledonian canal has been finished, opening a communication between the eastern and western seas, thereby avoiding the dangerous navigation of the Pentland Frith, or the channel. This is a work of magnitude, resembling, and perhaps superior, to the canal of Languedoc, in France, which joins the ocean with the Mediterranean. The royal canal from Canton to Peking, is 825 miles long. But what appears to me to be more extraordinary, and worthy of admiration is, that Holland, with a population of one-third of that of England, has expended more than three hundred millions of pounds sterling in public improvements.

I beg leave here to call the attention of the Committee to the prices of canal stock, taken from the European Magazine, for 1820. It contains the original cost of shares, the present prices, and the annual dividends, of a few of the British canals :

		Cost.	Pres't prices.	Ann'l div'd.
Birmingham	-	£25	£535	£20
Chesterfield	-	100	120	8

JANUARY, 1823.

Internal Improvements.

H. of R.

	Cost.	Pres't prices.	Ann'l div'd.
Coventry - - -	100	999	44
Erewash - - -	100	1,000	58
Grand Junction -	100	218	9
Leeds and Liverpool -	100	278	10
Leicester - - -	100	260	10
Oxford - - -	100	640	32
Staffordshire & Worcester - - -	100	642	40
Trent and Mersey -	200	900	75
Warwick & Birmingham - - -	100	210	11
Warwick and Napton -	100	235	10 10
Loughborough -		2,400	119
Milton and Newbury -		170	8 10
Mersey and Irwell -		650	30 00

The first price of the three last are not given but I am informed that it was £100 each. Such exorbitant gain could not be expected here for a considerable time, but large profits, in some instances, might reasonably be calculated upon. The profits of the New York canals, it is supposed, will in a few years extinguish the expense of the works, and afterwards yield an annual revenue of more than a million. I have no hesitation in believing, that a canal along the Atlantic coast would produce more than six per cent. immediately after its completion, and, in a few years, rise a third in value.

It is stated, in Mr. Gallatin's report, that an inland navigation, from Massachusetts to the extremity of Georgia, is interrupted only by four necks of land, which are the isthmus of Barnstable; that part of New Jersey, which extends from the Raritan to the Delaware; the peninsula between the Delaware and Chesapeake, and the low and marshy tract which divides the Chesapeake from Albemarle Sound. The Massachusetts canal would be about 26 miles; the New Jersey 28, and each of the two southern canals 20 miles, making altogether less than a hundred miles. The expense of making these canals is estimated at about three millions of dollars. One of the canals alluded to in the report has been completed last Fall, under the superintendence of some of the corps of engineers. It is the Dismal Swamp canal, which is twenty-two and a quarter miles in length; in breadth thirty-eight feet at the surface of the water, and in depth six feet. It is the first canal in America that is calculated for sloop navigation, and is sufficient for the common sized craft that navigate those waters, and will admit vessels to pass through the locks with sixty or seventy hogsheads of tobacco, or nearly 300 barrels of flour, with their masts standing.

Its south end terminates at Joice's creek, which empties into the Pasquotank river, 30 miles from its mouth, at Albemarle sound.

This canal is of great importance, as being a link in the contemplated Atlantic canals, and leaves the distance now to be canalised, from Boston to Georgia, at less than eighty miles; and in conversation with a gentleman of intelligence it has been stated to me as a probable fact, that from Georgia to New Orleans, it would not be necessary to canal more than a hundred miles. If this is correct, (of which I am entirely ignorant,) it would cost but about five millions of dollars, according to Mr. Gallatin's estimates, to have a complete inland navigation from Boston to New Orleans—the Dismal Swamp canal being already finished; a sum not double the excess in the Treasury, over what was anticipated for the present year.

Of the utility of such a navigation I need not speak at large; it would avoid the dangerous passage round Capes Hatteras and Florida, where we are exposed to risks, and experience many wrecks. It would be the safe passage for Southern produce to reach the manufacturing markets; and in times of hostility it would give celerity to the movement of troops, and all the munitions of war; indeed, the only appropriate phrase which can be applied to it, is, that the advantages to the country would be incalculable.

From Cumberland, on the Potomac, to the tide waters at the City of Washington, is about one hundred and eighty-eight miles by the river, and a lock navigation; the whole distance can be effected, according to the estimate of the commissioners appointed by the States of Virginia and Maryland, at an expense of about one million six hundred dollars; the Potomac and the Youghiogany river, which empties into the Ohio, approach each other within the short distance of two miles. All the objects contemplated by the bill, and many others, are of great and striking importance, and would be of mutual advantage to the Western and Atlantic States. The expense of making them would be inconsiderable, compared with their national utility. We need not be dismayed at the magnitude of these undertakings; time and labor will overcome them. Pennsylvania has made more turnpike roads than would reach half-way from here to the Rocky Mountains.

The whole of the objects contemplated in the bill, comparatively speaking, are not equal to the undertakings in New York, which are nearly completed. These New York works are of high importance to the nation; they show what can be done; and that a government, with proper management, can execute great works with despatch and economy. They have afforded, moreover, the most valuable experience in the science of engineering.

For many reasons, the committee that reported the bill at the last session, supposed that the information can be more satisfactorily obtained by the corps of engineers than from any other source. They are a well disciplined and organized body, and are composed of the most capable of our scientific men; and it belongs peculiarly to the topographical corps to explore the country, and to give accurate knowledge of such parts as may be deemed necessary, by actual surveys. In this manner, a similar corps has been employed in France; through which every necessary information relative to the face of the country is acquired, and deposited in what is called their military bureau. The corps of engineers, with the assistance of two civil engineers, and the aid of others who can be detailed to do duty in that corps, are believed, by those best acquainted with the subject, to be sufficient. They proceed by a regular system, and report monthly. Young cadets, as they leave the Military Academy, could be employed—it will give them experience, and advance their usefulness to their country. It will render the science appertaining to the engineer department more perfect and extensive, and obviate the necessity of employing foreign engineers.

H. OF R.

Internal Improvements.

JANUARY, 1823.

There are farther inducements, as it respects economy. They are already in the employment of the Government, and can have no motive to procrastinate the work; they can be actuated by no other motive than an honorable ambition to establish their own reputation, and to show that their institution is valuable to their country. It is the practice to allow them but one dollar and fifty cents per diem beyond their usual compensation, which is merely to meet occasional expenses. The difference of expense in obtaining the information by the corps of engineers, or by commissioners, or common surveyors, would be exceedingly great. The information would be useful to the States who have not the same economical means of acquiring it.

As to the execution of a system of internal improvement, it is cordially agreed that great national benefits would inevitably flow from it; and it must be as satisfactorily believed, from the examples of other nations, that the natural advantages of this country will at some period be enjoyed. It therefore appears to me, that the single question, in relation to this interesting subject, is, when shall we begin? When shall we obtain our own consent to reap these advantages?

Some entertain the opinion that it is too soon. On this head, we have opinions from quarters that are entitled to our highest respect. In 1807, the attention of the Senate was directed to this subject, and Mr. Gallatin's celebrated report was made in pursuance of a resolution of that body, in which he recommended the very measure now contemplated by the bill on your table. The following is an extract:

"As an important basis of the general system, an immediate authority might also be given to take the surveys and levels of the routes of the most important roads and canals, which are contemplated; a work always useful, and by which the practicability and expense of the undertakings would be ascertained with much more correctness than in this report. A moderate appropriation would be sufficient for these several objects."

Able reports have been made in the Senate, at different times, in favor of commencing some system of internal improvement.

In 1817, a bill passed both branches of the Legislature, which was rejected by President Madison. The object of the bill was to set apart and pledge a fund for the construction of roads and canals, and improving the navigation of water courses, in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce among the several States; and to render more easy, and less expensive, the means and provisions necessary for the common defence. For this purpose, the dividends from the shares in the Bank of the United States were to be pledged during twenty years, which was the whole period of the charter. The money was to be applied as Congress, with the consent of the States, should by law direct. The proportion to be expended on the objects in each State was to be in the ratio of its representation in the most numerous branch of the National Legislature. This bill, as is well known, did not, on the reconsideration, obtain the Constitutional majority.

In the first and second sessions of the Fourteenth Congress, President Madison recommended, in strong terms, the subject of internal improvement. In the first session of the Fifteenth Congress, President Monroe speaks on the same subject with even more enthusiasm, and thinks that, to secure the object, the Constitution ought to be changed.

In 1818, this House adopted two resolutions on the subject, which I will read:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to report to this House, at the ensuing session of Congress, a plan for the application of such means as are in the power of Congress, for the purpose of opening and constructing such roads and canals as may deserve and require the aid of Government, with a view to military operations in time of war; the transportation of munitions of war, and the more complete defence of the United States; and, also, a statement of the nature of the works above mentioned, which have been commenced; the progress which has been made; and the means and prospect of their completion; and together with such information as in the opinion of the Secretary shall be material in relation to the objects of this resolution.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to prepare and report to this House, at their next session, a plan for the application of such means as are within the power of Congress to the purpose of opening and improving roads, and making canals, together with a statement of the undertakings of that nature, which, as objects of public improvement, may require and deserve the aid of the Government; and, also, a statement of works of the nature above mentioned, which have been commenced; the progress which has been made in them; the means and prospects of their being completed; the public improvements carried on by States, or by companies, or incorporations, which have been associated for such purposes, to which it may be deemed expedient to subscribe, or afford assistance; the terms and conditions of such associations, and the state of their funds; and such information as in the opinion of the Secretary shall be material in relation to the objects of this resolution."

In obedience to the first resolution, the Secretary of War made a very interesting report to the next session of Congress, strongly enforcing the policy of the measure.

The patriotic resolutions from the Legislature of Maryland, a few days ago presented to this House, furnish evidence that the public spirit of the country is rapidly advancing in favor of internal improvements. And, in addition to all this, after as mature deliberation as any man could bestow on any subject, the present Chief Magistrate, in his Message accompanying his rejection of the Cumberland Road bill, gives us his unequivocal opinion in these words: "It is of the highest importance that this question should be settled. If the right exists, it ought forthwith to be exercised."

JANUARY, 1823.

Internal Improvements.

H. OF R.

From all these respectable authorities, I think it will not be rash in me to say, that, in the opinion of a majority of this nation, the time has arrived when a system of internal improvements, by the General Government, ought to be commenced.

The finances of the country, it is said by some, are inadequate, at the present moment; but it is my opinion that we cannot select a better plan of improving the funds of the country, than by improving the country itself. The value of the whole would be increased, and a capacity given to the whole to make greater exertions; more activity would be employed, and more produce raised. The redemption of the public debt would be accelerated, if I am not greatly mistaken. If the money, as it is wanted, should be borrowed, the amount would bear no comparison to the benefits which the public would derive from it. It seems to be an indisputable fact, that more money was expended during the last war, for the want of good roads and canals, than would be sufficient to complete all the permanent improvements that are essentially necessary.

The improvements must be a work of time; large sums would not be wanted at any one period; and if proper objects are selected in the beginning, a revenue will be coming in long before the whole is completed. The public expenditures would be spread over a period of fifteen or twenty years, and if, during that time, the General Government, with the aid to be derived from incorporated companies, would expend twenty or twenty-five millions, most of the prominent objects of internal improvement would be accomplished.

The committee who brought in the bill, have adopted what, in their opinion, is the only true plan. It is, to procure, in the first instance, the most accurate information that can be acquired on the subject, by the scientific men of the country. For the commencement of the proposed system, there will be no immediate demand on the Treasury for any large sum; twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars will be sufficient, and this will be divided between three or four years. It would consume that period to obtain the information. As the plan progresses, Congress can decide better of the correctness of the measure than now, and they can discontinue or pursue it at their pleasure.

The appropriation cannot be exceeded; and if it will not be sufficient to accomplish all the objects contemplated, the parts executed will be valuable. It is not like the case of a fortification, or the building of a ship; there, the whole must be completed, or the unfinished part will be lost; but, as respects this species of information, stop at any point you please, and the part executed will be useful.

If the whole information desired should be obtained, it will place the subject fairly before the people, and give them an accurate knowledge of the capacity of the country for internal improvements, together with the plans and estimated expenses. They will then be able to decide what is best to be done; whether the prosecution of the works could be commenced without effecting any change in the Constitution; if not, whether an amendment ought to be made to it. It would consume three or four years to obtain the information, and in the mean time, we could form a more correct opinion than at present, as to the permanent state of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury informs us, in his report, that, if the existing tariff shall, during the present session of Congress, be judiciously revised, for the purpose of augmenting the revenue, that it will not only be amply sufficient to defray all the demands upon the Treasury, at present authorized by law, but that there will remain an annual surplus, subject to such disposition, for the promotion of the public welfare, as the wisdom of Congress may direct. But, perhaps in a few years, we shall see the necessity of looking for a portion of the revenue from some source independent of the imposts.

When we reflect that we enjoy almost every degree of climate, with a population of ten millions, and an annual increase of nearly half a million, we must calculate upon an increase of productions of every description, both raw and manufactured. The duties on sugar, coffee, molasses, and lead, amount to about two and a half millions. It is very probable that there will be a diminution on these articles. The country is capable of making lead, sugar, and molasses, perhaps, equal to the extent of our consumption. Coffee, it is believed, can be raised, and, as the tree comes to maturity in a few years, the experiment can be soon made. Many of the tropical productions can be raised in the southern climates. Peter S. Chazotte and others, in behalf of the American Coffee-Land Association, petitioned Congress at the last session; they wished to purchase a small island for the purpose of raising coffee; they offered the minimum price, and to pay for the land as soon as the patents should be made to them. A hundred families belong to the Association. The agents of the Association had taken much pains to explore the country, and had been well acquainted with the cultivation of coffee in the West Indies. The island they wished to purchase is called Key Largo; it is connected with the main land by a narrow isthmus, and is situated between latitudes  $25^{\circ} 56'$  and  $25^{\circ} 12'$ , and contains about twenty-four thousand acres of land; twenty-three thousand of which is supposed to be fit for cultivation. From the most respectable source, I have learned, that parts of the soil and climate of Florida are suitable to many productions, such as cotton, sugar cane, indigo, tobacco, resembling that of Cuba, oranges, grapes, olives, and many other descriptions of fruits, and that cochineal is found in abundance.

The manufactories of the country are evidently increasing; and this will make a slow but gradual impression on the imports. It ought to be the policy of every country to keep the balance of trade as much in its own favor as possible, as that brings into the country more gold and silver than is carried out.

It is true, as the Secretary of the Treasury has satisfactorily explained, that the real balance of trade cannot be ascertained, by looking at the table of exports and imports; and he has added to the exports, the profits of the trade of the Northwest Coast and Pacific ocean, as they arise principally from labor and enterprise. This, I think, is correct, except as regards the labor, which, to its amount in value, is equal to gold and silver; labor being the source of productions. With the same exceptions, I think he might fairly have added the profits arising from that part of commerce which consists in the exportation of foreign articles; as, with the profits earned, foreign merchandise can be purchased, without taking gold or silver from the country; and this trade has been considerable, and has amounted to upwards of twenty millions in one year. And, under the same restriction, the profits arising from every species of indirect trade, might be considered as exports; but a loss in any of those trades, would have a contrary effect.

If, however, it is difficult to ascertain the real balance of trade, one thing is certain, and that is, that any measure which is calculated to increase the productions and manufactures of the country, must have a tendency to keep the balance of trade in our favor, as it will inevitably lessen the importation for home consumption. The slight change in foreign commerce, which might be produced, would simultaneously be supplied in the home market; and, at no distant day, an increase of commerce might be anticipated in the exportation of manufactured articles.

Such a state, in our national affairs, would not affect the carrying trade, if we should ever again have an opportunity of enjoying it; nor that part of commerce which consists in the exportation of foreign articles; nor the trade of the Northwest Coast and the Pacific ocean. It could only have the salutary effect of lessening the importation for home consumption. Such a state of internal affairs would give a certain level and stability to all the pursuits of industry, which could not easily be disturbed by the fluctuations of foreign Powers.

Safe and cheap communication over our extensive country, by good roads and canals, are the best and surest means of bringing us to this state of real independence and prosperity; the resources of the country would be completely developed, which would make commerce flourish as much as any other branch of industry. The raw materials of the South and West could be transported, at a reasonable expense, to be manufactured in the Eastern and Middle States, where manufactories will first arrive at perfection, on account of the density of population—no part of this Union would be more benefited by this measure than New England.

The internal trade of a country becomes prodigious, when properly encouraged; and it is allowed by the ablest political writers to be the safest and most profitable trade that can be carried on; customers are acquainted with each other, and no sea risk is incurred. We see already more than two thousand sloops, of upwards of fifty tons each, engaged in the North river. In England, there are more than five hundred ships, none under two hundred tons, and many over three, which are employed in carrying the single article of coal from Newcastle to London. In China, it is said that, by means of their water carriage, their home market is nearly equal to the whole market of Europe.

To the reasons which I have already urged, I will add the one which, as it regards the political rights of man, is more valuable than all the rest; I mean the tendency of the measure to the preservation of the Union; and that it will have this tendency, all statesmen, who have reflected on this subject, accord in opinion.

I hope that the States of New England and New York, will not be indifferent on this subject, notwithstanding their advanced state of improvement. I am persuaded that they will be influenced by a generous policy; but, independent of these motives, they have not arrived at perfection, and, of the expenditures to be made, they will enjoy their due proportion. I am convinced that we cannot engage in any great political effort which would be more purely American, or which would better entitle us to the thanks of posterity.

In relation, Mr. Chairman, to the Constitutional question, I think that even common candor will admit that it is not involved on a bill that only seeks information. It might as well be said that we could not appropriate money to buy a book or a map; and besides, we are in the daily practice of exploring our coasts, and, in many instances, the beds and courses of rivers; but for fear that it may perplex, or in some shape influence the fate of the bill, I will beg the indulgence of the Committee while I make a few observations upon it.

I am as much a friend of State rights as I think a citizen of the United States ought to be. I have been in the habit of considering the States as so many pillars of the General Government. Originally, this motion was certainly correct, but now, being expanded over so vast a region, they may prove its weakness. I do not believe that the duration of this Union depends, in a very great degree, on the sword. It will be wise, to say the least, to make every effort, in the means of Congress, to bring the States as near together as possible by artificial ties, and to connect them as firmly as we can by the powerful influence of a profitable intercourse.

In the discussion of a Constitutional question, we must consider ourselves as citizens of the United States, as well as of the particular State to which we belong. The rights of each should be cherished with equal zeal.

The Constitution has invested Congress with certain enumerated powers, and I concur in the opinion that the common defence and general welfare of the United States, is to be obtained by the due execution, of these powers; otherwise, there would be no limits. But the framers of the Constitution foresaw that Congress would frequently have to legislate on implication, in relation to these powers; and, to remove all doubts as to the right which I presume would have existed, they gave this general power by an express grant. A power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers, vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or office thereof. From the nature of this power, no boundaries could be given. It is left on the broad principles of genuine construction. The enumerated powers were acted upon by the first Congress; but to give them greater efficacy, and the more completely to put them into execution, the principal acts of legislation since have been founded on the constructive powers.

JANUARY, 1823.

Internal Improvements.

H. OF R.

It is curious to witness the alarm which is occasionally excited concerning the exercise of constructive powers, when Congress is never in session a week without acting upon them. We have only to look at the statute book for instances—see the laws relating to fugitives who are held to service or labor in any of the States; the laws regulating the carrying of the mail; the Bank of the United States; the Military Academy; light-houses, and trading houses among the Indians, are all creatures of constructive power. So are the laws relating to revenue cutters, the navy hospitals, pensions, and gratuitous grants of money: and in the same class may be placed the laws concerning vaccination, and for the cultivation of the vine. By mere implication, through the treaty-making power, territories have been acquired which are large enough for many empires; and under the same constructive power the inhabitants have been received into the American family and made citizens. We do not enjoy our library, maps, or stationery, by virtue of any express power. Yes, Mr. Chairman, we not only make laws which are the mere offspring of constructive powers, but we enforce those laws by high penalties, and the sanguinary punishment of death.

Congress has power to establish post offices and post roads, and there is not another word on this subject in the Constitution; but Congress has passed laws for the carrying of the mail, and for a violation of these laws mail robbers have been executed. My own opinion is, that Congress has a right to protect, and carry into complete effect, any law which it can constitutionally make; but I speak with becoming deference, after what has passed in relation to the Cumberland road. In this case, if I understand it, it is admitted that the road has been made by the General Government upon Constitutional principles. The General Government, then, rightly undertakes to perform a superb national work, to connect two parts of the country, which are separated by a high and broad mountain, but so feebly is she in power that she cannot protect the workmen from being disturbed.

They act under an authority which is Constitutional when they put down the stones to construct the road, but the first stranger that comes along, without the danger of violating the Constitution, or any law that could be made, may take them up at pleasure. The United States cannot punish him, for fear it would be an infringement of State rights: to say the least, I think such an anomaly does not attend any other act of the General Government.

I think there is an error in the reasoning against the Cumberland road bill, in relation to the jurisdiction supposed to be necessary, if Congress possesses power to make roads and canals.

It is believed, if I understand the Message rightly, that a jurisdiction would be acquired similar to that in the ten miles square; or where forts, magazines, or other public buildings are erected on lands purchased by the consent of a State; but that would not be the case—Congress would only have a protecting power over its own law. Surely Congress can pass laws to inflict a punishment for stealing or defacing the papers in a custom-house, or the records of a court; still, a larceny committed by one stranger on another in a custom-house, or a court room, or even in a mail coach, would be only of State cognizance. The sea, for a certain distance, belongs to the adjacent States, as a part of their domain; but such parts of the sea, and the mouths of rivers, are covered with revenue cutters, possessing high and arbitrary powers—such as boarding a vessel by force, and nailing down the hatches—yet these acts, which are merely to protect an United States law, have never been considered as any infringement on State rights. Crimes committed on roads and canals, made by the General Government, would be cognizable in the State courts, except such offences as did an injury to the road or canal. When it is necessary to take private property for public use, to carry into execution any of the enumerated powers, no State jurisdiction follows. Crimes committed on the lands thus taken would be cognizable in the State courts, unless it is a crime for defeating the object of the United States law. As to the right of taking private property I will attend to it hereafter.

Congress has frequently sustained this power. All the acts relating to roads and canals in the new States are in affirmance of it. It has been the constant practice to allow to the new States five per cent. of the net proceeds arising from the sales of public lands, to be laid out in the construction of roads and canals. Three-fifths are generally to be expended within the States, and two-fifths are to be expended under the direction of Congress, in the making of roads and canals leading to the States. Large sums are annually expended in this manner, as the sales often amount to a million and a half per annum.

Why are these roads and canals to be made under the direction of Congress, if Congress has no substantial jurisdiction over the subject-matter? Ohio was the first State to which this principle was applied, at as early a day as 1802, and since that nearly two millions of dollars have been expended on the Cumberland road. No distinction is attempted to be made between the raising of money by the sale of land and taxes, nor can Congress, it is acknowledged, derive sovereign power by becoming a party to a compact, or by the consent of a State.

H. OF R.

Internal Improvements.

JANUARY, 1823.

I confess that the observations made concerning the appropriation of money, is the only part of the very able Message I am referring to, that is not perfectly plain to me. After speaking of the raising of money, it says, that the use or application of the money, after it is raised, is a power altogether of a different character—it imposes no burden on the people. And, if I understand it correctly, in another part it says, that money may be expended in the performance of acts not strictly authorized by the specific grants of power. What has been the doctrine on the subject of the appropriation of money, in the early stages of the Government, I cannot say. I have never so particularly attended to it before.

It is certain that there is nothing more anxiously guarded than the raising of money. All bills to raise revenue, must originate in the House of Representatives; and our own rules will not admit of even an amendment in the House to increase a tax, or prolong its duration. It must be done in the Committee of the Whole, where there is a great latitude of discussion. After such precaution in bringing money into the Treasury, it ought to continue when we are about to take it out. Indeed, there is more danger in the misapplication of dead money, in the Treasury, than in properly raising it; for, while the hand of the tax-gatherer is on the people, they will be more watchful of the rulers. As to its imposing no burden on the people, it is clear that, if the money in the Treasury is misapplied, taxation must be resorted to so much the sooner.

My own opinion is, that both the raising and the appropriation of money, must depend on a fair construction of the Constitution. If you can go beyond the limits of the specific powers in the one case, so you may in the other. If you can expend money for a purpose out of these limits, you can raise it for the same purpose. A liberal construction, where it leads to good, of the powers to carry into effect the enumerated grants, will give scope sufficient for the appropriation of money. I have very sparingly made citations from the Message, for fear of mistaking it. If any of my views come in collision with it, they may be considered as an answer. It is a subject on which the mind of the President has undergone a change.

I can perceive no way to escape. Congress must have power to make roads and canals, or the laws I have referred to, are unconstitutional. The appropriation of money to make the Cumberland road, to all intents and purposes, involved this power.

On the subject of roads, I will refer to one other law, which passed in 1806. It authorized the President to open a road from Nashville, in the State of Tennessee, to Natchez, in the Mississippi Territory; this road was to pass through a State without even asking consent.

In the year 1818, this House adopted the following resolution:

“Resolved, That Congress has power, under the Constitution, to appropriate money for the construction of post roads, military roads, and other roads, and of canals, and for the improvement of water-courses.”

Motions were made to strike out the words “other roads,” and to postpone indefinitely, but both were negatived. The votes on this resolution, were—yeas 90, nays 75. The House finally, on the 4th of April, 1818, adopted the two other resolutions, which I have referred to.

I am acquainted but with one instance where land was taken by the General Government for public use, against the will of the owner; and that was in the case of the Cumberland road. A gentleman, his name, I think, was Good, was displeased at the course which the road took through his farm, and he carried his unwillingness against the direction of the road, so far, that he even declined to participate with the Government in the appointment of appraisers. He petitioned Congress for redress on four several occasions, and each committee to which his case was referred reported against him, and these reports were confirmed by this House. He was a Virginian, and he applied to his own State Legislature, but without success.

Congress has a right, in the exercise of its sound discretion, to pass any law which it may deem necessary, to carry into effect any one of the enumerated powers; and for this purpose Congress is clothed with power to take private property for public use, on paying for it a just compensation. This power was supposed to exist, and doubtless it did, before the amendments of the Constitution, which may be considered as the bill of rights. In these amendments, it is not restricted as to objects; nor is it confined to times of peace or war. The single restriction is, that a just compensation shall be given. In other respects it is left as broad as it was before; and that must be whenever Congress shall deem it necessary to carry into execution any of the enumerated powers. Generally speaking, no embarrassment will be experienced in purchasing such situations as may be required. State courthouses and jails are used by the General Government, by a kind of courtesy; but suppose they could not be obtained in this way, or by purchase? Congress must have power to take private property for public use, paying a just compensation, or be incapable of carrying into execution the express grant of power, to ordain and establish inferior courts, from time to time.

Congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes. I will not criticise on the word regulate; its general meaning I take to be the authorization of any act that would be advantageous to commerce among the several States. How is the internal trade of a country usually carried on? Where the country is advanced, its transportation is principally along canals; and cannot Congress facilitate the mode of its transportation? Nothing is of higher importance to this nation than its internal trade; it flows from the great pursuits of industry, and embraces every art and labor; it spreads over an immense region, abounding with minerals and the productions suitable to our variety of soil and climate, and the greatest embarrassment it ever can labor under, is the distance of the places between which it is carried on; and this can only be subdued by good roads and canals. What other law or regulation could you make, that would be of the one-hundredth part of the same advantage to it?

JANUARY, 1823.

Internal Improvements.

H. OF R.

How do you best regulate the affairs of the nation? It is by enacting laws adapted to each subject-matter, with a view to its advantage or improvement. To regulate commerce with foreign nations, consuls are appointed for the accommodation of merchants; and we have erected lighthouses, piers, buoys, and beacons. To regulate commerce with the Indian tribes, roads have been made in the Indian territory, and trading-houses have been established, complicated with superintendents, agents, and sub-agents. There are near a hundred lighthouses, and ten or twelve lightships with lights suspended from the masts, and some of them supplied with large bells.

What is the object of these lighthouses and lightships, and this class of powers constantly exercised by Congress? Is it not to lessen the price of transportation, by removing dangers and rendering the navigation more safe and secure? In these laws no mention is made of a single article of merchandise; nothing is said about duties, or about buying or selling, or of drawbacks or debentures; the sole object is to lessen the price of transportation. And when we find the power to regulate commerce among the States, given by the same sentence, and expressed by the same words, why can we not apply the principle to the regulation of commerce among the States? Why can we not lessen the price of transportation? Can any man living make a sensible distinction? I think I may safely appeal to the Committee, and to the nation at large, whether good roads and canals would not be of more advantage to the internal trade of this country than the Bank of the United States was to its fiscal concerns? There is no instance of the exercise of a constructive power, since the commencement of the Government, which was more beneficial to the principal grant than this would be.

Before the adoption of the Constitution, the several States could have regulated the commerce between themselves, by the means of roads and canals; but the Constitution has restricted the States from entering into treaties or contracts, and now they have no direct means of regulating commerce among themselves, in any way. It seems to follow, as a necessary consequence, that the whole power which previously existed on this subject, among the States, as sovereignties, is carried to the general head, where it can be exercised to so much greater advantage.

Can it be supposed that the framers of the Constitution looking forward to the future glory of this nation, and being acquainted with the benefits of canals to internal trade in other countries, could have intended to prostrate all power on this subject, in a national point of view? The framers of the Constitution were too wise to attempt to particularize any of the incidental powers; they knew the impracticability of it. To mention one, might be considered as an exclusion of another, and they left them all on the broad basis of the exercise of a sound discretion by Congress. They may or may not have thought of lighthouses; but, if they did, it was safest to say nothing about them. It was their study, in these cases, to be general and not particular.

The objects which clothe Congress with power must be national, and reaching beyond State sovereignty; but whatever may be deemed necessary to regulate the internal trade of the nation, does not belong to the States. As to State jurisdiction none will follow, as I have already explained, and as to the taking of private property, no danger can be apprehended from it. The owners of property generally get too well paid. Purchases could be made, appraisements would seldom be resorted to, and, when necessary, the appraisers could be selected from the particular State, as being the best judges of property there. It only appears a little novel, because we are not familiarized to it. Many who oppose the measure on Constitutional grounds, do not object to the nature of the power; they are willing to change the Constitution to attain it. The exercise of the power would be welcomed, for whenever it would be used it would enhance the value of property. If there is any danger about it, it is that the General Government would do too little, instead of doing too much. I will tell the honorable Committee how I think the power is derived.

Rivers and canals being the usual channels through which the internal trade of a country is carried on, the power of making canals and portages, as links in the chain of inland navigation, is derivable from that clause in the Constitution which gives a power to regulate commerce among the several States. That roads, which are necessary as post roads, may be made under that clause of the Constitution which invests Congress with the power to establish post offices and post roads; and that roads for military purposes may be made under that part of the Constitution that gives Congress power to declare war, and to raise and maintain an Army. You may prepare for war in time of peace; and a road for military purposes may be as necessary as guns and ammunition. We should give no construction to the Constitution which would be dangerous to liberty; in such cases let opposition be repeated—but where the common defence and general welfare of the United States are the leading and sincere motives, the construction should be liberal; and that can be the only meaning of that general expression in its application to the constructive powers. It is for the happiness of the people that we should early arrive at settled notions respecting the Constitution, and it is the genius of our Government that the minority should give way, at least so far as to receive frequent precedents, as evidence of rightful construction. The construction of the Constitution in these cases should be more liberal than in the case of an ordinary law. If there exist doubts about your law, change it; this will do no harm, but it will be dangerous in the extreme, if, for every little doubt and uneasiness concerning the powers under the Constitution, we must be continually resorting to changes. The sacredness of the instrument would be destroyed; it would be looked upon only as a common statute law; the amendments would be as susceptible of doubts as the original instrument. Is it desirable, as a precedent, that the majority should change the Constitution to please the minority?

Mr. Chairman, I consider the Constitution as the most wonderful political instrument that ever was invented by human beings, and I tremble at the thought of touching it. I wish to see the idea cherished of handing it down to posterity as an American family-piece, no further impaired or changed. It will become the more venerable for its age and ancient appearance. But where is the necessity for a change in this case? A liberal construction will be sufficient, and I will ask, in what age or nation, whether the government was a democracy or a despotism, has the power of improving a country been abused? In none that I know of. History furnishes us with no complaints here.

I will detain the Committee a little longer, with their indulgence, on the subject of post roads. The language of the Constitution is, that Congress has power to establish post offices and post roads. It is said that this gives the power only to select a road in being, and not the right to create or make a road. We do not resort to a dictionary on these occasions for the meaning of words; but it is of importance to know their acceptation in State papers, in legislative acts, and in other parts of the same instrument. From these sources we will discover that the word establish means to create, and not merely to designate, a thing in being. In the first treaty we had with France, it is stated to be the desire of the parties to establish suitable regulations between the two countries—a similar expression is used in our treaty with England. I have not taken much pains to search for the word in legislative acts, but the Committee will recollect the phraseology in many of our acts of Congress. There is an act to establish Navy hospitals; there is another to establish trading-houses, to trade with the Indians. The word is used in the same sense in the Articles of Confederation—it speaks of the regulations to be established by Congress. In another part it says that the United States, in Congress, shall have the sole right of establishing and regulating post offices from one State to another throughout all the United States.

In another part, there is a clause for establishing rules for the deciding, in all cases, what captures on land or water shall be legal, and for establishing courts of appeal. The word is used in no other sense in any part of the Constitution. It begins with the words "ordain and establish this Constitution." It speaks of such courts as shall be established from time to time; and that the ratification of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution. It gives Congress a power to establish an uniform rule of naturalization, and it is evidently used in the same sense in the very clause now in question—to establish post offices and post roads. As to offices, it is clear it means to create. Why change the words from those used in the Articles of Confederation, if it was not to enlarge the power? In the Articles of Confederation nothing is said about roads.

I will lay down a position which, I think, cannot be controverted; and that is, when Congress is invested with a power, the exercise of that power cannot be defeated by the States. Congress has power to carry the mail; but, if the States have a right to shut up the road, that power could be defeated. Congress establishes a State road as a post road—Can the State vacate the road? If so, the mail could be stopped by any State. You have a right to make fortifications—you fix on the most advantageous spot—but, according to the opposite doctrine, you have no power to make a road to it; and if there happens to be a State road leading to it, the State can vacate it at pleasure! Is it possible that this was the design of the Constitution? These contracted notions about the construction of the Constitution are detrimental to the rise and consequence of this country. It is a lamentable circumstance, that the efforts of the people in favor of internal improvement, by the General Government, have been so far paralyzed by a scrupulous distinction. The powers of Congress are large and numerous; and that Congress should have power to lay and collect taxes; to declare and carry on war; to take public property for private use; to regulate commerce among the several States; and to carry the mail throughout the Union; and at the same time to be so cramped and confined as to have no control over any of the avenues through which the great scenes of the nation are to be transacted—not even so far as to remove an obstruction in a road, or a rock out of a river,—does appear to me to be inconsistent with that wisdom which has always been ascribed to the enlightened body who made the Constitution.

I fear I have too much exhausted the patience of the Committee; and I have nothing to offer as an apology for claiming so much of their attention, except the very interesting character of the subject under discussion.

When Mr. HEMPHILL had concluded—

Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, next assigned the reasons why he should vote for the bill. He approved it as a means of obtaining information useful to every department of the Government, and to every individual in the nation; and not as part of a system of internal improvement, to which he was opposed.

Mr. WRIGHT opposed the bill altogether, as contrary to the letter of the Constitution, which, he contended, gave to Congress no authority to commence a system of internal improvement.

When Mr. WRIGHT concluded, the question was taken on Mr. BARBOUR's motion to strike out the first section of the bill, and decided as follows: For striking out the section 56, against it 62.

JANUARY, 1823.

Amendment to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

So the motion was negatived.

[The House being thinly attended, this vote was not regarded as a decisive one.]

The Committee then rose and reported the bill to the House.

And the question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time—

Mr. EDWARDS, of North Carolina, moved to lay the bill on the table.

On this question, Mr. NELSON, of Maryland, required the yeas and nays to be taken.

Mr. HARDIN asked if it would be in order so to amend the motion as to lay the bill on the table until a day beyond the session—(the 4th March?) He thought enough of the time of the House had been occupied with it.

The SPEAKER said the amendment would not be in order.

The question was then taken on ordering the bill to lie on the table, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbot, Alexander, Archer, Barber of Connecticut, Barstow, Bassett, Bigelow, Borland, Butler, Cambreleng, Cannon, Carter, Cassedy, Cocke, Colden, Conkling, Conner, Crafts, Cuthbert, Dane, Edwards of North Carolina, Eustis, Floyd, Fuller, Garnett, Gebhard, Gilmer, Gorham, Hardin, Harvey, Hawks, Herrick, Hubbard, Jones of Virginia, Keyes, Kirkland, Lathrop, Leftwich, Lincoln, Litchfield, Long, McCoy, Mattocks, Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Montgomery, Morgan, Murray, Nelson of Massachusetts, Pierson, Reed of Massachusetts, Reid of Georgia, Rhea, Rodney, Ruggles, Russ, Russell, Saunders, Arthur Smith, Alexander Smyth, A. Stevenson, Thompson, Tomlinson, Tucker of Virginia, Tucker of South Carolina, Van Rensselaer, Van Wyck, Walker, White, Williams of Virginia, Williams of North Carolina, Williamson, Wilson, Wood, and Wright—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen of Tennessee, Barber of Ohio, Bateman, Baylies, Bayly, Blackledge, Buchanan, Burrows, Campbell of Ohio, Chambers, Condict, Cook, Cushman, Darlington, Durfee, Dwight, Eddy, Edwards of Connecticut, Edwards of Pennsylvania, Farrelly, Findlay, Forrest, Forward, Gross, Hamilton, Harris, Hemphill, Hill, Holcombe, Ingham, Jackson, Jennings, F. Johnson, J. T. Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Jones of Tennessee, Kent, Little, McCarty, McLane, McSherry, Mallary, Matlack, Mercer, Metcalfe, Mitchell of South Carolina, Moore of Virginia, Neale, Nelson of Maryland, Newton, Patterson of Pennsylvania, Phillips, Plumer of New Hampshire, Plumer of Pennsylvania, Rich, Rochester, Rogers, Ross, Sloane, W. Smith, Sterling of New York, Stewart, Swan, Tattall, Taylor, Trimble, Udree, Vance, Walworth, Warfield, Whipple, Woodcock, and Woodson—73.

So the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

WEDNESDAY, January 15.

Mr. EUSTIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Purdy," reported the same without amendment, and the bill was committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Accounts, to which was referred an inquiry respecting the payment of newspaper accounts, made a report, that no further provision was necessary in relation thereto; which report was agreed to.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported "a bill to alter the times of holding the circuit courts for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;" which bill was twice read and committed.

The resolution laid on the table yesterday by Mr. STERLING, of New York, requesting the Secretary of War to communicate what progress has been made towards the completion of the military road leading from Plattsburg to Sackett's Harbor, in New York, how much is unfinished, the probable expense of completing the same, with any information in his possession, showing the importance of said road in a military point of view, was read and agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL gave notice that he would, on Monday next, call up the bill, yesterday laid on the table, to procure surveys and estimates for certain roads and canals.

The engrossed bill entitled "An act in addition to 'An act for the more prompt settlement of the public accounts, and for the punishment of the crime of perjury,'" was read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

The House took up, and proceeded to consider, the report of the Committee of Claims, made at the last session, on the memorial of Amasa Stetson. Whereupon, it was ordered that the said report and petition be committed to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering and amending an act, entitled "An act for ascertaining claims and titles to lands within the Territory of Florida," passed the 8th day of May, 1822.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, the Committee on Commerce were directed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a lighthouse at the entrance of the port of Pensacola, in the Territory of Florida.

The Committee of the whole House to which is committed the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, made at the last session, on the petition of Thomas Kemp, was discharged from the further consideration thereof, and the report and petition were recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. REID, of Georgia, rose, and said that the bill providing for the execution of certain surveys, and for the collection of topographical information, with a view to a system of internal improvements, was yesterday ordered to lie upon the table, by a vote of this House. I was, said he, one of the committee by whom that bill was reported, and, although quite willing to afford the honorable chairman of the committee an opportunity to make an experiment, the measure did not altogether meet my approbation. My objections to the bill are not to be found, however, in Constitutional scruples. I believe that Congress does possess the power to establish roads and construct canals. But I am aware that there is much diversity of opinion upon the subject. A large portion of the people entertain the opinion that we have not the power, and the Chief Magistrate has recently expressed his conviction to the like effect. Under these conflicting sentiments, I do not believe that any system of internal improvement, however well devised by Congress, would be efficient, because concert and harmony are necessary to its prosperity. It would seem, therefore, that our first step should be a settlement of this question. This can only be done by an amendment of the Constitution, which shall give to Congress the power alluded to, in terms so explicit as to preclude all dispute. Such an amendment is now offered, viz:

H. OF R.

Surveyors of Public Lands.

JANUARY, 1823.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, two-thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States, be proposed to the Legislature of the several States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of the said Constitution, to wit:

“Congress shall have power to establish and construct roads and canals.”

This joint resolution received its first reading, and lies on the table.

SURVEYORS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The resolution, moved by Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, yesterday, was taken up, and read in the following words, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to lay before this House a statement showing what contracts for surveying lands of the United States, in Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas, have been made by the Surveyor General thereof, since the year 1817; with whom made, for what quantities, to whom the payments therefor were made in each case; also, whether the surveying was actually performed by the original contractors in person, or by others under sub-contracts; if by others, at what price per mile the sub-contractors performed the work in each case; also, the difference, if any, between the amount paid by the United States for such surveying, and the amount received by the actual surveyors of the land.

Mr. SCOTT, of Missouri, moved to amend the resolution, by striking out the words “in Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas, have been made by the Surveyor General thereof since the year 1817,” and inserting, in lieu thereof, the words “have been made by the several Surveyors General and principal deputy surveyors, since the year 1805.”

Some remarks were made by Mr. VANCE, to the effect that this amendment, by calling for more information than could be furnished within a reasonable time, would be to defeat the object of the inquiry; to which Mr. SCOTT replied, that this was by no means his object, his desire being to examine the whole subject, in all its details.

Mr. COCKE, of Tennessee, said, if this amendment were to prevail, the Department would not be able to furnish, during the present session, the information required. It was unnecessary for him to mention the reports, from high authority, too, of the practices in relation to contracts and sub-contracts, by the Surveyor General and his deputies. Before he voted for this amendment, he said, he should like to know why the House was to go back to 1805, to examine the transactions which are closed, and satisfactorily settled. At the last session of Congress, a great deal had been said upon this subject, and the appropriation required had been withheld in consequence of the statement of the manner in which the surveys had been made. If his information was correct, Mr. C. said, it would be found that there have been impositions practised in this business. He wanted an investigation of these transactions, without clogging the resolution with all this surplus matter. What information can these old accounts afford us? He, for one, wished to know what contracts had been made, and what prices have been given. He had been told that, in some cases, when the maximum was given, the lands had been actually surveyed at a charge of fifty cents only per mile. It had been stated that one sub-contract was given to a boy about eleven years of age! On his first arrival here, Mr. C. said, he wrote a note to the Secretary of the Treasury, giving him information of what he had heard, that he might examine into it. He had also had several conferences with the Surveyor General himself upon the subject, in this city, and found him fully apprized of the reports which are in circulation.

Mr. COOK, of Illinois, suggested to Mr. SCOTT the propriety of withdrawing his amendment. There are, he said, $80,000 due to individuals who have rendered services in the surveying of the public lands, most of them residing in the State of Illinois. They have already laid out of their money more than a year, and the payment of them ought not to be deferred, as it probably would be, if this resolution were to be made so comprehensive, by the adoption of the amendment, that it cannot be accomplished during the present session. If the Surveyor General has done wrong, he will not seek to be sheltered under what has been done by other surveyors; and, if he has done right, there will be still less reason for pushing the inquiry down to the year 1805. He wished the House to get at the facts as directly as possible, that those who have rendered services to the Government should not be kept longer out of their money. The officer against whom these charges are now made, it was but just to say, had always, previously to this, sustained an unimpeached character.

Mr. SCOTT said he could not consent to withdraw his motion to amend the resolve. It was the object of the gentleman who seemed to be particularly pointed at in the debate, as well as by the terms of the resolution, to have a general investigation of his conduct. That gentleman came into office in 1805, and was for a time the principal deputy surveyor under General Mansfield. Since that time, he had seen the principal surveyor for Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas. It is the object of that gentleman to have an investigation into every portion of his conduct from his commencement in public life. He is willing that the House shall be put in possession of the facts in relation to himself and to all others engaged in that business, and by these facts to stand or fall. Can I, then, said Mr. S., consent to investigate his conduct as far back as 1817, and cast a veil over his conduct in preceding years? I would not consent to so limited an inquiry; as a public agent, I would not consent to do it. I wish to know the whole truth of the business, and to see in what manner he, compared with others, has discharged his duties. Mr. S. said, he was far from wishing to postpone this inquiry. It would take but a very few days to collect the additional documents for which he now asked, as an abstract of the facts or settlements only was wanted. It was to repel the slanders which had been put in circulation against this man, that he wanted this information.

JANUARY, 1823.

Collection of Imposts.

H. OF R.

Mr. COCKE said he should be perfectly willing to fix the time in the resolve at the 1st of January, 1819, having been told that the accounts had been settled up to that year. Why go beyond the date at which the complaints of misconduct commence? He had been told, he said, that this man was known to have been a very honest, good man up to this time. He was willing, he repeated, to begin with the 1st of January, 1819, which would cover the whole ground on which there is any complaint.

Mr. FLOYD, of Virginia, said he hoped this amendment would prevail. If this gentleman was guilty, as suspected, it was due to the House and to the nation, and, if otherwise, it was due to the individual, that he should have an opportunity to explain his whole course of public conduct. Let us have an opportunity of seeing the whole, said Mr. F. I have no hesitation in saying, if reliance can be placed upon character at all, that whatever suspicion of misconduct applies to him (General Rector) will be found utterly groundless. But if it have a foundation, it is the duty of every member to aid in exposing it. Let his whole course of conduct be examined, said Mr. F. I have often been deceived in men; but I have no hesitation in declaring my clear conviction to be, that the suspicion of this man will prove, when examined, to be utterly groundless.

The question was taken on Mr. SCOTT's amendment, and determined in the affirmative—54 votes to 52.

Mr. SLOANE, of Ohio, moved to strike out the latter part of the resolution, beginning with the words "if by others," &c. His reason for this motion was, that he did not consider the information important, and he did not see how the Treasury Department could give it, if ever so important. Nothing was more common than for contractors to execute their contracts by the agency of sub-contractors, &c. Mr. S. took occasion to observe, that he was willing to have every information which gentlemen might wish, to aid them in the discharge of their duties, but he was always opposed to resolutions pointing at particular individuals, without making specific charges against them, &c.

Mr. MCCOY said, he hoped the amendment would not take place. He had long been of opinion that the United States were paying more for the surveys of the public lands, than was required for that object. Whether the information asked for would be obtained or not, he did not know; but, if it could, the United States ought to have it. He was very sure, he said, that the public lands could be surveyed for a great deal less money than is allowed by law for that purpose. The information we have is such as to induce us to inquire whether we ought not to regulate differently the price to be paid for the surveys of the public lands, and whether it cannot be done hereafter for less money.

Mr. VANCE stated, that the price for surveying the public lands is not fixed, the law only providing that it shall not exceed three dollars per mile. He did not know whether this information could be obtained at the Treasury or not; but, if it could not, it ought to be, &c. As the resolution now stood since the amendment of it, however, he felt little interest in it. It would take two months to get the information, and the object of the resolution would thus be defeated.

Mr. SCOTT said he hoped this amendment would not prevail. No information of any value would be obtained, indeed, by the resolve, unless that part of it was retained. Mr. S. wished to have all the particulars required by the resolve. If the Department could not give the information, it would be easy for it to say so; and if the information could be, it ought to be obtained.

The question was then taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. SLOANE, and decided in the negative.

Mr. COCKE was not satisfied that this resolution now contained all the information which was required for a full understanding of the subject. To enable him to examine it further, although opposed to the least unnecessary procrastination, he moved to lay the resolve on the table.

This motion being agreed to, the resolve now lies on the table.

COLLECTION OF IMPOSTS.

On motion of Mr. McLANE, the House proceeded in Committee of the Whole to consider the bill "supplementary to, and to amend an act, entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of the duties on imports and tonnage,' passed the 2d of March, 1799, and to repeal an act supplementary thereto, passed 20th April, 1818, and for other purposes."

[This bill is very long. Sec. 1 provides that, from and after the third of March, no goods, subject to ad valorem duty shall be admitted to entry unless the true invoice of the same be presented to the collector at the time of entry, or unless the same be admitted in the mode authorized and prescribed in the next ensuing section of this act.

Sec. 2 provides that when no invoice of such goods has been received, the owner, &c., shall make oath thereof, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to cause them to be appraised—the owner to give bond to produce the invoice within eight months if from European ports, and fifteen months,

H. OF R.

United States Courts in Louisiana.

JANUARY, 1823.

if from beyond the Cape of Good Hope or Cape Horn, or from the Cape of Good Hope:

SEC. 3 directs that, where goods are not entered in pursuance of this or any other revenue act, the same shall be deposited in the public warehouse. After remaining in the warehouse for eight or fifteen months, as the case may be, the said goods to be sold, &c. Perishable articles to be exposed to earlier sale, if necessary.

SEC. 4 prescribes the oaths, in cases of goods entered by invoice, to be taken by the owners, importers, consignees, or agents.

SEC. 5 prescribes the manner in which the ad valorem rates of duty upon goods shall be estimated, viz: by adding to the actual cost of all charges, except commissions, outside packages and insurance, and also 20 per cent. on the said costs, &c., if imported from or beyond the capes.

SEC. 6 provides that no goods subject to ad valorem duty, belonging to residents, but not at the place where the same are intended to be entered, shall be admitted to entry, unless bond be given to produce to the collector within four months the invoice, duly verified by the owner's oath.

SEC. 7 provides that no goods imported and belonging to non-residents, shall be admitted to entry unless the invoice be verified by the oath of the owner to his ownership and to the actual cost of the goods.

The bill contains in all thirty-seven sections of minute detail, of which the preceding synopsis of seven of them may give an idea. The appraisers are to continue to be appointed as now provided by law. The occasional appraisers are to be allowed five dollars per day, and to be fined fifty for each refusal to act. A third disinterested person may be called in to join the appraisers where a first appraisalment shall not be satisfactory, &c.]

The bill having been read through—

Mr. COLDEN called for the reading of the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, favorable to the general object of the bill; which was read.

The bill was then read over by sections for amendment.

On motion of Mr. GORHAM, the bill was amended so as to extend the time allowed for voyages beyond the Cape of Good Hope or Cape Horn, or from the Cape of Good Hope, from fifteen months, as it stood in the bill, to eighteen months.

Several other amendments were made to the details of the bill, on motion of Mr. McLANE.

Mr. BARSTOW offered for reading, though he had not an opportunity of formally presenting it, a memorial from the merchants of Salem, praying the bill now before the committee may pass into a law; and the memorial was read.

Various other amendments were made to the bill, in arranging which the following gentlemen took an active part, viz: Messrs. McLANE, CAMBRELENG, TAYLOR, WALWORTH, INGHAM, GORHAM, COLDEN, BURROWS, MCKIM, TOMLINSON, and NELSON of Massachusetts.

The most important amendment proposed seemed to be that proposed by Mr. INGHAM, to substitute the current value at the ports whence shipped, for the cost or actual value, as the basis on which to estimate the duties on goods paying ad valorem duties.

This amendment was supported by Messrs. INGHAM, WALWORTH, BURROWS, and was opposed by Messrs. GORHAM, COLDEN, MCKIM, TOMLINSON, McLANE, CAMBRELENG, and NELSON of Massachusetts.

In the end, the amendment was negatived.

After some further time spent on the bill, the Committee rose, and the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, January 16.

Mr. HEMPHILL (by leave of the House) presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, praying that the bill now pending before this House, "supplementary to, and to amend an act entitled an act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," passed 2d of March, 1799, and to repeal an act supplementary thereto, passed 20th of April, 1818, and for other purposes," may be passed into a law, with certain modifications and amendments therein suggested; which memorial was read, and committed to the Committee of the whole House, to which the said bill is committed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel Wharton; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS also made a report on the petition of Richard Hightower, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the estimates of appropriations necessary for the service of the year 1823; which were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, on the petition of Abraham Snyder; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the information required by the resolution of the 7th, in relation to the surgeons in the Navy of the United States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following bill:

A Bill for the better organization of the district court of the United States within the State of Louisiana.

Be it enacted, &c., That, for the more convenient transaction of business in the courts of the United States within the State of Louisiana, the said State shall be, and the same is hereby divided into two districts, in manner following to wit: The counties of Attakapas, Opelousas, Rapide, Natchitoches and Ouachita, shall compose one district, to be called the western district of Louisiana, and all the remaining part of the said State shall compose another district, to be called the eastern district of Louisiana; and all

JANUARY, 1823.

United States Courts in Louisiana.

H. OF R.

criminal actions, or civil suits, which have arisen in the western district, together with all process, writs, recognizances, and records belonging thereto, shall be transferred to the western district; and that terms of the district court in the said eastern district shall be held at the periods, and in the manner now prescribed by law; and there will be, annually, one stated session of the said court in the western district of the State, to be held at Opelousas courthouse, to commence on the third Monday of August; and the district judge of the United States for the State of Louisiana is hereby authorized and required to hold special sessions of the said court, in the said western district, for the trial of civil or criminal causes, whenever he may deem it expedient: That all process, writs, and recognizances, of every kind, whether respecting juries, witnesses, bail or otherwise, which relate to the cases to be tried at the said special sessions, shall be considered as belonging to such sessions, in the same manner as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto: That any special session may be adjourned to any time or times previous to the next stated meeting of the district court. That all business depending for trial at any special court, shall, at the close thereof, be considered as of course removed to the next stated term of the district court. The said judge shall receive an additional annual compensation of five hundred dollars for his services. The said judge shall appoint a clerk of the said court in the western district, who shall reside and keep the records of the court at the place where the sessions of the court are held, and shall receive for the services performed by him an annual compensation of two hundred and fifty dollars, and the same fees that are allowed to the clerk of the said court of the eastern district of the State, and shall be subject in every respect to the same responsibilities.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint one person as Marshal, and one as District Attorney, for the said western judicial district of the United States, within the State of Louisiana, created by this act, and that the terms of appointment and service, together with the duties and responsibilities of the said Marshal and District Attorney, respectively, for the district aforesaid, be, in all respects, the same within their said district as the terms of appointment and services, the duties and responsibilities of the Marshal and District Attorney, respectively, of the eastern district of the State of Louisiana, and shall receive an annual compensation of two hundred and fifty dollars each, and such fees and emoluments as are received by the Marshal and Attorney of the United States, for the State of Louisiana.

Mr. J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, earnestly urged on the House the immediate passage of this bill, as being rendered peculiarly necessary by the present circumstances of the country.

Mr. COCKE objected to the bill on account of the addition of five hundred dollars per annum proposed to be made to the salary of the judge; which he moved to strike out of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, said, as the bill had been only this morning laid upon the table, he should prefer its taking the ordinary course of bills. For which purpose, he moved that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSTON replied to both the gentlemen. The bill, he said, being recommended by the representation of the State, as necessary for the due execution of the laws in the State of Louisiana, he thought it almost a matter of course to pass it, especially as it contained no new principles. With regard to the additional salary proposed to be allowed to the judge, he thought it not only reasonable, but absolutely necessary to enable him to live, &c. Mr. J. again earnestly pressed a decision on the bill at this time.

Mr. TAYLOR, at some length, opposed acting thus suddenly on a bill of this character, and stated his objections to the bill itself, on the ground of the inexpediency of multiplying courts and officers, as had already been done in the Districts of New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. In regard to the New York District, the division of it into two districts, was intended to answer a temporary purpose, but had become permanent, and served as a plea for like measures in other States, which might well have been dispensed with, &c.

Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. MALLARY, and Mr. ROSS, joined Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, in support of the bill. In the course of some further remarks made by the latter gentleman, in order to show the necessity for establishing this new district, he stated a case within his knowledge, in which an individual living at the distance of four hundred miles from the present seat of justice (New Orleans) had been sued by the United States for twenty-two dollars; and, if the Government were to discharge the suit, it would be on condition that the party sued should pay the costs. It was mainly on the ground of the necessity of such a court for the trial of criminal cases, that he advocated this bill.

The motion to recommit the bill was negatived, by 50 votes to 45.

The question recurring on Mr. COCKE's motion to strike out the proposed addition to the judge's salary, it was strenuously opposed by Mr. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, and Mr. WRIGHT, and supported by Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. The principal ground of Mr. ALLEN's objection was, that the salary of the district judge of Louisiana is now higher than that of any other like officer in the United States, and he was opposed to raising the salary of this district judge, without a general review of the subject of the salaries of the district judges, which he thought well worthy the consideration of the House, believing them to be at present the most poorly paid officers in the Government of the United States.

Mr. COCKE's motion to amend the bill was negatived, 52 votes to 46.

Mr. TAYLOR then moved, by way of amendment, to strike out the whole of the bill, except the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That, in addition to the terms of the district court of Louisiana, now established by law, one stated term of the said court shall be held, each year, at Opelousas courthouse, to commence on the third Monday of August; and the district judge of the United States for the State of Louisiana, is hereby authorized and

H. OF R.

Collection of the Customs.

JANUARY, 1823.

required to hold special sessions of the said court at the said courthouse, in Opelousas, for the trial of criminal or civil causes, whenever he may deem it expedient."

This motion was earnestly supported by Mr. TAYLOR, and opposed by Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. MALLARY, and Mr. WRIGHT.

The question being taken on Mr. TAYLOR's motion to amend the bill, there were—For the amendment, 59; against it, 60. So the amendment was negatived.

On the question to order this bill to be engrossed and read a third time, the yeas and nays were required by Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, and, being taken, stood as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alexander, Allen of Tennessee, Ball, Barber of Ohio, Baylies, Blackledge, Breckenridge, Buchanan, Cannon, Cassedy, Chambers, Conkling, Conner, Cook, Cushman, Dane, Dickinson, Durfee, Dwight, Edwards of North Carolina, Farrelly, Forward, Garnett, Gorham, Govan, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hemphill, Holcombe, Hubbard, Ingham, Jackson, Jennings, J. T. Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Jones of Virginia, Jones of Tennessee, Kent, Kirkland, Leftwich, Lincoln, Little, McCarty, McLane, McSherry, Mallary, Mercer, Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Mitchell of South Carolina, Moore of Alabama, Morgan, Neale, Nelson of Maryland, New, Newton, Patterson of New York, Patterson of Pennsylvania, Phillips, Pitcher, Reed of Massachusetts, Reid of Georgia, Rhea, Rogers, Ross, Russell, Saunders, Scott, Sloane, Alexander Smyth, W. Smith, Sterling of New York, A. Stevenson, J. Stephenson, Stewart, Tattall, Thompson, Tod, Trimble, Tucker of Virginia, Udree, Vance, Van Rensselaer, Walworth, Warfield, Whipple, Wood, Woodson, and Wright—89.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen of Massachusetts, Barber of Connecticut, Barstow, Bassett, Bateman, Borland, Brown, Burrows, Butler, Cambreleng, Campbell of New York, Cocke, Condict, Crafts, Cuthbert, Eddy, Edwards of Connecticut, Floyd, Forrest, Fuller, Gebhard, Gilmer, Gross, Harris, Harvey, Hawks, Hill, F. Johnson, Keyes, Lathrop, Long, McCoy, Matlack, Matson, Matlocks, Metcalfe, Murray, Pierson, Plumer of New Hampshire, Plumer of Pennsylvania, Rich, Rochester, Arthur Smith, Sterling of Connecticut, Stoddard, Swan, Taylor, Tomlinson, Tracy, Tucker of South Carolina, Upham, Van Wyck, White, Williams of Virginia, Williams of North Carolina, Williamson, and Wilson—57.

So the bill was ordered to receive its third reading to-morrow.

COLLECTION OF THE CUSTOMS.

The House then again took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill further to regulate the collection of duties on imports.

The discussion of the details of the bill was resumed, on amendments proposed; in which the following gentlemen took part:

Messrs. TRACY, McLANE, CAMBRELENG, GORHAM, NELSON of Massachusetts, WOOD, BARSTOW, McKIM, BUCHANAN, INGHAM, and LITTLE.

At four o'clock the Committee rose and obtained leave to sit again; and then the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, January 17.

Mr. LITTLE presented a petition of the Alum and Copperas Company of Cape Sable, on the river Magothy, in Maryland, signed by P. G. Lechleitner, principal of said company, praying that a duty of three cents per pound on alum, and two cents per pound on copperas, may be imposed on those articles, imported from foreign countries; which petition was referred to the Committee of the Whole to which is committed the bill for the more effectual encouragement and protection of certain domestic manufactures.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of James Morrison, respecting lost abstracts, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, made a report on the petition of certain fire engine companies of Alexandria; which was read, and the resolution therein submitted was concurred in by the House, that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Mr. KENT, from the same committee, also made an unfavorable report on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the District of Columbia, referred on the 13th instant; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Joshua Russell," reported the same without amendment; which was committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants.

Mr. CAMPBELL also made a report on the petition of Thomas Williams, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill for the relief of Jacob Shafer.

Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill respecting the district court of the United States for the District of Maine; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the mayor and aldermen of the city of St. Augustine, in East Florida, and it was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for the establishment of a naval academy for the instruction of midshipmen and other young officers in the sciences appertaining to their profession.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was committed the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Amos Nichols," reported the same without amendment, and the bill was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

JANUARY, 1923.

Land Surveyors' Expenses.

H. OF R.

The Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the further consideration of the resolution directing an inquiry into the expediency of altering and amending the act for ascertaining claims and titles to lands within the Territory of Florida, and the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, to make the said inquiry.

Mr. LINCOLN submitted the following resolution, which was read, and laid on the table one day:

Resolved, That the Secretaries of the Departments of State, the Treasury, War, and Navy, be directed, severally, to inform this House, what newspapers, journals, and other periodical publications, are taken at the public expense in their respective departments; also to furnish catalogues of all books which have been purchased at the public expense, in their respective departments, stating the titles and prices of such as have been procured each year during the last six years.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing on the pension list William Davis, of Madison county, New York, a soldier of the Revolutionary war. Mr. H. accompanied the above resolution by documents in support of the claim of William Davis.

On motion of Mr. HOOKS, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of repairing the fort at Smithville, in North Carolina, or to erect new fortifications at a more suitable site.

LAND SURVEYORS' EXPENSES.

On motion of Mr. COCKE, of Tennessee, the House proceeded to consider the resolution now lying on the table, calling for information respecting the surveys of public lands, &c.

Mr. COCKE moved to amend the resolution, by striking out the whole of it after the word "Resolved," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House a statement showing what contracts have been made by the surveyor general of public lands in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and Territory of Arkansas, for services performed since the first day of January, 1819; with whom made, and when; for what quantity to each; whether the surveys were actually made by the original contractors in person, or others, under sub-contracts; if by others, at what price per mile said surveys were performed; what price was stipulated to be paid per mile to each contractor; and whether the surveys have been faithfully executed.

Mr. COCKE said he could see no reason why the House should call for information in regard to other surveyors, when they wanted information only respecting one, or for the accounts of that one a long period of time back, when the accounts were settled up to 1819, and it was the accounts subsequently rendered which only were wanted. The complaints against the surveyor, referred to in the proposed amendment, were mentioned at the last session of Congress, and were well known to the gentleman who yesterday moved the amendment to this resolution. If the information which was really wanted was wished to be received during the present session, it could only be accomplished by limiting the range of it, as proposed in the amendment, &c.

Mr. CONDUCT, of New Jersey, said that he was in favor of the amendment, but suggested the propriety of calling, in such a case as this, where copies of accounts only were wanted, directly upon the Secretary of the Treasury for the information, instead of requesting the President to communicate it.

Mr. COCKE acceded to this suggestion, and modified his resolution accordingly.

Mr. SCOTT, of Missouri, said he was opposed to the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, (Mr. COCKE,) as a substitute for the original proposition submitted by the member from Ohio, (Mr. VANCE.) The shape given to the original resolution, by the amendments adopted in the House the other day, would meet all the objects of just or necessary inquiry. Mr. S. requested to know, and it was certainly not for him to say, why the members from Ohio and Tennessee shrunk from an examination into the official conduct of the surveyors in their quarters, and seemed so desirous to point out, for particular animadversion, the conduct of the surveyor general of Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas. They had not only selected the individual, but proposed to limit the inquiry to a specific time. Mr. S. deprecated this as an unjust mode of legislation, and an improper manner of exercising the inquisitorial powers of the House in the call for information. It was not for Mr. S. to say why this course was pursued in relation to General Rector, whom he knew to be a correct and honorable man, but he called on gentlemen to answer why this course was adopted? What was the answer that the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. COCKE) gave? That he had received information out of doors, either in conversation or by letters, that the surveying had been badly executed, and that more had been charged to the Government, in the accounts rendered, than had been paid for the actual surveying to the sub-contractors. Mr. S. denied the fact as charged, but at the same time asked the gentleman if this was the correct way of attacking the character of any man? If the information in possession of gentlemen was official, why not give it to the House? If merely circumstantial, it ought not to be credited by honorable members. In all cases where character was involved, gentlemen ought to place the charges in a less "questionable shape," and not give such charges "the sanction of their name and brief authority," till they were certain the information deserved credit. This was not the case here. General Rector and his friends could not repel insinuations, where no clue was given from whence that information, covering the charges, had originated.

If the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. COCKE) would give point and body to his charge, Mr. SCOTT pledged himself to go to the full extent of his power to correct the evil; he did not care whether the corruption and misconduct charged, lay at the door of a surveyor general, Indian agent, or any officer in the discharge of either civil or military duties—if it even descended to camp kettles or umbrellas, Mr. S. would aid in correcting the abuse. Mr. S. was free to admit, that, in some surveying, it might be done for less than three dollars per mile; but, in others, it would cost more. A man, taking ten, fifteen, or twenty, townships, would generally find, that, in the aggregate, three dollars per mile was but a moderate compensation; in many places more was allowed. Last year four dollars had been allowed for surveying the lands in Florida, which was less difficult than the bottoms and swamps in the Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas; in other places six dollars per mile had been allowed. And it was the object of Mr. S. to show, by calling for the information as far back as 1805, nay, 1802, when the present system, in relation to the public lands commenced, to show that it was the common law of the land, and had been sanctioned by every administration, in the settlement of all the accounts of the several surveyors general, and principal deputy surveyors, to allow them three dollars per mile, as no more than a moderate and adequate compensation; and, also, to collate the accounts of the party here accused of misconduct, with those of other distinguished officers, and evince, that the surveying, under his administration, had been as well, as cheaply, and as faithfully done, as under that of any other, without exception. Indeed, Mr. S. wished it was as convenient for the gentleman of Tennessee, (Mr. COCKE,) to visit the country on the Mississippi and Arkansas and to retrace and measure the lands as it was to visit the Rip Raps, he would request the gentleman to make a trip there also, and see if conversion in the one could not be produced, if it could not in the other.

The information here called for could not possibly be of any service on the question of appropriation, for the surveying done in 1821. That depended on the instructions then given, and copies had been furnished the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means (General SMITH) last year, and would be again produced, together with other statements, showing that General Rector had done his duty well, and in the general conformed to his instructions. Mr. SCOTT hoped that the amendment would not be adopted; but, that, if the House sought information, it would be in a general shape, and calculated, when produced, to shed all the light on the subject, and, come when it would, he did not fear to state, that the conduct of the officer in question would appear in such colors as to silence those who now seemed disposed to clamor against him. The objection that if you go back to 1805, the information could not be had in time, was not the fault of General Rector or his friends. If those who seem to have considered it their peculiar duty to guard the Government from impositions, had been remiss in not calling early for the information, let the blame rest on them and not on others. General Rector was desirous of a general investigation, and the original resolution was well calculated to produce the effect.

Mr. RHEA, of Tennessee, was in favor of the amendment. It was acknowledged, by the gentleman from Missouri, that rumors have been afloat in regard to the supposed impropriety in the conduct of the surveyor general of Illinois, &c. These rumors are either well founded or they are not. Mr. R. said, he professed himself to be a friend to the General, and he trusted he would come out clear from this inquiry. The attempt, however, to evade the inquiry, would do no good to that officer. We have heard no complaint of wrong-doing on the part of surveyors as far down as 1805, and why should the inquiry be carried down so far? Mr. R. said he was particularly desirous to have this amendment adopted for another reason. He wished to know what kind of land had been laid off for the soldiers of the late war, the land set apart for that object having been surveyed under the particular care of this officer, &c.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, said, that, in making this call for information relative to the surveyor general of Illinois, Missouri, and Arkansas, his only object was to enable the House to act understandingly on a certain appropriation, that we should be called on to make before the close of this session, which had been withheld from the individuals who had performed those services, for more than one year. This appropriation was withheld owing to the misconception, by this surveyor general, of orders received from the Treasury Department, in which the surveys, in this gentleman's district, had been extended much beyond the amount of money appropriated for that object; and, as was contended by gentlemen who had examined this subject, not warranted by the orders from the Treasury Department. This is the reason that induced me to make the call, and nothing personal towards General Rector. This gentleman he had heard well spoken of, and he hoped, on the investigation, he would come out clear of suspicion. If otherwise, he, for one, would be in favor of his removal from this important station.

Mr. MCCOY, of Virginia, said he thought the resolution ought to be made general, so as to include the returns of all the surveyors since the year 1819; and he moved to amend the amendment to that effect. His object was to have information to enable the House to see whether the public lands cannot be surveyed for less money than they now are; and, with this view, he should like to have information from every section of the country where the public lands lie. The original motion, however, to go back to the year 1805, would put the House in such a situation that it would not be able to obtain, during the session, the information which was wanted. Mr. McC. said that he had nothing to say against General Rector. He knew but little of him, but that he was a Virginian by birth, and he had always understood him to be a man of high character.

Mr. COCKE said he had no disposition to impeach General Rector more than any other man. He was induced to offer the amendment in its present shape, on the ground that the accounts of all the other surveyors were settled at the Treasury except those of the surveyor particularly mentioned. He could have no personal objection, he said, to General Rector. Until he came to this place, he never saw him in his life. In order to have the matter as fully investigated as possible, he would most cheerfully yield to the wishes of the gentleman from Virginia, and accept the amendment proposed by Mr. McCov as a modification of his motion. The accounts embraced by it might be obtained during the session; but, if the resolution went as far back as 1805, he was persuaded the object of it would be defeated. With regard, said Mr. C., to the expressions about the Rip Raps, and so on, which have been used by the gentleman from Missouri, they pass by me like the idle wind.

JANUARY, 1823.

United States Courts in Louisiana.

H. OF R.

Some conversation took place, in which Mr. SCOTT, Mr. COCKE, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. JOHNSTON, and Mr. JENNINGS, took part, on a suggestion to include in the motion the deputy surveyors general; which was overruled by the House, on the ground, apparently, that the surveyor general's returns would include those of the deputies. In the course of this conversation—

Mr. JENNINGS remarked, that the resolution presented to him objections, either with or without the pending amendment, which would induce him to vote against it in either shape. Some gentlemen wished for the information to enable them to form a correct estimate whether too much money was not paid for the surveys of the public lands, while others wanted it for the purpose of knowing whether the official conduct of the surveyor general of Illinois, Missouri, &c., has been unexceptionable. He should suppose, if any gentleman believed that officer had not discharged his duty, they ought to go directly to their object. The resolution, however, includes all the surveyors general, for the purpose of getting at one of them.

The question was then taken on Mr. COCKE's amendment; which was agreed to. The resolution, as thus amended, was then agreed to without a division.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN LOUISIANA.

The engrossed bill for the better organization of the district court of the State of Louisiana, was read a third time.

Mr. COCKE moved to recommit the bill, with instructions to amend it so as to leave it a simple provision authorizing the holding additional terms of the court in Opelousas.

Here arose a debate, which lasted several hours, upon the points, whether additional compensation should be given to the district judge, and whether for this additional court, a new marshal, clerk, or attorney, should be appointed. The ground was narrow, but it was strongly contested by the friends of the bill, headed by Mr. JOHNSTON of Louisiana, and its opponents, led by Mr. COCKE.

Mr. JOHNSTON, zealous in his cause, was supported by Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. MALLARY, and Mr. TUCKER; and Mr. COCKE was closely followed, on the same side, by Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, who zealously opposed the creation, unnecessarily, as he contended, of new offices. Mr. COOK, Mr. TOMLINSON, and Mr. KEYES, also supported the recommitment. Mr. RHEA also favored a recommitment, without instructions.

Finally, the instructions were stricken out of the motion for recommitment, by 80 votes to 70. The motion for recommitment was withdrawn; and, on motion of Mr. JOHNSTON himself, the House reconsidered the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill being again open to amendment, amendments were proposed; when, on motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, the bill was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

The House, then, not without considerable opposition to the recess of to-morrow, adjourned over to Monday.

MONDAY, January 20.

JOHN SERGEANT, from Pennsylvania, appeared, and took his seat.

Mr. HILL presented a petition of sundry inhabitants of Lincoln county, State of Maine, praying that the town of Dresden may be made a port of entry.—Referred to the Committee of Commerce.

Mr. SPEAKER laid before the House a memorial from the Board for Internal Improvement of the State of North Carolina, praying the aid of Government in the removal of certain sand bars, at the entrance of Cape Fear river.—Referred to the Committee of Commerce.

Mr. CONDICT presented two memorials from the inhabitants of New Brunswick, and the adjacent country, in the State of New Jersey, praying that the aid of Government may be extended to the manufacturing interest of the nation.—Referred to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the "Bill for the more effectual encouragement of certain domestic manufactures."

Mr. HAMILTON presented a memorial of sundry banking institutions, insurance companies, and individuals, of Charleston, South Carolina, praying that the charter of the Bank of the United States may be so amended as to release the said bank and its offices from the obligation of receiving, in payment of all dues to the Government, the notes of all the different offices of the said Bank of the United States, in whatever part of the Union such office may be located.—Referred to MESSRS. HEMPHILL, CAMBRELENG, MERCER, MALLARY, and MCKIM.

Mr. RHEA presented a memorial of the eighth convention of the Manumission Society of the State of Tennessee, praying that Congress will take the situation of the people of color of the United States, held in slavery, into their consideration, and provide by law for their relief.—Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRANCIS JOHNSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill further to regulate the Post Office Department; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

H. OF R.

Naval Peace Establishment.

JANUARY, 1823.

Mr. McCoy, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Loudon Case, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill concerning patents; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole. The bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That, in all suits instituted, after the passage of this act, for the violation of the rights of patentees, their executors, administrators, or assigns, under the several acts of Congress concerning patents, costs shall be allowed such patentees, their executors, administrators, or assigns, in all cases where the sum recovered by them or any of them in damages shall not be less than fifty dollars."

Mr. TOD, from the Committee on Manufactures, laid before the House a statement exhibiting a view of the duties as at present imposed on certain imports, compared with the duties proposed to be imposed on the same articles by the bill now pending before this House for the more effectual encouragement and protection of certain domestic manufactures; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having under consideration the aforesaid bill.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the committee appointed on the petition of Doctor James Smith, upon the subject of vaccination, reported "that, perceiving no other purpose in the petition than the enactment of some law on the subject, and believing legislation thereon to be inexpedient, they beg leave to be discharged from the further consideration thereof."

The report was read, and agreed to by the House.

The resolution submitted by Mr. LINCOLN on the 17th instant, and laid on the table under the rule, was taken up, read, modified, and agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretaries of the Departments of State, the Treasury, War, and Navy, be directed, severally, to inform this House what newspapers, journals, and other periodical publications, charts and instruments, maps and prints, are taken at the public expense in their respective departments: Also, to furnish catalogues of all books which have been purchased at the public expense in their respective departments, stating the titles and prices of such as have been procured each year, during the last six years.

Mr. RICH submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to and ordered to lie on the table one day.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be arranged and laid before this House a digest, showing such changes of the commercial regulations of the different foreign countries with which the United States have intercourse, as shall have been adopted, and come to the knowledge of the Executive, subsequent to the formation of the digest communicated to the Senate on the 7th of December, 1819.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, the Committee on Public Lands were directed to inquire into the expediency of vesting so much of the public lots and houses within the city of Pensacola, in the Territory of Florida, as may not be required for the use of the United States, in the City Council of said city, and for its benefit and improvement.

On motion of Mr. F. JOHNSON, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the amount of annual expenditures in support of the marine corps; the number of officers and men composing that corps; what services they render to the United States; also, into the expediency of reducing the number, or of abolishing the same.

Mr. MALLARY moved the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for an equal selection of midshipmen for the Navy, from the different States of the Union.

In submitting this resolution, Mr. M. said his object was to attach every part of the nation to that essential arm of national defence, the Navy, by giving to every part of the nation an interest in its prosperity, &c. so far as that effect might be produced by the equal distribution of the offices among the population of our country. Such a distribution, he believed, would have the further effect to strengthen the Government. With these views, he hoped to be indulged in the proposed inquiry.

The resolve was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUGGLES, the House took up, and proceeded to consider, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the petition of Abraham Snyder: whereupon, it was ordered that the petition and report be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of the Navy, respecting the cost and expediency of fortifying Thompson's island, or Key West; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NAVAL PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the Message from the President, upon the subject of a Naval Peace Establishment, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill to fix and render permanent the Naval Peace Establishment of the United States; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union. The report is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was committed the Message of the President of the United States, transmitting a plan for the Peace Establishment of the Navy of the United States, communicated at the present session of Congress, respectfully report:

Before the late war between the United States and Great Britain, several acts of Congress, at different periods, established the amount and character of the naval force which was then deemed commensurate with our national resources, and adapted to the state of our relations with foreign countries, existing or anticipated. The changes, however, were so frequent, and the efforts to increase our naval strength were so incessant, that it was found, in practice, unnecessary to limit the number of vessels to be constructed, except by a due appropriation of our fiscal means; and, had these been greater at the period of the war, there is no doubt that the policy of our Government would have increased our Navy in equal proportion, at least, with our other military defences.

JANUARY, 1823.

Naval Peace Establishment.

H. of R.

Since that war, which so fully developed to our country and the world the vigor and efficiency of the American naval character, even when we possessed only an inconsiderable number of officers and ships of war, our Government has but fulfilled the wishes of the nation in adopting, and steadily adhering to, a liberal plan for the "gradual increase" and early respectability of our naval power.

The act appropriating the sum of eight millions of dollars, to be employed in constructing nine ships of the line and twelve frigates, with a subsequent modification, extending the time for the accomplishment of the object, is still in force; and the ships proposed are in such a state of forwardness, that there is reason to expect their completion and equipment within the time contemplated, and without requiring additional appropriations.

While such has been our policy in regard to the construction of vessels of war, the Executive, not being restrained by any provision of existing laws, has continued to increase, by occasional promotions, and by new appointments in the inferior grades, the number of officers in our naval service; yet, though the present number in some of the grades, perhaps, exceeds the indispensable complement of the vessels already built, it falls far short of such complement for those which are in a train of speedy completion. The committee have also adverted to the circumstance, that a much larger number of sloops and small vessels of war will be wanted to form a just proportion to the ships of the larger classes, in the event of a contest with any maritime Power. They would remark, also, as proved by the experience of other nations, perhaps even more than our own, that ships may be constructed and equipped in far less time, on the approach of war, than is requisite to discipline and train a corps of officers, to whom the command of them might be safely intrusted. The committee, therefore, believe that it is not expedient to diminish the present number of officers in service; and they are disposed especially to refer to the discretion of the Executive the expediency of increasing, to a reasonable extent, the number of midshipmen, as a class of officers to whom our future Navy must look for experience, discipline, and nautical science. Advantage might be supposed to accrue to the public service, by striking from the list of officers some whose age or infirmities render them no longer useful; but a power of so much delicacy ought never to be exercised by legislation. If its policy or justice were admitted, the Executive is the only organ of the Constitution which, in the discharge of such a duty, possesses the competent means of information, and which ought, therefore, to assume the responsibility. Yet it is believed, on no slight grounds, that the corps of naval officers in our service yield to no equal number of any nation in correctness of deportment and sobriety of habits, as well as in nautical skill, experience, and characteristic boldness.

A considerable expenditure will be saved by the provisions proposed in the organization of the several naval stations; and the recommendation of the Department of the Navy is deemed by the committee to be founded on just principles, in making a distinction between officers on shore and those who are either in active service, or for the most part remote from their families and their homes.

The medical department of the naval service has been fully considered by the committee, and they have had recourse to all the means of information in their power, to discover the nature and extent of defects acknowledged to exist, for the purpose of proposing, if possible, an effectual remedy. They are fully convinced that appointments in that branch of the service have hitherto been made with too little discrimination, and that many have entered it who, on a due examination of their competency, would have been rejected. They are equally convinced that the pay and emoluments of surgeons and surgeons' mates, though perhaps sufficient to induce young practitioners to engage for a few years, with a view to avail themselves of the superior practical advantages to be found in the service, are very incompetent to retain in service many of the most able and faithful of the faculty. The compensation for the most learned, experienced, and useful surgeons, even after a life devoted to duty, is but little greater than that of a lieutenant; and his slender compensation is not, like that of the latter, submitted to for the present in prospect of approaching promotion. Neither honors nor increasing pay encourage him to improve in knowledge, and signalize himself by superior merit. Though many of the surgeons in our Navy are men of skill and eminence, it is feared that many will abandon the service in disgust, and that, of those who remain, some of the most valuable are retained by the hope of a more suitable provision being made by an enlightened country. The committee believe that the sections in the bill which they have submitted, will place the medical corps of the Navy on such a basis as comports with the true interests of the service.

These are some of the considerations which have guided the committee in proposing a Naval Peace Establishment, of the character and extent provided in the bill which accompanies this report. They are not so sanguine as to expect that all its details, though generally founded upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, assisted by the practical experience of the Board attached to the Department, will meet the concurrence of the House. It may be proper to state, that the proposition of establishing higher grades of rank than have heretofore existed, may be deemed by some inexpedient at this time; and the committee are led to acquiesce in the recommendation of the Department, more with a view to the future condition of our Navy, and to the part it must hereafter act in any conflict with a maritime Power, than from an opinion that its present circumstances render the measure indispensable. Even in peace, however, they are of opinion that superior rank, in the naval as well as in the military service, will be conducive to subordination and wholesome discipline; and the inconsiderable addition of expense which it involves ought not to present an obstacle to the attainment of an obvious benefit.

The committee are far from intending, by the measure now proposed, to arrest the progress, or to retard the development of our naval resources, so far as may correspond with the just views of policy, and the sound discretion of our Government; and they would hesitate to recommend its adoption at the present session of Congress, did they not deem its tendency propitious to that progress, and to those views. But, in case it should be found otherwise, it will be perceived by those who shall hereafter be intrusted with the regulation of our maritime defences, and the error, when discovered, will, without doubt, be promptly corrected.

COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

The SPEAKER communicated the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury :

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Jan. 18, 1823.

SIR : In conformity with the provisions of the act of 10th January, 1820, entitled "An act to provide for obtaining accurate statements of the foreign commerce of the United States," I have the honor to submit the following statements of the commerce and navigation of the United States, during the year ending on the 30th September, 1822, viz :

1st. A general statement of the quantity and value of merchandise imported into the United States.

2d. A summary statement of the same.

3d. A general statement of the quantity and value of domestic articles exported.

4th. A general statement of the quantity and value of foreign articles exported.

5th and 6th. Summary statements of the value of domestic and foreign articles exported.

7th. A general statement of the amount of American and foreign tonnage employed in the foreign trade of the United States.

8th. A general statistical view of the commerce and navigation of the United States ; and

9th. A statement of the tonnage entered and cleared, in and from the several States.

From these statements, it appears that the imports, during the year ending on the 30th of September, 1822, have amounted to $83,241,541, of which amount $76,984,331 were imported in American vessels and $6,257,210 in foreign vessels : That the exports have, during the same period, amounted to $72,160,281, of which $49,874,079 were domestic, and $22,286,202 were foreign articles : That of the domestic articles $39,931,913 were exported in American vessels, and $9,942,166 in foreign vessels ; and, of the foreign articles exported, $20,783,655 were exported in American, and $1,502,547 in foreign vessels : That 787,961 tons of American shipping entered, and 813,748 cleared from ports of the United States ; and that 100,541 tons of foreign shipping entered, and 97,490 cleared from the ports of the United States during the same period.

I remain, with respect, &c.

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

HON. PHILIP P. BARBOUR,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The letter was read, and, with the documents, ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. HILL, of Maine, 500 extra copies of the letter and documents accompanying the same, were ordered to be printed, by a vote of 69 to 37.

DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

The House then again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the unfinished business of Thursday last, being a bill regulating the duties on imports.

The gentlemen who took an active part in arranging the details of the bill, and discussing the various amendments proposed to it, in the committee, to-day, are Messrs. McKIM, CAMBRELENG, COLDEN, LITTLE, McLANE, TRACY, WRIGHT, INGHAM, WALWORTH, BARSTOW, RHEA, WHIPPLE, TOMLINSON, and MCCOY.

Before going through the details of the bill, the Committee rose.

TRADE WITH CANADA.

Mr. STERLING, of New York, offered for adoption the following resolution :

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire and report to this House, whether the provisions of an act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed the 5th day of August, 1822, so far as they impose certain duties, upon the products of the United States passing into Lower Canada, down the river St. Lawrence, or otherwise, with a view to exportation, are not repugnant to existing treaties between this country and Great Britain, or a violation of our right to the free navigation of the river St. Lawrence, and what measures are expedient to be taken to obtain a repeal or modification of said act, or of any other act of Parliament, so far as their provisions shall be found detrimental to our commerce, or repugnant to rights secured to us by treaty or national law, or what countervailing provisions may be expedient on the part of the United States.

Before the question was taken on agreeing to this resolution,

Mr. WALWORTH, of New York, said that the subject referred to in the resolution offered by his colleague, was one in which his constituents had a deep interest ; it was also of great importance to the citizens of all such parts of the United States as bordered on the frontiers of Canada. That, by the 3d article of the treaty of the 19th November, 1794, a reciprocal intercourse was secured to the citizens of the United States and Great Britain on the northern and western frontiers of the United States. There could be no discriminating duties imposed by either party. Peltries imported from Canada were exempted from the payment of any duties, and no transit duty could be imposed upon goods transported through the territories of either by land or by inland navigation, &c. These mutual and reciprocal advantages had been enjoyed by the citizens of the United States until the late war. It was generally understood that the ten permanent sections of the treaty of 1794 had been made void by the late war between the United States and Great Britain. The British Government, acting under that construction of the treaty, had imposed discriminating duties on lumber of the growth or produce of the United States imported into Great Britain from the Canadas ; and by the acts of the British Parliament of the 24th of June and 5th of August last, heavy duties had been imposed upon the principal articles of exports from the United States to Canada, which in substance amounted to a prohibition, notwithstanding the citizens of the United States had thus been deprived of the benefits secured to them by the treaty of 1794, the provision of that treaty had been incorporated into our revenue laws, and British subjects still enjoyed the full benefit thereof.

That he had prepared a resolution for the purpose of bringing the subject before the House, but, as his colleague had moved the subject, he would offer this as an amendment, believing that was better calculated to bring the whole subject to the consideration of the Committee.

JANUARY, 1823.

Pension to Sarah Perry.

H. OF R.

Mr. WALWORTH then proposed an amendment in the following words:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire whether the reciprocal and equal advantages of trade, with the British Provinces on our northern and western frontier, secured to the United States by the third article of the treaty of the 19th of November, 1794, and the explanatory article of the 4th of May, 1796, have not been so far impaired by the act of the British Parliament of 1821, by which a discriminating duty is imposed upon lumber, the growth or produce of the United States imported into Great Britain from Canada, and by the acts of the 24th June and 5th of August last, regulating the trade with, and fixing the rate of duties on goods imported into those provinces from the United States, as to require countervailing regulations on the part of this Government: That the said committee be also instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing so much of the act of the 2d of March, 1799, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," as was intended to secure to British subjects the reciprocal rights secured by said treaties; that the said committee be also instructed to inquire into the expediency of imposing duties upon the property of British subjects transported through the territories of the United States, from one part of the said British provinces to another, either by land or water; and that the said committee be likewise instructed to inquire what further provisions, by law, may be necessary to secure to the citizens of the United States their equal rights, in our commercial intercourse with the said British possessions on this continent.

Mr. STERLING said, the subject of the resolution, was one of very deep importance to his constituents. He was not now disposed to detain the House by a discussion of the merits of the subject. He believed, however, the resolution would be found broad enough to embrace a remedy of the evil which he had in view. As the subject was of great importance to his constituents, he was willing that both the resolution and the amendment should lie on the table for the present, and be printed.

This suggestion being put in the shape of a motion to that effect, was agreed to, and the resolution and amendment were both ordered to lie on the table.

And then the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 21.

The SPEAKER presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, praying that Congress will, by law, organize a new circuit of the United States, of which Indiana shall compose a part, or attach her to that circuit of which the States of Ohio and Kentucky are component parts.—Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a petition of sundry inhabitants of the State of Missouri, praying for the establishment of a new land district, and an office for the sale of the public lands within the said State.—Referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. NEWTON, of Virginia, from the Committee of Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of William Bartlett and John Stearns, owners of the schooner Angler, Nathaniel Carver, owner of the schooner Harmony, and Isaac Collyer, owner of the schooner Dove, and others; which bill was twice read and committed.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was recommended the bill for the relief of the mother of the late Lieutenant William H. Allen, with instructions to report a bill for the relief of his sister, reported the same with sundry amendments, which go to substitute the daughter's in the place of the mother's name; which bill was committed to the Committee of the whole House.

Mr. FULLER also made an unfavorable report in the case of Julia Lawrence, widow of the late Captain James Lawrence; which report was, on motion of Mr. COLDEN, (one of the Naval Committee,) committed to a Committee of the whole House to which is committed a bill for the relief of Sarah Perry.

Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill to amend "An act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida;" which was twice read and committed.

Mr. EUSTIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made a report on certain loans of lead and gunpowder, munitions of the United States; which report, and the resolution annexed to it, were ordered to lie on the table.

The resolution of Mr. RICH, of Vermont, requesting the President to cause to be arranged and laid before the House, a digest, showing such changes in the commercial regulations of the different foreign countries with which the United States have intercourse, as shall have been adopted and come to the knowledge of the Executive, subsequently to the formation of the digest communicated to the Senate on the 17th December, 1819, was considered and adopted.

Mr. COOK, of Illinois, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, all the correspondence between the Government of the United States and Great Britain, relating to the negotiation of the convention entered into between the two Governments, on the 20th of October, 1818, which may not be inconsistent with the public interest.

The resolution was laid on the table for one day.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, the Committee of the whole House was discharged from the consideration of the bill relative "to Land Claims in Missouri;" and it was recommended to the Committee on Public Lands.

PENSION TO SARAH PERRY.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was committed the petition of Sa-

H. OF R.

Suppression of Public Documents.

JANUARY, 1823.

rah Perry, mother of Oliver H. Perry, late a Captain in the Navy of the United States, made the following report; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole:

By the decease of the son of the petitioner, Captain Oliver H. Perry, and, subsequently, by the decease of another son, a lieutenant in the Navy, she has been deprived of the support which those sons had successively bestowed; and is, as sufficiently appears to the committee, advanced in years, and incapable of providing for herself. The eminent services of her son first mentioned having called forth the bounty of the Government in providing for his widow and children, by an act for their relief, passed on the 3d of March 1821, the committee believe that his mother, the present petitioner, is entitled to consideration, in at least an equal degree, and for similar reasons. They therefore report a bill in her favor.

To the honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the memorial of Sarah Perry, of the State of Rhode Island, respectfully sheweth:

That your petitioner has at length determined to intrude her sorrows and distresses on your notice, confident of obtaining your sympathy and commiseration, should she even fail in adducing any claims to your justice and liberality.

Your petitioner, after the death of her husband, (who had the honor of bearing a commission in the naval service of his country,) subsisted on the bounty of her deceased son, Oliver Hazard Perry, whose filial devotion and affection were such as to leave none of her wants, and few of her desires, in this world, unsatisfied. During his life, he invariably set aside a liberal proportion of his pay and emoluments for the support of your petitioner, notwithstanding the many claims of his immediate family on his comparatively slender income.

The lamentable death of this son, on board of the John Adams, at Port Trinidad, in August, 1819, deprived your petitioner of this succor, and the burden of the support of herself and an unmarried daughter devolved on the younger branches of her family, more especially on her son, the late Lieutenant James Alexander Perry, whose recent loss your petitioner has also to deplore.

It must be within the knowledge of your honorable body, that, after the death of your petitioner's son, Oliver H. Perry, a bill was introduced into the House of Representatives, and finally passed both branches of Congress, making a provision for his immediate family. In this bill, as originally reported by the committee to whom it was referred, there was a clause affording a competent support for your petitioner. In its progress, however, through the House, some of its best friends, fearful that the whole bill might be lost if too much was asked, consented that the clause in your petitioner's behalf should be stricken out, which was accordingly done; and, in this shape, the bill ultimately passed, with an unanimity on the part of Congress that conferred an inestimable value on the gifts of their patriotic benevolence.

Your petitioner did not repine that the consideration of her claims, whatever they might have been, should have been thus postponed; it was enough that such a sacrifice was deemed essential in procuring a support for the wife and children of such a son.

About this period, the son of your petitioner, James

Alexander Perry, who had recently been promoted to a lieutenancy in the Navy, returned from the Mediterranean, and forthwith contributed a large proportion of his pay and emoluments to the support of your petitioner. Had his precious life been spared, your petitioner would not have been constrained to make this application. The calamity by which this last resource has been cut off from your petitioner is known to you; and, although she cannot boast that this son has fallen in the battles of his country, she has the consolation of reflecting that, at the early age of thirteen, he fought by his brother's side in the memorable engagement on Lake Erie; and that the life which he had devoted to his country was sacrificed, ultimately, in a generous and noble effort for the preservation of another.

To confess our poverty is a humiliating declaration. Your petitioner is destitute, and her support, small as it is, is thrown on hands not inadequately capable of bearing it. She knows not that she has any other claims on the liberality of her country, than to say that she has reared five sons for its service, and that she is the mother of that hero who earned for his country a brilliant victory, and triumphed over your enemies, as well in magnanimity as by the invincible force of your arms.

Your petitioner therefore humbly hopes that your honorable body will take her situation into consideration; and that you will be pleased to place her on the pension list for five years, or grant her such other permanent support or relief as to you shall seem meet and proper.

And your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

SARAH PERRY.

SUPPRESSION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter:

WASHINGTON, January 21, 1823.

SIR: In the Washington Republican of last evening is an article, a copy of which we have the honor to annex hereto, impeaching the honesty of our conduct as printers to the House of Representatives.

We are glad to meet this charge in a tangible form, unfounded as it is. Always holding ourselves amenable to the authority of the House for the faithful discharge of our official functions, we ask of the House, that it will do us the justice to institute a committee to inquire into the correctness of our conduct, herein impeached, with power to send for persons and papers, and report the result of its investigation to the honorable body over which you preside.

With the highest respect, &c.

GALES & SEATON,
Printers to the House of Reps.

Hon. P. P. BARBOUR, Speaker, &c.

From the Washington Republican, of Jan. 21.

The following communication we are induced to insert in our paper, not from any feeling of hostility to the respectable gentlemen to whom it is addressed—a feeling we are incapable of cherishing towards them—but, because we think it due to them to afford them an opportunity of doing away with an impression which has been made on the minds of some members of the House, and which, if suffered to remain, may be disadvantageous to their reputation:

MESSRS. GALES & SEATON—GENTLEMEN: Influenced by the charitable principle of considering every man innocent, until his guilt is proved, and knowing that presumptions even the most violent, are not always to be relied on, it is the object of this address, which shall be short, to elicit from you explanations that are indispensably necessary to acquit yourselves of suspicions highly injurious to you, that have existed for nearly twelve months past.

JANUARY, 1823.

Suppression of Public Documents.

H. OF R.

It will be recollected that, at the last session of Congress, the House of Representatives adopted a resolution calling upon Mr. Crawford to exhibit a statement of his transactions with all those banks, which had been made by him the depositories of public moneys received from the sale of public lands. In conformity to which resolution he made his report on the 14th of February, 1822, and accompanied it with numerous corroborating and explanatory documents, all of which the House ordered to be printed. You were the public printers to whom these documents were delivered; and it was your duty to have printed them correctly; yet it is a fact, incontrovertible, that parts of those documents, implicating Mr. Crawford the most strongly, were suppressed, and totally omitted in the printed document, with which you furnished the House, professedly in obedience to its orders. Of this fact, any gentleman may be fully satisfied, who will take the trouble to compare the printed document with the one transmitted to the House by Mr. Crawford, and which is now in the possession of the Clerk. The latter also affords intrinsic evidence, that the omissions were not accidental, for they are enclosed in black lead pencil brackets, which would seem to have been intended as a guide to your compositor.

Strong as are the implications which those facts seem to warrant, and decided as your partiality for Mr. Crawford has been, I will not indulge the belief, (at least until you have had an opportunity of explaining,) that you could have reconciled it to yourselves, to have sheltered him from a just responsibility, by so great a violation of the confidence reposed in you, and such a flagrant contempt of the legitimate authority of the House of Representatives, that no member thereof, however infatuated by party zeal, who feels the slightest respect for the dignity of his station, could, without dishonor, regard with indifference.

Mr. DWIGHT, of Massachusetts, made a motion, which was subsequently reduced to writing, in the following words:

Resolved, That the letter of Messrs. Gales & Seaton be committed to a select committee, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. LITTLE, of Maryland, hoped the course now proposed, would not be taken. He hoped the House would not pay so much respect to an anonymous publication in a newspaper, as to make it the subject of inquiry by a committee. He moved to lay the letter, &c., on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, suggested that, if the gentleman from Maryland were somewhat better acquainted with the subject involved in this inquiry, he would not make so light of it. He did not know whether the gentleman had been favored with a view of a certain document, of the last session, which ought to have been published, but of which a part was not published; and which seemed to demand an inquiry by the House. If he had seen it, he was persuaded the gentleman would not desire to prevent the inquiry, &c.

Upon this statement, Mr. LITTLE, not wishing to prevent any inquiry which any member of the House should think necessary, withdrew his motion to lay the resolve on the table.

Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia, called for the reading of the paper annexed to the letter, (which had not previously been read.)

Mr. WRIGHT, of Maryland, said, after the statement which had been made, he was clearly for investigating the matter, and exposing every thing connected with it to the face of day, without regard to persons, affect whom it may. He therefore cordially concurred in the appointment of the committee, as proposed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, said he hoped the gentleman from Massachusetts would withdraw his motion, and that the precious time of the House would not be suffered to be occupied with a matter of this description. We are not so sensitive ourselves, said Mr. M., in regard to the reputation of the members of this House; when our conduct is assailed in the newspapers, we do not call for the authors, or appoint committees to inquire into the truth of the imputations against us. He was very certain, he said, that Gales & Seaton had conducted themselves properly in the discharge of their duties, and were deserving of the confidence of this House. But, if any attack was made upon their characters by others, why not let them resort to the courts of justice? Are we, he said, going to investigate newspaper slanders? To convert ourselves into an inquest on characters? It is unbecoming in us to appoint a committee merely on the foundation of a newspaper paragraph. It would be otherwise if any charge were presented by a member against these gentlemen. As it was, he hoped the resolution, &c., would be suffered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, stated that, if there were nothing but newspaper authority to act upon, the course recommended by the gentleman from South Carolina was one which he should be strongly inclined to follow. But he stated that the perusal of the publication in the newspaper had induced him to go to the Clerk's office to see the document referred to in that publication. It seemed, upon the face of it, that this House has been imposed upon either by the printers or some other officers of the Government. He did not undertake to declare where the fault lay, but the censure rested somewhere, and it ought to be fixed at the proper place. The letter in question, he said, was one from W. R. Dickinson, cashier of the Bank of Steubenville. In the original of this letter was one paragraph enclosed within brackets, and a cross made over it with a pencil, which perhaps had been done as a notice to the printer that that part was not to be published. That paragraph was one which ought not to have been suppressed, as it had been. Mr. C. said he presumed that when a member makes a statement of this kind in his place, it is due even to him that a committee should be raised to inquire into the matter. The marks referred to might perhaps have been inadvertently made; they might, for example, have been made by the person who first read the letter, and taken by the printers for a mark of omission. The thing ought, however, to be investigated. When a Department is called on for information, and in communicating it a part of a letter is suppressed, or it is in any other way suppressed, it is treating the House in a very shameful manner. It was due to all who could be suspected of this suppression, that it should be inquired into. Let those who are innocent appear so, and those who are guilty be exposed. It is our duty, as members, to see that such frauds do not go unpunished. Suppose that any member, hearing from this cashier what he had written to the Secretary of the Treasury, should state it on this floor, and on turning to the printed documents should find nothing of the sort there, what an unpleasant situation he would be placed in, &c. It was due, under every view, to Messrs. Gales & Seaton, and to the head of the Treasury Department, that an inquiry should take place into this matter.

H. OF R.

Honors to a Deceased Patriot.

JANUARY, 1823.

Mr. WRIGHT intimated his opinion that it was very improper to go into an investigation of the subject itself on a mere question whether the House would inquire into it or not. He hoped, after what has passed, that a large committee would be raised to inquire into the matter.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, thought that where any imputation was seriously made on any officer of this House, it ought to be investigated. He was, therefore, in favor of the resolution—not because he believed there had been any fault on the part of the printers to this House, or because he believed there had been any fault anywhere. He wished a full inquiry, and to have all the circumstances connected with this matter placed before the House. He had never heard of the fact stated by the gentleman from Ohio, nor even seen the publication in question, before it was presented to the House this morning. But he had formed his opinion that there was no fault anywhere, from the single fact, which speaks loudly to all parties. This House is in possession of the original letter from the cashier. When calls are made on the Departments for information, it is usual to furnish copies. In this instance, the original paper had been sent to this House; and he could not conceive any other motive for the Department furnishing the original paper, unless it were that the House should be in possession of all the facts connected with the subject, though it might not have been proper that every particular of it should be spread before the public.

Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia, expressed his surprise that the gentleman from South Carolina should have expressed his entire confidence in the printers, and yet have opposed the proposed inquiry. Here is the grave assertion of one of the most respectable members of the House, that the House has been imposed upon by them or by somebody else. Messrs. Gales & Seaton are at present printers to this House, and it is probable will come before us at the close of this session, and ask a re-election to that trust. Mr. A. asked the gentleman from South Carolina, and any other gentleman, if this matter was not satisfactorily cleared up, whether he would give his vote for them? The gentleman from South Carolina professed to be the friend of the printers, and yet his course would be such as to prevent any man from conscientiously giving them a vote for re-election. Mr. A. said he should be extremely reluctant to suppose Messrs. Gales & Seaton really culpable, as was imputed to them; but, when a charge to that effect was formally made against them, standing on the high credit of one of the members of this House, what could he do? It was due to the parties—to the gravity of the charge—to the respectable source from whence it now emanates, being one of the members of this House, that an inquiry should take place.

Mr. MITCHELL, of South Carolina, said he had considered this charge merely as brought by an editor of a newspaper against Gales & Seaton, when he opposed the appointment of a committee on the subject. He did not suppose it was supported by any member of this House. So long as it rested merely on the assertion, perhaps unfounded assertion, of a newspaper, he was opposed to the examination of it. But he had too much respect for the members of this House to resist an inquiry into a charge supported by the authority of any one of them, and therefore withdrew his opposition to the proposed reference.

Mr. INGHAM called for the reading of the document referred to in debate, to show the effect of the omission of the part of it which had not been printed.

Mr. WRIGHT repeated that the charge now presented was one of an aggravated character against the servants of this House, and it was due to them and to the House that it should be inquired into.

Mr. DWIGHT expressed the same sentiment in justification and support of his motion.

Some conversation took place as to the point whether the letter which had been read was the original, taken from the files of the House, and it turned out to be so.

Mr. WRIGHT again protested against instituting a partial investigation into the merits of this matter, on a question whether it ought to be inquired into. It would be time enough to investigate it, he said, when the whole matter was before the House.

The question was then taken on Mr. DWIGHT's motion, and decided in the affirmative, nem. con.

And Messrs. DWIGHT, CONDUCT, EDWARDS of Connecticut, KENT, DARLINGTON, SAUNDERS, and BRECKENRIDGE, were appointed the committee.

HONORS TO A DECEASED PATRIOT.

Mr. HAMILTON, of South Carolina, rose and said, the melancholy intelligence which was announced in the gazettes of yesterday, of the death of my distinguished predecessor, the private advice which I have received from South Carolina have but too fully confirmed. When, sir, (said he) it is recollected that Mr. LOWNDS was constructively a member of this House at the period of his death, for I believe that his resignation at that time had not then reached his home; but, above all, sir, when we consider the station which he occupied on this floor, with such remarkable honor to himself, and advantage to his country; when we are sensible that he was here as it were but yesterday, occupying that place which I now so feebly and inefficiently fill; that the impression left by his delightful character and commanding intellect, is yet almost animated by the vigor of life, I am sure you will not regard the few observations I shall offer on this mournful occasion, as an unseasonable trespass. I know too well how you cherish the recollection of his virtues, not to be certain of your kindest and most respectful sympathy.

JANUARY, 1823.

Honors to a Deceased Patriot.

H. OF R.

It might, sir, be seemingly presumptuous in me to descant on his public virtues in this assembly, where they were so conspicuously exercised for a period of ten years, in which the richest and most various knowledge was successfully blended with the purity and ardor of an ingenuous spirit, and the intelligence of a lofty intellect. But, of his private virtues, I may be permitted to speak. At home, "where we knew him best and loved him most;" where our opportunities were most abundant for observing the delightful sway which the simplicity and modesty of his character exercised over the higher faculties of his nature, it will be allowed us to indulge in an affection for the individual which is quite equal to the admiration which accompanied him abroad. In the softer charities of human life, in the relations of husband, parent, friend, and master, he was amiably and conspicuously loved and distinguished.

There was a belief in which public opinion is supposed to have indulged, in regard to Mr. LOWNDES, which was radically unsound; that he was deficient in decision of character. The mistake naturally grew out of the extreme facility of his disposition, in relation to all objects that were personally advantageous to himself; out of an habitual acquiescence in the postponement of his own interests and distinction to make room for the aspirations of the more sanguine and confident. But, in any of those delicate junctures which arise in morals and patriotism, where it might be expedient to be wrong, but honest to be right, he had, and would uniformly have evinced the triumphant resolves of an undismayed and inflexible spirit. He had emphatically less self love and more self denial than any man who ever came within the sphere of my experience. These virtues were exemplified in a remarkable degree, in the manner in which he received, and invariably treated, the nomination which was made, in his behalf, by his native State, to the first office in the gift of this people.

Whatever opinion he might have entertained, as to the propriety of this measure, he could not but be sensible of the favorable estimation of those who had a right to know him most intimately; but his generous sensibilities were principally aroused, by the ill omens which might possibly be gathered from flinging another competitor into the perilous and troubled arena. Whilst he was conscious that "the office of President of the United States was one neither to be solicited nor declined," he would have regarded it as the greatest misfortune of his life, if he could have won it, by inflicting upon his country the example of successful intrigue and ambition—if he could have obtained it even by one harsh collision, which could have shaken the foundation of this Union.

In this review of an interesting era of his life, I am doing little more than giving utterance to those sentiments that fell from his own lips.

Alas, sir, when I contemplate the void his death has produced at home, that in a State not absolutely sterile in the production of able men, it will be long, if ever that we can hope for the proud distinction of furnishing such a contingent of genius, worth, and knowledge, so large in its amount, so estimable in its qualities for the service of our common country, I cannot but sink under an invincible dismay. Good men do not die, however, without bequeathing something to posterity. I have some where seen a remark, which appears to me to be as philosophically just, as it is consoling to humanity. However feebly, I will attempt its illustration. Vice in its immediate operation is undoubtedly pernicious. The bad man poisons the atmosphere in which he lives, contaminates, "frets his busy hour on the stage," dies and is forgotten. But the virtuous man, such a being as our deceased friend, not only is a blessing to the age in which he lives, but his virtues visit the remotest posterity in a thousand impressive shapes, giving "ardor to virtue and confidence to truth." From his grave there arises a halo of unfading brightness!

I would now tender to you a resolution which would seem naturally to follow the few observations in which I have indulged; but, I give way to the gentleman from Virginia, whose fortune it was to have and deserve the unbounded confidence, friendship, and esteem of my distinguished predecessor, while it comports best with my own feelings, that any testimonials of respect you may accord to the memory of my deceased friend should not come from the State I have the honor to represent.

Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia, rose to follow, with the resolution which had been intimated by his friend from South Carolina, the feeling announcement which had been just addressed to the House. That gentleman might well feel and speak more strongly than any other member of the House could do, on the subject of this melancholy event, from his more intimate association, both by residence and friendship, with the eminent man whose loss we deplored; and the peculiarity of whose character and fortune it was to be esteemed and beloved in the exact proportion in which he was known. It was, indeed, a character, Mr. A. said, in which the qualities which won esteem, were blended in the happiest unison with those which commanded it. He had no intention of entering into any minute delineation of his character, for many reasons. The most important was, that he felt he was unequal to the office. Nor was it necessary, after the picture which had been presented to us to-day, to which, if he attempted to add any coloring, he should only contribute to deface, perhaps, that which did not require to be improved. Panegyric, on this occasion, was indeed rendered unnecessary by the settled feeling and opinion of this country in relation to Mr. Lowndes. He had been, for a considerable time, conspicuously before the public, a part of that time comprehending a very trying period of our history, and the judgment of the public had been awarded in relation to him. He was already ranked with the eminent names which had passed by, and been consecrated to national respect. He was already ranked as a man superior in worth as he was in mind—as one of the purest, and ablest, and most faithful of the statesmen who might claim from our country the meed of honor—as combining a large share of the highest titles to human deference and estimation, talent, and public service, and virtue. Mr. A. said that the House would be deficient in the discharge of its appropriate office, it would not reflect the sentiments and the wishes of the people whom it represented, if it omitted the testimony of respectful regret which was due to this afflicting occasion. The face of this country was clothed in mourning, and this countenance ought to be reflected in its proper mirror, the proceedings and language of this House. The House would be wanting, in a due respect to itself, if it omitted this last tribute to a man who had filled so large a space in its service, and brought to it so great an accession of reputation. The House had, he knew, no disposition to withhold the tribute. Their feeling, on the subject, was in a true accord with the feeling of the country. Some gentlemen might suppose, however, that the case was not comprehended by the rule of usage of the House, in this respect. If it were not so embraced, Mr. A. had no hesitation for himself, in saying this was a case in which he would make a rule for the occasion. He acknowledged himself the obligations of precedent in no other place than a court of justice; conceiving, in all other places, a higher obedience to be due to the sources of precedent, the justice and reason from which it was presumed to spring. But the case did fall within the principle and intentment of the usage. We had been told, by his friend from South Carolina, that Mr. Lowndes was constructively a member of this House at the period of his lamented demise. But for the near approach and prospect of this event, his seat would never have been vacated; and because he refused to hold an office of which he was unable to discharge the duties, and had given, in his last public act, a new and further proof of his just claims to our esteem, was the testimony of our respect to be withheld from him which would otherwise have been accorded? This could not, Mr. A. knew, be the sentiment of the House. It was among the first duties of patriotism, especially in a free State, to accord a due testimony of public sensibility to eminent public service. It was the most unquestionable dictate of policy, in such a State, to hold out the incitements, at once so cheap and so splendid, to public virtue, which were afforded by the prospect of posthumous honor and reputation. A case could scarcely occur, calling more loudly for action, in reference to this duty and this policy, than that which was now presented. Mr. ARCHER had no doubt that the House duly appreciated its obligation; and that there would be an unanimous accord in rendering the last office of respect which he was about to propose, to a man whom it would long be a subject of our pride to remember, and of our regret to have lost; and that, too, at a period of life at which he might have been expected to render still further services to his country and to establish a still larger, though not more undoubted title to its esteem. He should, therefore, move that this House do

H. OF R.

Honors to a Deceased Patriot.

JANUARY, 1823.

Resolve, That the members of this House will testify their respect for the memory of WM. LOWNDES, late a member of this House, from the State of South Carolina, by wearing crape on the left arm for one month.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, addressing the Speaker, said, I rise to second the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, and to tender to him sincere thanks for having made it. To omit this homage of national respect, could in no wise impair the exalted and well-earned fame of our lamented friend, but it would indicate a want of sensibility to the greatest bereavement in the loss of a citizen, which has befallen the Union since I have held a seat in its councils. The highest and best hopes of this country looked to WILLIAM LOWNDES for their fulfilment. The most honorable office in the civilized world—the Chief Magistracy of this free people would have been illustrated by his virtues and talents. During nine years service in this House, it was my happiness to be associated with him on many of its most important committees. He never failed to shed new light upon all subjects to which he applied his vigorous and discriminating mind. His industry in discharging the arduous and responsible duties constantly assigned him was persevering and efficient.

To manners the most unassuming—to patriotism the most disinterested—to morals the most pure—to attainments of the first rank in literature and science—he added the virtues of decision and prudence, so happily combined, so harmoniously united, that we knew not which most to admire, the firmness with which he pursued his purpose, or the gentleness with which he disarmed opposition.

His arguments were made, not to enjoy the triumph of victory, but to convince the judgment of his hearers; and when the success of his efforts was most signal, his humility was most conspicuous!

You, Mr. Speaker, well remember his zeal in sustaining the cause of our country in the darkest days of the late war. You cannot have forgotten—who that heard him can ever forget the impression of his eloquence in announcing the resolution of thanks to the gallant Perry, for the victory of Lake Erie? Alas! alas! the statesman has joined the hero—never, never again shall his voice be heard in this Hall. We shall hear him no more, until the voice of the Archangel shall summon the grave to surrender its dead.

When Mr. TAYLOR sat down—

JANUARY, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. ARCHER rose again, and said that there was one topic of especial recommendation to the regard of this House possessed by Mr. LOWNDES, which, through inadvertence, he had omitted, and which he would now, in reference to his own feelings, and not for any purpose of aid to the resolution, ask permission to supply. It was that, although the highest allurements had been held out to him to do so, as Mr. A. had good reason to believe, he could never be induced to change for any sphere of public service generally regarded as more honorary the service of this House. There was nothing, Mr. A. said, which could have separated him from us but the grave.

The question was then taken on agreeing to Mr. ARCHER's motion; and it was determined in the affirmative, nem. con.

On motion of Mr. REID, of Georgia, the House then immediately adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, January 22.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Thomas L. Ogden, on behalf of himself and others, and accompanied by a bill for their relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The Committee of Claims were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the subject has been referred, reported a bill to provide for the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COLDEN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made a report on the petition of James H. Clarke, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the Whole.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Secretary of State of the 3d of December last, of the number of officers and messengers retained in his Department. Whereupon, it was ordered that the said report be committed to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of Claims on the memorial of sundry merchants and others of Baltimore, for further compensation for damages sustained by the sinking of their vessels at the entrance of the harbor of that city. Whereupon, the report and memorial were referred to the Secretary of the Navy, with instructions to report thereon to this House at the next session of Congress.

On motion of Mr. BARSTOW, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing a bounty to captors on all pirates taken and brought into the United States on conviction; and likewise on the vessel and armament in which they may be captured, on condemnation in the United States.

On motion of Mr. MALLARY, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering the times of holding the district court in the district of Vermont.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the Committee on the Library were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Librarian to form a digested Index to the State Papers, and such other books in the public Library as may require it.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the House of Representatives:

To carry fully into effect the intentions of Congress in making an appropriation of five thousand dollars, by the act of the 14th of April, 1820, for the survey of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, from the rapids of the Ohio at Louisville to the Balize, for the purpose of facilitating and ascertaining the most practicable mode of improving the navigation of those rivers, orders were given, through the proper department, to the Board of Engineers, to examine and survey the said rivers with reference to those objects, and to report their opinion thereon; which they have done, and which report I now communicate for the information of Congress.

JAMES MONROE.

JANUARY 22, 1823.

The Message was ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a list of the names of persons to whom patents have been issued for the invention of any new or useful art or machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any improvement thereon during the year 1822; which letter and list were laid on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report in relation to the military road from Plattsburg to Sackett's Harbor, as required by the resolution of the 14th instant; which letter and report were laid on the table.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a printed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the United States for the year 1821, with an appendix containing statements of the debt of the United States, and of its redemption, to the close of the year 1821.—The letter and statement were laid on the table.

The House took up, on the motion of Mr. WALKER, of North Carolina, the report in the case of Benjamin Curry; and the resolution, unfavorable to the petitioner, appended to the report, was concurred in by the House. The petitioner, on Mr. W.'s motion, then had leave to withdraw his papers and documents.

On motion of Mr. WOODCOCK, to take up the bill "to provide for disciplining the militia of the United States"—(Mr. W. stating that his object was simply to commit it to the Committee on Military Affairs,) the House refused to take it up, by a vote of 61 to 58.

Mr. COOK's resolution, yesterday laid on the table, requesting the President of the United States to communicate all the correspondence be-

H. OF R.

Mint—Captured Vessels.

